They are, however, of the opinion that a work embracing all the material results of the census, as shown by the volume already published, of smaller form, and suitable for popular distribution, would prove highly acceptable and useful to that class of readers who cannot necessarily be supplied with the larger volume. A compendium, from which would be excluded the most unnecessary of the minute details, and presenting only such comparative and aggregate tables as would exhibit the important results, and be valuable and interesting to the general reader, may be published in royal octavo form, not exceeding at the utmost four hundred pages, at a comparatively inconsiderable cost. If the work should embrace as many as four hundred pages, the cost, including paper, and binding, will only be thirty-seven and a half cents per copy; but, it is believed by the committee, that the matter they propose to republish will not reach that number of pages; and if so, the cost will be proportionally diminished.

For one third of the sum it has cost the Government to publish twenty thousand copies of the large volume, may be published fifty thousand copies of a compendium, suitable for general distribution, and possessing to that class of the people into whose hands it would fall, all the value of the more comprehensive work. A book like this, suited to the popular want, of convenient size, and capable of safe and easy transmission by the mails, is the best means known to the committee by which can be secured the general diffusion of the important and interesting information contained in the census returns. They therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed, for the use of the House of Representatives, by the public printer of the House, fifty thousand copies of a Compendium of the Seventh Census, to be arranged by the Superintendent of the Census, embracing the population by towns and counties; the ratio tables of population; tables of nativities, births, marriages, and deaths; of the deaf, dumb, blind, insane, and idiotic; of schools and colleges; of aggregates of occupations; of churches; of newspapers and libraries; and of agricultural products, with illustrative notes and comparative tables. Provided, The said Compendium shall be printed in royal octavo form, and not exceed four hundred pages.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to offer an amendment before he proceeds with his remarks?

Mr. STANTON. I will hear the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. I have a resolution which I propose to offer as an amendment. It is, in substance, that the Committee on Printing be authorized and instructed to cause to be published the statistics of industry authorized to be collected in the act for taking the census, but which has not appeared in the volume published by order of Congress.

Mr. STANTON. I presume the gentleman's resolution is not in order as an amendment; and if it were in order, I should be compelled to object to it for this reason: The statistics to which the gentleman alludes, are now, or will be, under consideration by the joint Committee on Printing, from which a full report in due season may be expected. This being a question of some interest, and several members having manifested some anxiety in reference to the republication of the larger volume, and three or four resolutions upon the subject having been referred to us, we thought proper to consult the Senate committee on the subject and learn their views, that the action of the two Houses might be uniform. A joint meeting was held, and both committees concurred in the opinion that it was unnecessary to republish the large book, containing, as it did, a great many details uninteresting to the general reader, and which would be useful only to learned gentlemen who might have occasion to consult it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Before the gentleman from Kentucky takes his seat, I would like to inquire how many copies of the Census Report in the different forms have already been published by order of Congress? I believe 100,000 copies of a short abstract, published in the Congressional Globe, were first published. After that, we published a great many copies of another abstract. I merely want to know, for information, how many copies of that report, in all the different forms, have been published?

Mr. STANTON. We published one hundred thousand copies of some of the tables which had appeared in the Congressional Globe, and which cost the Government, I believe, only one cent a copy. These were printed upon a single sheet of the size of the Congressional Globe, and were only intended for temporary use, and not for preservation.

We published afterwards one hundred thousand copies of the Abstract of the Census—a very imperfect and unsatisfactory work, so far as it purported to give the general results of the census. I do not recollect exactly what it cost; but it does not contain one-twentieth part of the important information contained in the compendium which it is now proposed to publish. The resolution that I have offered contains the titles of all the tables that will be incorporated into the proposed volume; and gentlemen who are familiar with the large volume, will see that this one will embrace all the important results that were obtained by taking the census.

In reference to the statistics of industry and the statistics of mortality, they were excluded by the joint resolution which authorized the publication of the census, although nearly prepared and ready for publication. It is important that they should be published. They were collected at great expense, and ought not to be lost to the public for want of publication. The Joint Committee on Printing have that matter under consideration, and may report hereafter a proposition to publish them. I presume that will be the last of the publications in reference to the census, as the public will then have all the information obtained by the returns of the marshals.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I want to inquire whether the proposition which he now presents from the Committee on Printing involves the introduction into this new book of any of the tables of industry?

Mr. STANTON. I think not; but there is a table in reference to occupations.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is in the large book, and is very erroneous; but that is not what I am speaking of. I should protest against the introduction of any of the tables of industry, because they are so exceedingly erroneous. I ought to say, however, that those tables are not of the compilation of the Superintendent; and therefore that no censure attaches to him. I have no objection to this proposition, if it does not embrace those industrial tables.

Mr. STANTON. The industrial statistics, as I said before, were excluded from publication by the joint resolution authorizing the publication of the large volume. They were said not to be reliable; but I am well convinced they are equally as much so as the statistics of population, or any other ever taken by this Government. Absolute certainty, or precise truth on all subjects, is utterly impossible, when reliance is necessarily placed upon so many persons, of such different capacities as were employed in taking the census. These statistics never have been published in any form, and the proposition now is to publish nothing but what is to be found in the large volume.

Mr. MEACHAM. If the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me, I will move that the House do now adjourn.

[Cries of "Oh, no!" and "Pass the resolution!"]

Mr. STANTON. Before I consent to yield the floor, I would inquire of the Speaker what would be the condition of this report if the House was now to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It will go upon the Speaker's table, and be the first business in order when the House proceeds to the business on the table.

Mr. STANTON. Well, sir, I move to recommend that resolution, so as to bring it up the first thing.

The SPEAKER. Being a privileged question, the gentleman can call it up at any time.

Mr. MEACHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and, on a division, there were—ayes 65, noes 84.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The first part of the report from the Committee on Printing I like very much; the latter part of it I think is rather a lame and impotent conclusion from so good a start.

I am opposed to the proposition submitted by the Committee on Printing. We have increased the amount of the public printing until the expenditures have become enormous. The amount of printing is not the only thing for which we have to incur expense. In order to carry out the recommendation of the committee, I presume that it will be necessary to continue in employment the Superintendent of the Census and the clerks under him. Besides, it will be some time before we can get the report printed in the manner proposed by the committee. We have already distributed 100,000 copies of the Abstract of the Census. Do gentlemen propose to print enough to furnish every constituent of each member with a copy? Is that the purpose?

I have another objection to the printing of any more of these reports. So far as I have been able to look into them, there are few points in reference to which they state facts correctly. If Congress is determined to print everything reported to it in sufficient numbers to furnish every man in the Union with a copy, the sooner we get into a great book-concern the better. If gentlemen will only direct their attention to the matter, they will find that our expenditures for printing are enough to support a State Government. It has grown to be a great evil. Every paper which is brought forward is printed before we get done with it. I am opposed to the whole resolution.

Mr. MEACHAM. I desire to make a few remarks upon the resolution. Before doing so, however, I wish to consult some books, and therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

And the House thereupon (at half-past three o'clock) adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 12, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of War, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 4th instant, communicating the report of the board of commissioners appointed to examine different sites for a military asylum in the West; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, for some cause, which it is not worth while to mention here, the Judiciary Committee has not been able to be fully organized. I therefore suggest the propriety of adding a provisional member, until the absent members shall have arrived.

The PRESIDENT. The motion is to add an additional member to the Judiciary Committee.

The motion was agreed to; and

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. WILLIAMS.

ACCESSORY TRANSIT COMPANY.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President: At the request of the "Accessory Transit Company," I beg leave to present to the Senate the memorial of its President, Charles Morgan, Esq., asking such legislation at the hands of Congress as will enable the company to own and register in its own name the steamships and steamboats running on the line between the cities of New York and San Francisco.

This company, although composed of American citizens, who reside principally in the city of New York, was incorporated by the State of Nicaragua, in consequence of which, under the construction given to an act of Congress by our revenue officers, the company can neither hold the ships in its own name, nor sail them under the flag of the United States. To obviate the difficulty interposed by the law, as well as to have its ships admitted to registry in our ports, the company has been compelled to resort to the inconvenient intervention of trustees. It was either obliged to do this, or forego the privilege of sailing its vessels under the American flag; and to give up this privilege would be equally distasteful to the company and the country—distasteful to the former to sail under a less respected flag, and to the latter to compel so fine and efficient a part of its commercial marine to seek foreign registration, and devote it to foreign ownership.

The act of Congress which subjects the company to the inconveniences which the memorialist complains of, was intended to prevent foreign vessels from using our flag, or being admitted to registry in our ports; but was not designed, though it has the effect, to prevent vessels built in the United States, owned in the United States, and running between ports of the United States, from sailing under their flag and being registered in their ports, because the company which owns them was incorporated by a State, over the territory of which a part of the route between the two oceans lie.

The advantages derived by the public from the enterprise of this company has been immense. Without aid from the Government in any form, it transports passengers and freight of all kinds from the ports on the Atlantic to those on the Pacific, in the shortest time, and at the lowest rates. Since this company commenced its operations, the passage between New York and San Francisco has been reduced to twenty-three days, and the price of fare from six hundred dollars to two hundred and fifty dollars in the cabin, and from two hundred and fifty dollars to ninety dollars in the steerage. Its ships are of the finest class of ocean steamers, formed on the best models for strength and speed; and the fact that they are uniformly in advance of the vessels of all other lines on both sides of the Isthmus, exhibits a superiority worthy of encouragement. I hope, therefore, a bill will be speedily passed in conformity with the prayer of the memorialist.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSES ON THE PACIFIC.

Mr. WELLER. I present the memorial of Francis A. Gibbons and F. X. Kelly, praying compensation for work performed and services rendered in the construction of light-houses upon the Pacific coast. I desire to move the reference of this memorial to the Committee on Claims, and I hope it will receive the prompt attention of that committee, for the reason that there can be no light-house constructed at San Diego, as was ordered by the law of 1850, until the committee shall have reported upon the present memorial. It has been found, in regard to the construction of the light-house, that the only point at which it can be built is some six or seven miles from San Diego. The contractors claim that, under their contract, they never stipulated to put up a light-house at any other point than San Diego. The point which the Coast Survey has reported as the only one where it should be constructed, is distant some six or seven miles from the town of San Diego; and hence has arisen the difficulty. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

PROHIBITION OF SLAVERY IN TERRITORIES.

Mr. CHASE. I ask leave to present the memorial of Edward A. Stansbury and others, of the city of New York, praying for the prohibition of slavery in the Territories, and wherever, elsewhere, the General Government has constitutional power to prohibit it. I recognize among the signatures affixed to this petition the names of not a few among the prominent business men of New York. I observe, also, the name of John Jay, a worthy grandson of the first Chief Justice of the United States; and that of John P. Hale, recently one of our associates in this Chamber.

The character of the memorialists, and, in my judgment, also the objects which they seek, commend this memorial to our favorable consideration. I am aware, however, that the Committee on Territories, to which memorials of this description would, perhaps, be most appropriately referred, is opposed to the prayer of these memorialists. I shall, therefore, move that the petition be received, and, for the present, laid upon the table. I give notice, however, that I shall hereafter submit a motion that this memorial, and others on the same and similar subjects, be taken up and referred to a select committee.

The memorial lies upon the table.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. WADE presented documents in relation to the claim of John Metcalf, praying indemnity for losses sustained in consequence of the impressment of the schooner Tempest into the military service of the United States during the last war with Great Britain; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a memorial of merchants and ship-owners of Belfast, in the State of Maine, praying an appropriation for the erection of a custom-house at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MASON presented the petition of Isaac S. Bowman, praying to be allowed half pay, in consideration of the services of his father, Isaac Bowman, during the war of the Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I present the memorial of J. Lewis, and others, citizens of southern Iowa, in which they respectfully call the attention of Congress to a memorial already presented, adopted at a great mass railroad convention, held at the city of Fort Madison, Iowa, the 9th of September, 1853, asking for a donation of public land to aid in the construction of the Fort Madison, West Point, Kesaauqua, and Bloomfield railroad. The petitioners desire the early and favorable consideration of Congress on the subject. They also request, if along any part of the route of the said railroad there should be no public lands, that Congress will grant a like portion of land prayed for in said memorial as will be equivalent, in some part of the public domain in that State. I move its reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I present, also, the petition of Charles Gordon, in which the memorialist states that he was employed under the resolution of the Senate of February 28, 1823, for about seven years as draughtsman, and continued in the employment of the Committee on Public Lands, under resolutions of the Senate of July 2, 1836, and June 28, 1838, until March 4, 1839, when the Senate passed a resolution rescinding all resolutions authorizing the compilation of manuscript maps for the Senate, but saving to the persons employed in that business their right to compensation for all work actually done. The petitioner also states that the Senate having adjourned, and he having nine maps of the land States then in mathematical construction, and also a balance of money due him of $2,100, certain members of the committee and others advised him to continue the work until the following session of Congress. The petitioner did so; the maps were put in complete order and delivered to the Committee on Public Lands, in conformity with their order, and the committee expressed much satisfaction at the draughting and labor done. The memorialist therefore prays that he be paid the amount due him, agreeably to an account annexed to the memorial, it being at the same rate of compensation paid by the Senate, under the orders aforesaid, no part of which having been paid him. I move that the petition, together with the papers already on file in regard to the same subject, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, also presented the petition of citizens of Waukon, Iowa, praying the establishment of a mail route from Rossville to that place; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BRIGHT presented a memorial of the citizens of Washington and Georgetown, praying an appropriation for the purchase of a site and the erection of a custom-house, for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALKER presented a memorial of the President and Secretary of the La Crosse and Milwaukee Railroad Company, asking a grant of land for the construction of a railroad between those two points; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BADGER presented the petition of Cranstoun Laurie, a clerk in the Post Office Department, praying compensation for extra services; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented a memorial of the commissioners appointed by the State of Wisconsin to locate and select saline lands in that State, praying the relinquishment to the State, for the benefit of the University of Wisconsin, of certain salt springs and lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PEARCE presented the memorial of John B. Kerr, late Chargé d'Affaires, praying compensation for official services under commissions to other Republics in Central America, apart from Nicaragua; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the resolution of the Senate, directing it to inquire into the expediency of making Brunswick, in the State of Georgia, a port of entry, reported a bill for that and for other purposes; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill to provide for the establishment of a marine hospital at St. Mark's, State of Florida, reported the same back, with the recommendation that it pass.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, a letter from the Treasury Department on the subject, was ordered to be printed with the bill.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Samuel Nickum, reported a bill for his relief; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Thomas Pember, reported a bill for his relief; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Harriet Ward, praying that her pension may be extended back to the period of the death of her husband, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred documents in reference to the claim of Thomas B. Parsons to arrears of pension, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill for the relief of the widows and orphans of the officers and seamen of the United States schooner Grampus, who were lost in that vessel in March, 1843, near the coast of the United States; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill for the relief of M. K. Warrington and C. St. J. Chubb, executors of Captain L. Warrington, and others, reported back the same without amendment.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the following petitions, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were ordered to be printed:

The petition of Alexander Waugh, administrator of George Waugh;

The petition of William Bowmer; and

The petition of Catherine Weaver.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Moses Ohnstead, praying a pension in consideration of injuries received in the war of 1812, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FISH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Mrs. Julia M. Lawrence, reported a bill for the relief of the captors of the frigate Philadelphia; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of the American Medical Association, praying the enactment of a law to compel the carrying of a surgeon on board of emigrant vessels carrying a certain number of seamen and passengers, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Select Committee on the subject of the mortality in emigrant vessels; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of William Ballard, praying that certain improvements made by him in the construction of steam-vessels, may be tested in Government vessels, asked to be discharged from its consideration, and that it be ordered to lie upon the table; which was agreed to.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. WELLER gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill providing for a semi-monthly mail between the Atlantic and Pacific ocean, via Nicaragua.

Mr. NORRIS gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to incorporate the proprietors of the Washington Cemetery.

Mr. MALLORY gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to authorize the sale of reserved lands in certain cases.

Mr. DOUGLAS gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to authorize the sale of reserved lands, and for other purposes.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MALLORY, in accordance with previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to repeal an act entitled "An act concerning tonnage duties on Spanish vessels;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That the petition of John R. Presher be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. NORRIS, it was Ordered, That the petitions of citizens of Washington, District of Columbia, praying the removal of the county jail, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

On motion by Mr. MASON, it was Ordered, That the petition of Francisco Lope Urriza be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMERICAN CITIZENS IN CHILI.

Mr. BELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interest, copies of the correspondence between the Legation of the United States and the Government at Chili, in relation to the imprisonment, or forcible abduction of four seamen from the United States whale ship Addison, in the port of Valparaiso in October, 1853; and also in the case of William A. Stuart, an American citizen, who was imprisoned at Valparaiso upon a charge of murder, and, on conviction, was released by the Chilean authorities.

CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. GWIN. I am instructed by the Special Committee on the subject of the Pacific railroad, to report the following resolution, and ask for its consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the Select Committee, appointed on the fourth instant, upon the subject of a railroad between the Mississippi river and the Pacific ocean, be authorized to employ a clerk, who shall receive the same rate of compensation as that allowed to other clerks of committees of the Senate.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform be authorized to employ a clerk.

ADMISSION ON SENATE FLOOR.

Mr. BADGER. In pursuance of a notice which I gave some days ago, I submit a resolution for amending the 48th rule of the Senate, which I ask may be printed. I give notice that I shall also ask the Senate to take it up a day or two hence.

The resolution was read as follows, (the words within brackets being proposed additions to the rule):

Resolved, That the 48th rule of the Senate be amended to read as follows:

48. The following persons, and none others, shall be admitted on the floor of the Senate: Members of the House of Representatives, and their Clerk; the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Attorney General, and the Postmaster General; the private Secretary of the President, Chaplains to Congress, Judges of the United States, foreign Ministers and their secretaries; [Ministers of the United States to foreign Governments, and their secretaries, and persons who have been such Ministers or secretaries;] officers who, by name, have received, or shall hereafter receive the thanks of Congress for their gallantry and good conduct in the service of their country, or who have received medals by a vote of Congress; the Governor, for the time being, of any State or Territory of the Union; the ex-Governors of the several States; [Judges of the courts of record of the ex-officers of the Senate who have held those offices;] the heads of Departments, secretaries, clerks, [Sergeants at Arms,] or members of either branch of Congress, State and Territorial Legislatures; and persons belonging to such Legislatures of foreign Governments as are in amity with the United States.

No person, except members and officers of the Senate, shall be admitted at either of the side doors of the Senate Chamber; and all persons claiming admission on the floor, excepting members and the clerk [and Sergeant-at-Arms] of the House of Representatives, for the time being, the heads of the several Departments, the private Secretary of the President, the Chaplains to Congress, Judges of the United States, [and of the several States], Foreign Ministers and their Secretaries, [Ministers and ex-Ministers of the United States, their secretaries and ex-secretaries], and officers who, by name, shall have received the thanks of Congress, or medals by a vote of Congress, shall (each time, before being admitted upon the floor) enter their names, together with the official position in right of which they claim admission, in a book to be provided and kept at the main entrance to the Senate Chamber; and no person except members of the Senate shall be allowed within the bar of the Senate, or to occupy the seat of any Senator.

The resolution was ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BADGER. Although the regular season has passed, during which the Senate usually adjourns from this day to Monday, there is a reason, which I will assign to the Senate, why I think we should continue, at least for this week, to adjourn over to Monday.

I understand that the Committee on the Judiciary—and I suppose it was for that reason that the additional member has been appointed—has determined to take up this week, consider, and dispose of, the question of privilege in regard to the right to the seat claimed by the gentleman from Vermont.

It is certainly important that that question should be promptly considered and decided as soon as possible. It is due to this body; it is due to the gentleman whose right to the seat is called into question; and, at the same time, it is a question which should be very deliberately and carefully considered. I hope, therefore, there will be no objection to the motion I submit, that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it will be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope so.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed a joint resolution of thanks of Congress, and the presentation of a medal, to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham.

The joint resolution was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred:

The bill for the relief of Lewis P. Willis, late a paymaster in the Army of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Isaac B. Simonton, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill for the relief of William Blake—to the Committee on Pensions.

PRISCILLA C. SIMONDS.

On motion by Mr. WADE, the bill for the relief of Priscilla C. Simonds was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the proper accounting officer of the Treasury to pay to Priscilla C. Simonds $418, being the value of the property of the late Captain Moses H. Simonds, which was taken possession of by the authority of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. WELLER. I should like to have some explanation of the bill before a vote is taken upon it. I know nothing about it.

Mr. WADE. The bill passed the Senate at the last session in a full Senate; and it has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims again. The sum which it proposes to pay is a small one for the loss of the military equipments and accoutrements of Captain Simonds, who died in the service while on his way to Mexico. His mother was a widow when they were taken, and this bill is to provide compensation to her for the loss of the property.

Mr. WELLER. Is she still a widow?

Mr. WADE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELLER. I have no objection to the bill. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was read a third time, and passed.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, all prior orders of business were postponed, and the Senate proceeded to consider the motion submitted by Mr. CASS, on Thursday, the 5th instant, to refer to the Committee on Foreign Relations the message of the President of the United States received on the 3d instant, communicating, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of December 12, 1853, the correspondence which had taken place with the British Government on subjects growing out of the treaty of Washington of July 4, 1850, since the message of the President of December 30, 1852.

Mr. CLAYTON proceeded to answer the speech of Mr. CASS, delivered, and published in the Globe, yesterday.

Having spoken about an hour and a half—

Mr. BADGER interposed, and said: Mr. President, I will ask my friend from Delaware, who seems to be a good deal exhausted, to give way in the discussion of this subject, and I will submit a motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CLAYTON yielded the floor; Mr. BADGER's motion was agreed to, and

The Senate adjourned.

[Mr. CLAYTON's speech will be found in the Appendix.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 12, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

FISHERIES.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the first business in order is the consideration of the resolution which I submitted on yesterday, previous to the adjournment of the House.

The SPEAKER. It will be the first business in order, if called up. Before that is done, the Chair desires to lay before the House a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with its resolution of January 3, 1854, the correspondence with, and the various orders which have been issued during the past year to, the officers of the Navy commanding vessels or squadrons on the Atlantic coast of British North America, for the purpose of protecting the rights to fishing and navigation, secured to citizens of the United States under the treaties with Great Britain.

Mr. HOUSTON. I presume it was the intention to have that information referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; but I do not see the chairman of that committee present. I move that the communication be laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Post Office Department, stating, in compliance with the act of Congress approved July 2, 1836, the fines imposed and the deductions from the pay of contractors during the preceding year for failures to deliver the mail, and for other causes, the names of the delinquents, and the nature of the delinquencies, the routes on which they occurred, the time when the fines were imposed, whether the fines have been remitted, or the order for the deductions rescinded, and for what reasons.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that that communication be laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

CENSUS REPORT.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of the following resolution, submitted last evening from the Committee on Printing, by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON:]

"Resolved, That there be printed, for the use of the House of Representatives, by the public printer of the House, fifty thousand copies of a Compendium of the Seventh Census, to be arranged by the Superintendent of the Census, embracing the population by towns and counties; the ratio tables of population; tables of nativities, births, marriages, and deaths; of the deaf, dumb, blind, insane, and idiotic; of schools and colleges; of aggregates of occupations; of churches; of newspapers and libraries; and of agricultural products, with illustrative notes and comparative tables: Provided, The said Compendium shall be printed in royal octavo form, and not exceed four hundred pages."

Mr. MEACHAM. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an amendment to the resolution which has just been read, that there be printed 100,000, instead of 50,000, copies of the proposed document. The object I have in view is to give this document to all of the people in the land. We have now gathered statistics at an expense to the country of a million and a half of dollars.

We have now made that compendium. What are we to do with it? Are we to put it merely into the Library of Congress, and into our public libraries throughout the land, where there is not one in a hundred, or one in a thousand, of the people who can ever reach it?

My impression is, in respect to this matter, that we ought to put that compendium in such a position that it shall be accessible to every man in the land. I know that the gentleman from Illinois says we cannot give it to every voter. That is all very true. The number of voters who voted at the last Presidential election was three million and one hundred and twenty-six thousand. We could not print that number. The number of those who are entitled to vote in this land is probably over four million. But we can make this book accessible to every man in the land by putting it in public, assigned, and known places.

It has been my habit, sir, since I have been a member of this House, to send one copy of every permanent public document printed by order of the House to the town clerk of every town in my district; so that there is not a voter in that whole district but may have access to each public document printed. Let this plan be continued for twenty, fifty, or a hundred years hence, and we will have got a library of public documents which will be of immense value to the public in giving information. I know it is said, and I suppose you will accord its truth, that there is not in the whole country a regular set of public documents published by order of the Congress of the United States. I suppose that a regular, full, and complete set cannot be found on the whole globe.

Now, the object I have in view, is to put a number of this document within the reach of every man who wishes to consult it. I believe it is our duty to put this work into the hands of every man conducting a public press, so that he may be able to diffuse the information among the people, and thus put it in the hands of every man who wishes to consult it.

The only object I had in view, Mr. Speaker, was to move this amendment; and now I have done that—

The SPEAKER was proceeding to put the amendment, but was interrupted by—

Mr. MEACHAM. I have not done yet. Let me say further, Mr. Speaker, that if we print a hundred thousand copies of this document, as was proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Printing, it will cost only thirty thousand dollars. We have been at an expense, in fitting up the inside of the Library of Congress—where the walls were standing, and where we had not purchased a single book, but merely for setting up and adorning the inside of the library—which would have printed more than two hundred thousand copies of this work. The sum of thirty thousand dollars will send a hundred thousand copies of it through all the land; and I believe that there is no other way in which we can expend our money more profitably.

Mr. EASTMAN. I have but a single word to say, Mr. Speaker, in respect to this matter; but I, for one, am opposed to the amendment as moved by the gentleman from Vermont. And my reason for opposing it is this: I think that the book—the large volume which has been published—is full of errors. So far as my observations have extended, I am sure it is. In proof of this assertion I will mention one fact. The county in which I reside—the county of Grant, in the State of Wisconsin—is composed, or was composed in 1850—

Several MEMBERS. "Louder!" "Louder!"

Mr. EASTMAN. If gentlemen do not hear my remarks, they can read them. I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that the county of Grant in the State of Wisconsin, was composed, in 1850, of sixteen towns. In the book, as published, it is represented to contain only ten towns. The number of the population, in 1850, when the census returns were made, was over sixteen thousand. As returned, it only appears to contain ten thousand, or rather about nine thousand five hundred.

Now my attention was drawn to this naturally by looking at the returns for the county in which I reside. How many more errors there may be in the book I cannot say, for I have not the means to ascertain; but I have ascertained these errors from my memory alone. I dare say that every gentleman in this Hall can, from his own memory, make the same statement in reference to his own section of the country, and can point out similar corrections which should be made.*

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. EASTMAN] resides in nearly the same part of the country that I do—in that part which is known as the "mineral district"—the lead mines of the northwest. I wish to ascertain from him whether, in his examination of that work, he has found anything which goes to show that we have any mineral product there?

Mr. EASTMAN. I answer, Not a single word. Our staple last year amounted to two millions of dollars, the year before it was a little less, and yet not a single line, or a single figure in the whole of that book, shows that there is any such thing in the whole States of Wisconsin and Illinois, as a pound of pig-lead, or any mineral whatever.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. If the gentleman will allow me a single word of explanation, I will say that that part of the census which embraces the statistics of industry has never been printed at all. The last Congress forbade their being printed, and that is the reason why the gentleman from Wisconsin does not find the statistics of the subject to which he refers. It is for the House to say whether those statistics shall be printed at all or not. I suppose that at some future time the Committee on Printing will bring a proposition before the House, the object of which will be to have them determine whether they shall be printed or not.

Mr. WASHBURN. Why not publish them altogether?

Mr. STANTON. The last Congress thought it improper to have them printed, on account of their want of reliability. The Senate Committee, and the House Committee on Printing, have that subject under consideration now, and will, at some future time, make a report of their conclusion upon it. When they are printed, they cannot be published in the form now proposed—the octavo form. They must be published in the quarto form, if at all.

The Committee on Printing did not propose, by this resolution, to touch that matter now. They desire to omit an immense amount of details, and thereby save to the country a large sum of money in the publication of the book. This small book proposed to be published will be useful to all readers. Individuals who desire to consult them can have access thereto at the places in the various counties where they will be deposited, and in the numerous libraries of the country.

Mr. EASTMAN. My main objection to extending the number to be printed beyond that contemplated in the resolution, is that error shall not be disseminated throughout the land. I set out with the remark that the book was full of errors. Well, according to the language of an old adage, "if we cannot have too much of a good thing," we cannot have too little of a bad thing. I say, then, that inasmuch as the book is full of errors, we have already had enough of it. I do not want my own State to appear worse than it is. We are few enough in numbers already, and we do not want information, coming officially from this body, to be disseminated, which does us such gross injustice. I think the number is large enough.

Mr. BISSELL. That there are errors in the census report is quite likely. To expect that such a document will ever be put out in this country totally free from error is absurd. In my own opinion, this is as correct a document of the kind as we have ever had, or need ever expect to get. I think that my colleague, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] generally so nearly right, was partially wrong yesterday, in his remarks upon this subject—partially, but not altogether wrong. He is right in saying that we expend quite too much money upon printing. I think he is wrong when he proposes to commence retrenchment by withholding the publication of the census report. I think it the most important information to be disseminated among the people of anything which we order to be printed. I except nothing. The book contains statistics which he at the foundation of our greatness, of our prosperity, and of our glory; and I want every man who is in the habit of priding himself upon these things, who glories in the prosperity of his country, to be able to give a reason for the faith that is in him. I want this document condensed in such a shape and form as shall level it to the comprehension of all men of ordinary understanding. Then, in that form, I want to send it liberally through the country to every town, hamlet, and neighborhood too. The country has had some reason to complain of our expenditures in the matter of printing; but, trust me, they will not complain of this. Commence your retrenchment in other matters. I agree in opinion with the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MEACHAM,] having expended a million and a half of dollars in collecting the information contained in this report, that it is very mistaken economy which would now lock it up and exclude it from the hands of the people for whom it was designed. I am in favor of the proposition of the committee to print the report, and I hope that the proposition will be adopted.

Mr. STRAUB. I rise merely to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether it is contemplated in the work which is proposed to be printed, to insert some of the most important tables relating to certain branches of our industry which are now entirely omitted? I have not examined the work thoroughly, but it is said that it abounds in errors. I am not prepared to make that charge, because I have not examined the work; but from what I hear, I suppose it is a fact, that there are omissions of vital importance to a large portion of the people of a few of our States at least. I speak, now, of the mineral production of this country. I understand that there is not a line or figure in the work upon that subject. If it is not contemplated to insert in the work statistics relating to this important item of information, in which the people of the whole country have a deep interest, I, for one, cannot support the resolution.

Mr. SKELTON. I rise for the purpose of advocating the amendment just proposed by the honorable gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MEACHAM,] I think this document should be printed, and circulated to the largest extent throughout our country. The demands from my district for public documents of this kind is extensive, and if the amount of one hundred thousand was doubled I should not be able to supply the wants of my constituents in my district. While I am opposed to extravagant expenditures in the Government—while I am opposed to a distribution of books to ourselves, in any shape or form—I am in favor of disseminating among the people the greatest amount of intelligence which is consistent with the public interest.

I think it is a mistaken notion of economy to suppose that the expenditure of thirty or sixty thousand dollars by this Government, for the purpose of disseminating information and intelligence among the people, is an unwise expenditure, or that the money would be badly spent. I believe that such expenditures will return in the prosperity of the people of the country one hundred fold increased; I believe that on the principle of economy—upon the most rigid principle of economy—we are promoting the interest of the country by printing the largest number of this Abstract of the Census, which has been published.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. EASTMAN] objects that this document shows the statistics of his State upon too small a scale. Now, it is for this very reason that the publication of these decennial censuses is the more important. It shows the prosperity of the country. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will circulate as many copies of this report among his constituents as possible, that they may see, when the next decennial census is taken, the rapid increase in wealth and population his State is making, and will make. Look at the progress of the State of Ohio and of the other States in the great West in population, and in every branch of industry, and see with what rapidity that great country has grown up. Why, sir, I can recollect, young as I am, when the great State of Ohio was nothing but a western wilderness.

Now, I look with pride to the growth of these western States. When I recur to the statistics of the country, as published in the former censuses, and see the small population they exhibit, I say, I look with pride at the present condition of the great West, and look forward with pride in anticipation of what it is destined to become.

I would like to have these records placed in the libraries of as many families throughout the United States as possible, that the generations which come after us may look back upon the records of the past, and then look at the present condition of the country with pride and exultation.

A knowledge of those statistics stimulate the action of the human mind. They will have their influence in stimulating the patriotism, the industry, and the enterprise of the American people. And they will have their influence throughout the world. When the history of the statistics of the United States go forth to the world, as they are about doing, showing the rotten monarchies of Europe, which have occupied a stationary condition for centuries past, what a mighty nation has sprung up within the limits almost of one generation, they will not be without their influence.

These things appeal to our patriotism—they appeal to our pride. They stimulate our intelligence; they increase our energies, and, for one, I would like them to go forth to the world in as extensive a form as possible consistent with the public interests. I therefore feel it my duty to advocate upon this floor the printing of the largest number of this document which has yet been suggested. I hope the amendment will be adopted by the House.

Mr. FLORENCE. I have always been in favor of printing the largest number of public documents, and I have never considered it an extravagant expenditure by Congress of the public money. I feel it to be my duty, and acting from the impulses which should govern our conduct here, I believe it to be our duty to give all the information in our power to our constituents, and to give them the means of information as to the action of their public servants here, and as to the action of their public servants in the different departments of the Government; and acting from this belief, I shall go for printing the largest number of copies of this census report recommended to be printed by the Committee on Public Printing.

Six towns, which with those named in the table, compose the county, to wit: Potosi, Beetown, Cassville, Patch Grove, Waterloo, and Lancaster—the latter the shire, or county-town—with an aggregate population of 7,062, are entirely omitted, and are not found in the whole book.

There are in my district some fifty or a hundred public libraries—voluntary associations of men, organized for the benefit of their fellow creatures.

I have upon my table one hundred and fifty or two hundred letters from parties in the city and county of Philadelphia, and especially in my own district, asking that they may be put in possession of copies of the census.

Now, as I understand the resolution reported by the Committee on Printing, it provides for a compendium of the statistics that have already been published, and I take it for granted that if errors have occurred, an opportunity will be afforded for the Superintendent of the Census to correct those errors.

The gentleman from Wisconsin refers to the fact, that the number of inhabitants in a certain county in his State is not correctly stated. I can easily understand why that is the case. The census was taken two or three years ago, and the probability is that since that time there has been a large increase of the number of inhabitants in that county, as there has been all over the Union. There has, perhaps, been an increase of several millions of inhabitants in the whole Union since the last census was taken.

I take it for granted that the statistics are as nearly correct as it is possible to get them. The imperfect manner in which the census is taken sometimes makes me wonder that the results are as correct as they are. I regret to say that in the selection of deputy marshals to take the census—as is unfortunately the case in all the other operations of the Government—sufficient care is not taken to appoint the most intelligent men. Political preference is exercised in making the choice of agents for that purpose, rather than a regard to the ability they possess, and it is therefore not to be wondered at, that errors have occurred in preparing the tables.

Another reason may, perhaps, be found in the change of the Superintendent of the Census. I do not pretend to say that it is so, because I do not know it to be the fact; but I will say, without arraigning anybody who thought proper to make that change, that it did not meet the approbation of my judgment. I considered the gentleman who was first selected as Superintendent of the Census, eminently capable for the performance of the duties of that office; and I took occasion to show, by my vote upon this floor, how well convinced I was of the entire fidelity with which he conducted that important Department of the Government.

There are public libraries in my district to which I feel it to be my duty always to send the public documents which are given to me in trust for distribution. I make it a point to supply public institutions first, and individuals afterwards; and I have answered almost every individual who has written to me, asking for copies of the census, that I cannot comply with the request unless Congress adds to the number of copies placed in the hands of members for distribution.

Speaking for my constituents—a part, and permit me to say, a very important part of the people of this nation—I have felt it my duty, in this humble manner, briefly to state the reasons why I shall vote for the largest number of these documents, and to ask the House to vote the additional number, in order that this information may be properly distributed among the people, to whom it belongs; and if there are errors in it, they can be corrected by the statistical papers made up in the different States and counties in the Union. Certainly it will afford a basis for a proper calculation of the population, and the great manufacturing and agricultural interests of this country; and when another census comes to be taken, a knowledge of the error committed in the making up of the present table, will enable our officers to avoid the rock upon which they may seem to have split at this time.

While I am up, I will, with the indulgence of the House, make a personal explanation. I was detained from taking my seat in the Hall yesterday by an annoying and irritating indisposition. Had I been present I should have voted with the majority on the resolution tendering the thanks of Congress and a medal to Captain Ingraham for his gallant act of daring and humanity in the Bay of Smyrna.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to lay the resolution and amendment upon the table.

The question was taken, and the motion was disagreed to—only 24 voting in the affirmative.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose that the proposition under consideration is understood by the House, and as it is important for us to get on to other business, I call for the previous question.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a question of order. I would like to know whether it is in order for a gentleman to remain standing on the floor with a view of keeping it from other members?

Several MEMBERS. It is decidedly out of order to do so.

The SPEAKER. In assigning the floor, it is impossible for the Chair to tell who have been standing or who have risen from their seats to claim his attention. It is presumed that members always rise from their seats to address the Chair. The Chair decides that the gentleman from Alabama is in order.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Will the Chair be pleased to state the exact condition of the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The question upon which the House will first vote is the amendment which was submitted to the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON] by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MEACHAM], to provide for the printing of one hundred thousand, instead of fifty thousand copies of the compendium of the census.

Mr. HAMILTON. I demand the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to—yeas 114, nays 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Belcher, Benson, Bissell, Bridges, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chase, Churchwell, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Eddy, Edmunds, Elliott, English, Everhart, Farley, Florence, Franklin, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Andrew J. Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Peck, Phelps, Preston, Reese, Richardson, Robbins, Ruffin, Snodgrass, Walsh, Wheeler, and Zollicoffer—64.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILLYER. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution, as amended.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to call upon committees for reports, beginning with the Committee on Foreign Relations, at which the call stopped on the last day.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the petition and papers of William Brown, and moved their reference to the Committee on Claims; which motion was agreed to.

Also, reported from the same committee, "A bill for the relief of Henry N. Halstead;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and made the order of the day for to-morrow; and the bill and report ordered to be printed.

Also, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition and papers of Samuel

C. Dickinson; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the same committee, reported the following bills; which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, referred to Committees of the Whole House, and made the order of the day for to-morrow, and, with the reports accompanying, ordered to be printed:

A bill for the relief of Benjamin Hammond, of the State of New York;

A bill for the relief of Henry J. Snow, of Rome, in the State of New York; and

A bill for the relief of Charles Staples.

On motion by Mr. STUART, of Ohio, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the following petitions; and they were ordered to lie on the table:

The petition of Margaret C. Hanson;
The petition of Joshua Lewis;
The petition of John Gallagher;
The petition of Fielding G. Brown;
The petition of the daughter of General Solomon Van Rensselaer, deceased;
The petition of Josiah Martin;
The petition of Elijah Armstrong;
The petition of the legal representatives of Samuel J. Smith, deceased; and The petition of R. R. Platt.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petitions of Lemuel Hudson, of Harriet Leavenworth, of George S. Clafin, and of James F. Green, made reports thereon, accompanied by bills of the following titles:

House bill (No. 124) "for the relief of Lemuel Hudson;"

House bill (No. 125) "for the relief of Harriet Leavenworth, widow of the late brevet Brigadier General Leavenworth;"

House bill (No. 126) "for the relief of George S. Clafin;" and House bill (No. 127) "for the relief of James F. Green."

Which bills were severally read a first and second time by their titles, committed to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and the bills and reports ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMANDS, from the same committee, to which were referred the petitions of Thomas Frazer, of Cornelius H. Latham, and Samuel W. Brady, made reports thereon, accompanied by the following bills:

House bill (No. 128) "for the relief of Thomas Frazer;"

House bill (No. 129) "for the relief of Cornelius H. Latham;" and House bill (No. 130) "for the relief of Samuel W. Brady."

Which bills were severally read a first and second time by their titles, committed to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and the bills and reports ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. EDMANDS, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Levi M. Roberts, and that the same be laid upon the table.

On motion by Mr. EDMANDS, it was also

Ordered, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of Cotton Murry, of the widow of William Flora, of Jacob Sailor, of James Shorey, of Levi W. Roberts, of Holly Guile, of Cephas Chase, and of Reuben Caboon, and that the same be laid upon the table.

On motion by Mr. VAIL, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of Henry Miller, of the heirs of Henry Dyer, of Abraham Pettengill, of Daniel Hager, jr., of Parkison Mitchell, and of Robert Stevenson, and that the same be laid upon the table.

On motion by Mr. TWEED, it was

Ordered, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of William H. Winder, offering for sale a building owned by him and now in the occupancy of the Government in this city, and the proceedings of the citizens of Indiana relative to an appropriation for the building of a United States courthouse and land office at Indianapolis, Indiana; and that the same be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by Mr. MACHEN, its Chief Clerk, informing the House that the Senate had passed a bill (No. 54) entitled "An act for the relief of Priscilla G. Simonds," and requesting the concurrence of the House therein.]

DISBURSEMENT OF THE SENATE'S CONTINGENT FUND.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report back to the House the Senate bill in relation to the pay of members of the Senate, with amendments. I will say to the House, that this is the bill which was under discussion some week or ten days since. We have made several amendments to it, and I think that we have obviated all the difficulties which have been presented to it heretofore; but as these amendments may not be very thoroughly understood by the House, I propose that the consideration of the bill may be postponed until some other day, and that the amendments may be printed. I therefore move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Tuesday next, and that the bill and amendments be printed.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise simply for the purpose of saying that I think it is but fair to the Senate, that we should act upon this matter promptly.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is what I want to do.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I was about to inquire whether the subject would come up as a matter of necessity next Tuesday, if we postpone its consideration until that day? While I desire that we should act understandingly upon this subject, I think it is but fair that in such a matter we should act promptly.

The SPEAKER. If the House agree to postpone until Tuesday, it will come up on that day in order, when the Committee on Ways and Means are called for reports.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose the House would prefer postponing it until some day next week. As far as I am concerned, I am anxious that the bill should be acted on as soon as possible; and if the House prefer it, I will move to postpone until to-morrow instead of Tuesday.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I hope the House will not postpone the consideration of this bill. I know the fact that Senators, or a large number of them, have already suffered very great inconvenience in consequence of the delay in passing that bill. And I know more than that—

Mr. HOUSTON. In order to obviate discussion upon that point, I will withdraw the motion to postpone, and allow the bill to remain before the House. I merely made the motion to postpone and print, because I thought the House would prefer to have the amendments in their possession before acting upon them. If, however, that is not necessary, I greatly prefer that the House should act at once. If the gentleman from Virginia will allow me, I will make a brief explanation of the amendments proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means. It will not take more than a minute.

In the first place, we propose to strike from the bill all that relates to the contingent fund of the Senate, and confine its provisions to the compensation of the members of the Senate.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, if he will allow me, whether this bill, as reported by that committee, will prove satisfactory to the Senators themselves?

Mr. HOUSTON. I believe it will. But, to proceed: We have made the bill apply to the compensation of the Senators alone. We have stricken from it the clause giving an extra compensation to the Secretary of the Senate. We have made him a disbursing officer, subject, however, to the supervision of the proper auditing officer in the Treasury Department.

We have stricken from the bill the entire third section, which proposes that the expenses to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, shall be audited by a committee of the Senate. We prefer to let them go to the regular accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. BAYLY. If the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has correctly described these amendments, I am, for one, prepared to act pretty promptly in reference to them, without taking the time to print. The Senate have passed a law providing for the administration, by themselves, of their own contingent fund, and providing a mode for paying their own officers. Now, I do not care what they have put in the bill in reference to this subject. I do not care what are its provisions. I maintain that, in consideration of the relations which exist between the two Houses of Congress, this body ought not to assume a guardianship over the Senate as to the mode of auditing their own contingent fund, or as to the mode of paying, or amount to be paid, its officers. Our rules are so jealous of any interference by one of the Houses of Congress with the other, that it is not even in order here to refer in debate to what occurs there.

So far as the management of our own affairs goes—the election of our officers, the expenditure of our contingent funds, and our own payment—these bodies ought to have nothing whatever to do with each other. Ill feeling has already been created by an attempt to put a guardianship over the Senate in this matter. Gentlemen are not content with making the Secretary of the Senate a disbursing officer, and letting the Senators be paid their legal allowances through him, but the auditing of their contingent fund is to be taken from the Senate and carried to the Treasury Department.

Mr. HOUSTON, (interrupting.) I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not press his view in favor of sustaining this third section, because I think that by doing so he endangers the passage of the whole bill. I want the bill to pass as the Committee on Ways and Means propose, and I think the Senate will be satisfied with it in that shape.

I think the gentleman is slightly mistaken in the remark which he last made. We do not propose to take the auditing of their accounts from the Senate at all. The vouchers and accounts for all the expenditures they make out of their contingent fund are audited now in the Treasury Department, just precisely as the accounts of the expenditures of this House are audited there. The bill as it comes from the Senate proposes to introduce a new rule and a new principle into our legislation, and we propose to let the matter be regulated by existing laws.

Mr. BAYLY. I may have misunderstood the action of the Senate, and I should therefore like to have the bill read, so that we may understand it properly.

Mr. HOUSTON. The third section of the bill is the one that brings up this point. That section proposes that the Committee on Accounts shall audit all the vouchers and expenditures growing out of the contingent fund, and that the auditing of that committee shall be conclusive upon all the auditing departments of the Treasury. The Committee on Ways and Means propose to strike out that section, and to let the Senate's accounts—not for the per diem and mileage of Senators, or anything that relates to them personally, but for the expenditure of their contingent fund—go to the Department, and be audited as ours are.

Mr. WHEELER. Let us have the bill read. It will enable us to understand the matter far better than all these explanations.

The Clerk then read the bill, as proposed to be amended by the committee.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I am in favor of the Senate bill precisely as it came to us, for two reasons: in the first place, because I think that the bill is right, and see no occasion for any amendment; and in the second place, because I am opposed to amending it by this House in the particulars proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means, for the simple reason that I think the Senate ought to be intrusted with the management of their own contingent fund, and with the selection of a depository to hold that fund—not only of their contingent fund, but also the payment of their per diem, without having to go through all of the forms in auditing accounts at the Treasury. Those amendments, it occurs to me, are offensive to the Senate. If I were a member of that body, I am perfectly free to say, I should feel that they were offensive to that body as a body.

This House impliedly undertakes to say to the Senate, that in passing the bill it does propose proper guards in respect to its contingent fund and the payment of the per diem and mileage of its members; that it has left open opportunities to fraud and corruption upon the part of one of its committees and its officers. The Senate have thought that they threw guards enough around a matter which concerns themselves, and this House comes in and says "Oh no! your accounts must go to one of the auditors; for it is not sufficient that a committee of the Senate, composed of representatives of sovereign States, and under all the responsibilities of the senatorial character, should have charge of the matter; it is not sufficient that the accounts of your contingent fund should be audited by that accounting officer; but you must undergo the supervision of an appointee of the Executive." I do not care so much about the provisions of the bill, as I do about this attempt to institute a sort of guardianship over the Senate in the management of their own contingent fund and other affairs.

The gentleman said, if I understood him correctly—and I do not always understand him correctly, it seems—that that was the law now. Well, if it be the law—and I do not think it is—if it be the law now, the Senate in this matter wish for a more covenant and appropriate mode—

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I interrupt the gentleman from Virginia, because he really does not understand me. I presume, however, it is my fault that he does not. I said this: that as the law now stood, all of the expenditures of the Senate out of their contingent fund had to undergo the scrutiny of the auditing Department of the Treasury. That is what I said was the law; and the third section of this bill proposes a change in it. It proposes to take away from the Treasury Department all control over the expenditures of the Senate in its contingent fund, and to leave the auditing of them to the committee of that body, entirely irresponsible to the ordinary channels through the Treasury Department.

Now, sir, this bill proposes to make an inroad upon the existing law and usage, and to cut itself loose, as far as the contingent fund of the Senate is concerned, from all responsibility; and thereby to have one mode of passing on the accounts of the Senate, and another mode for the House, such as the great mass of the people, in getting their accounts audited, would have to submit to. Now, sir, I think the proper way is that we should have one mode for the two Houses of Congress, and one and the same mode for everybody else.

Mr. BAYLY. The gentleman from Alabama complains that I do not understand his remarks. I certainly have endeavored to understand him; and if I did not succeed in doing so he must excuse me, seeing that it is not from any want of an effort to that effect on my part. One thing is very certain: the gentleman in his statements is very obscure, or I am very obtuse. I tried to understand him, sir; and I do not know how it was that I did not.

But he says that this is a bill to change the existing law—and it is to change it—in what respect? It is to change it so as to allow a committee of the Senate to audit their contingent fund. It withdraws from the Treasury any review of the manner in which the Senate shall dispose of its own contingent fund, and of the character of the vouchers upon which that fund is to be audited. I do not think that this House ought to refuse to allow the Senate to have such mode of auditing their accounts as may seem convenient to them. There can be no reason given why they should not have that privilege awarded them, except under the supposition that you will find more honesty in an accounting officer of the Treasury, not responsible to the Senate, than you will find in the Senators themselves—the representatives of sovereign States, coming here not indorsed simply by Executive nomination, but indorsed by the confidence of the Legislatures of sovereign States.

But there is a principle in this bill. As I said just now, in that courtesy which ought to prevail between the two departments of this Legislature, one of them ought not to undertake to control and to dictate to the other how to manage their own affairs. I go further than that. I say that in view of that independence—not to say in view of that necessity of acts of courtesy—which ought to exist between the Senate and the House of Representatives, as well as between both of these two legislative bodies and the Executive branch of the Government—and which is necessary to keep and preserve a proper feeling between these three great departments of the Government—I think we ought not to be interfering with each other in this way—

Mr. PECKHAM, (interposing.) Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] allow me to propound a question to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON?]

Mr. BAYLY. Certainly.

Mr. PECKHAM. I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama whether, as he understands this law, the accounting officer of the Treasury is to look to the legality and propriety of the expenditure of the Senate from their contingent fund? or is he to look to the mere fact of the expenditure?

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that the account is to undergo the same scrutiny which all other accounts that come to the Department are obliged to undergo. And if it is not passed by the Department, it is to be rejected in the same manner as that of an individual account under the existing law.

Mr. PECKHAM. Then the Auditor there overrules the Senate?

Mr. HOUSTON. It overlooks the accounts of the Senate, just as it does those of the Senate's constituents.

Mr. PECKHAM. They revise, then, the legislation of the Senate?

Mr. BAYLY, (resuming.) If I do not now misunderstand the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON]—and I think I do not—his idea is, that the accounting officers of the Treasury are not only to look to the fact of the allowance, but, also, to the legality of it. You here purpose, by law, to put the accounting officer of the Treasury over one of the two branches of Congress, and to do it without their consent.

I should not probably have given so much attention to this bill had I not been here so long that I know, I believe, every member of the Senate, and had not more than one half of them spoken to me about this very bill. I know they are sensitive about it, and they are properly sensitive. This is an attack upon that body wholly unauthorized by any action of theirs. I hope the amendments of the Committee on Ways and Means will be voted down, and that the bill will be passed as it is.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope that, as a member of this House, I would be incapable of doing a thing which would be discourteous to members of the Senate. But, sir, when that body asks me to do a thing which I think is contrary to the principles which should govern us, I cannot, for fear of being subjected to the charge of want of courtesy to that body, do that thing for them.

What is the rule prescribed by the laws of Congress in the adjustment of the various accounts of different persons with this Government? You provide by law that you shall have a First and Second Comptroller. You provide that you shall have Auditors in the Treasury Department. The Constitution provides that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury, except in pursuance of appropriations made by law. When these appropriations have been made, and the disbursing officers have discharged their duty by paying out these appropriations, they are required by law to come to the Treasury Department and there present their vouchers; and the accounting officers are required to examine them, and see whether they are in accordance with the laws making the appropriations. Is there, I ask, anything wrong in this? If there is, repeal the laws, and make the proper corrections.

The President of the United States is subjected to the surveillance of the accounting officer for his salary. The members of both Houses of Congress, and all the officers of the civil, military, and naval Departments of the Government are subjected to it. Why, I ask you, shall the contingent fund of the Senate be excepted from the same rule? Our legislation should be kept pure, and the rules which direct us in the management of the business of the Government should be strictly adhered to. I do not think that either branch of Congress ought to prescribe rules more lax for themselves, in the adjustment of their accounts, than those they prescribe for other persons in the employ of the Government. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] says it looks as if we were fearful that the Senate will not do right, and that we wish to put guards over them. What is the amount of this fund? The civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, which the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has reported to this House, appropriates $278,000 for the contingent fund for the Senate. If this third section passes, that whole amount will be taken from under the control of the accounting officers of the Government, and a new board of auditors and comptrollers will be constituted to pass upon the disbursements of the Secretary.

Another question arises, which has already been made here—and I think I have heard my friend from Virginia advocate it also—that the Senate of the United States shall fix their own amount of contingent fund, and that this House should never inquire into the amount. If they send an estimate for contingencies here, and I vote for them, am I not responsible for that vote as much as for any other appropriation for which I shall vote? If this House, as a matter of courtesy, is to vote whatever amount of contingency may be said by the Secretary of the Senate to be due, and then relieve that Secretary from the ordeal of the accounting officers of the Treasury, I ask you to what will it not lead in the course of time? May you not in that way put it in the power of one branch of this Government to expend thousands, yea, millions of dollars, without its having been constitutionally appropriated?

Mr. BAYLY. Does the gentleman from Tennessee mean to maintain that I ever supposed one dollar was to be expended by the Senate, from its contingent fund, which was not appropriated by law? I have certainly never supposed any such thing. The appropriation bills must specify the sum beyond which no appropriation can be made by the simple resolution of the Senate. All I did say was that, ordinarily, we ought to allow them such a sum for their contingent fund as they may choose to specify as being necessary.

If they were to come here asking for millions of dollars to be appropriated for their contingent fund, then would be the proper time for Congress to interfere; then would be the proper time for the suspicion of members of this House to be excited upon the subject. But, sir, that time will never come until there has been such a thorough and deep corruption of the Senate, as will not long precede the dissolution of the Government itself.

Mr. JONES. It is not my purpose to go into an investigation of the question as to how the Senate have spent their contingent fund heretofore. If the gentleman from Virginia will look into that matter, perhaps he will see how it has been done. I am not upon that subject now. But, sir, I am against making innovations upon the laws of the country for the benefit of the legislators, who are the law-givers of the country.

We sometimes find the example of the Senate quoted as a reason for passing measures in this House. For instance, we sometimes find that when it is proposed to effect an increase in the compensation of the employees about this Hall, the example of the Senate is quoted as a reason. And when members propose to vote newspapers for themselves, we do not find them coming forward and telling us how many they will be able to read, or how many will be necessary to enable them to discharge faithfully and efficiently their public duties here; but we do find them coming forward and asking for as many as the Senators have voted for themselves, without reference to any other consideration. And, again, we find them recommending the increase of the salaries of certain officers to the same amount paid to similar ones in the Senate.

Now, sir, if we pass this third section, how long will it be before we shall have a bill introduced here proposing that the contingent fund of the House shall be audited in the same manner? That will be the effect; and if the rule is a correct one in its application to one body, it certainly is in regard to the other. But, sir, I shall oppose the passage of a bill applying any such rule to this House, whether it be introduced here before or after its application to the Senate.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES. I will.

Mr. STANTON. I desire to know whether, after the contingent funds for the Senate and House have been appropriated, a resolution passed by either, directing a payment to be made out of its contingent fund, would not be valid?

Mr. JONES. Certainly; I suppose so, if it were properly audited.

Mr. STANTON. Then the Senate can now dispose of its contingent fund by simple resolution.

Mr. JONES. I suppose so; though I do not know whether the Auditors of the Treasury would regard such a resolution as a good voucher. But I will say to my colleague, that were I one of the accounting officers of the Treasury, and an account were presented to me which I believed to be contrary to law, I would not allow it merely on account of its being authorized by a resolution of this House, or of the Senate.

Mr. STANTON. My colleague does not understand the question I ask. I wish simply to know whether a resolution of this House, or of the Senate, disbursing its own contingent fund, is or is not a good voucher?

Mr. JONES. I do not know whether such resolutions are regarded as good vouchers or not.

Mr. STANTON. But you think they ought not to be.

Mr. JONES. I do, unless there is some law to authorize them. That is my opinion.

Mr. STANTON. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. JONES. That is my opinion, certainly. I have no concealment about it.

Mr. STANTON. I wish to know if it has not been the uniform practice of the Government to allow the resolutions, authorizing such payments to be made, to be vouchers?

Mr. JONES. I do not know that, for I have not been up to the Department to examine the vouchers.

Mr. BAYLY. Certainly it has.

Mr. JONES. I will tell you what I do know, and what I think was very wrong on the part of the Congress of the United States. A few sessions ago, a provision was pressed through Congress in the last hours of its session, as an amendment to one of the appropriation bills, that the certificates of the presiding officers of this body and of the Senate respectively, as to the amount due to a member, should be conclusive upon all the accounting officers of the Treasury as to the amount due that member. I urged the rejection of the civil and diplomatic bill rather than to have that provision incorporated into the law of the country. I think that the certificate of the officer who certifies that a certain amount is due to a member of this House, should be subject to the scrutiny of the accounting officers of the Treasury; and if he finds that that amount is not in accordance with the services performed in the Hall, they should not be bound to pass that voucher, merely because the Presiding Officer has put his name to it.

Mr. STANTON. I do not wish to make a speech on this subject, but I think that a few questions answered by my colleague, who has made himself familiar with all such questions as this, will place the matter in a proper light before the House.

If I understand my colleague's position, he maintains that every expenditure made out of the contingent fund should be in pursuance of a law; and that it should not be allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury unless it is in pursuance of a law. Then, sir, it would be necessary to foresee and anticipate every expenditure from the contingent fund of either House of twenty, fifty, or a hundred dollars, that may be necessary for any purpose about these Halls, and to pass a law appropriating that particular item before it could be allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury. Instead of doing the thing, as we now do, by resolution directing the appropriation of particular portions of the contingent fund, we should be obliged to pass a formal bill through both Houses of Congress in every such case.

Mr. JONES. Not at all.

Mr. STANTON. That is how I understand it.

Mr. JONES. Not at all, sir. Included in the contingent fund are various items for printing, paper, and a great many other things—and then there is an item of a few thousand dollars for miscellanies. Well, suppose that there is a resolution that authorizes the furnishing of papers. When the vouchers for that expenditure comes up before the accounting officer, he has only to look to the appropriations in that contingent fund, and see if money has been appropriated for the purpose, and if the money so appropriated has been properly paid; and if so, he passes the vouchers.

There are various small matters about these two Halls, such as the repairing and furnishing of desks and chairs, the furnishing of committee rooms, and so forth, all of which would come under that general miscellaneous item. But when it comes to the appropriation, by either House, of thousands and thousands of dollars which cannot by any legal construction be made a contingency of that House, I hold that it is not in strict accordance with the Constitution of the country; and, for one, I cannot support such an appropriation, by whichever House it may be made. It may be that I am wrong in this; if so, I should be glad to be corrected; but until I am, my course is taken.

The bill, as recommended to be amended by the Committee on Ways and Means, will leave the contingent funds of the Senate and House to be paid and audited just as they are now, and have been for years; it will change the existing law so far only as to make the Secretary of the Senate a disbursing officer to pay the per diem and mileage of the members of that body. When he has paid them, he will have to go and settle his accounts with the Treasury Department; he will have to present his vouchers for that payment, as well as for the disbursement of the contingent fund. The proviso in the appropriation bill of 1850, perhaps, makes the certificate of the Presiding Officer conclusive upon the Treasury Department as to the amount. The Secretary, under this bill, has merely to show the certificate of the Presiding Officer at the end of the session, and his account for per diem and mileage will be settled. If the third section be stricken out, he will have, in settling his accounts for the contingent fund, to present his vouchers, and point to the laws under which his disbursements were made. I do not see myself any very good reason for the passage of the law at all; but if the amendments of the Committee on Ways and Means be agreed to, the original bill will be pruned of most of its objectionable features. Their adoption or rejection is with the House.

Mr. MACE. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether I should have made any remarks on this occasion were it not for the fact, that when the bill under consideration was first reported from the Committee on Ways and Means I objected to it. That objection, perhaps, led to debate, and the bill was ultimately referred back to the Committee on Ways and Means. I hope, sir, that I shall never be lacking in courtesy to the Senate of the United States, or to any other body; but I do not see for the life of me that a question of courtesy is involved in the consideration of this bill. Nor can I conceive, as was stated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] that, because Senators of the United States are elected by the Legislatures of the several States, they occupy such a position in this nation as shields them from all scrutiny into their acts by this House.

I shall not engage in a discussion of the principles upon which the members of the Senate are elected by the Legislatures of the several States, because it would not be germane to a discussion of the bill; but I do not think that the fact of their election by the Legislatures of the States authorizes us of this House to do implicitly their will in all things. Now, sir, from the commencement of this session of Congress to the present hour, though Senators have felt great solicitude about the bill, there has been no difficulty in their getting out of the Treasury both their per diem and mileage—none at all. I understand that they are not willing to resort to that course, and that up to this time their pay has been taken from another quarter.

Sir, what are the features of this first section of the bill, that should induce us implicitly to adopt it? I do not make any attack on Mr. Dickens. He may be, and doubtless is, a very honorable man. "And we are all, all honorable men." But in the formation of a law it is always wise to legislate against dishonesty; that ought to be the course of legislation. Now, what is the provision of the first section of the bill, which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] thinks ought to be passed? It is that Mr. Dickens, as the disbursing officer of the Senate, can go to the Treasury of the United States, under the first section, as soon as the bill becomes a law, and by one draft take from the Treasury over half a million of dollars. The bill then provides that eight days after Mr. Dickens shall give bond in the sum of twenty thousand dollars. Thus the bill of the Senate places at the disposal of the Secretary of the Senate over half a million of dollars; and, eight days after he gets the money, he can file a bond in the sum of twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. Dickens may perhaps account for money properly; and all of our collectors of customs and public officers might, without bond, pay over the appropriations correctly. But the object of legislation is to provide against dishonesty. So much then for the first section of the bill. The second section proposes—

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Will my friend from Indiana permit me to correct him? This bill only proposes to make the Secretary of the Senate a disbursing officer. It leaves him under all the checks and restrictions created by the Sub-Treasury act in regard to public officers. And as to the difference between the sum which he may draw, or which may be in his control, and the bond given by him, why, sir, in large appropriations that is always the case. Why, the Sub-Treasurer at New York could never give a bond equal to the amount of the moneys in his hands. The security is not so much in the bond as it is in all the restrictions, limitations, and safeguards of the Sub-Treasury act. The bill merely makes the Secretary of the Senate a disbursing officer, with all the responsibilities, all the penalties, all the checks provided by the Sub-Treasury law in relation to other disbursing officers.

The main feature of the bill is, that it allows a committee of the Senate to audit their contingent fund, in place of having it audited at the Treasury Department.

I dislike to interrupt gentlemen; but the fact is, that this has been practically—however the strict letter of the law may be—has been practically the law ever since the Sub-Treasury act was passed. For I am told, that when the committee of this House, or of the Senate, in relation to their contingent fund, have passed an account, the accounting officers have always—till of late—refused to go behind that act. I know that such has been the practice in this House. In other words, the accounting officers have taken the action of the Committee on Accounts as conclusive in the case.

Mr. HOUSTON. One word of explanation in regard to the contingent fund. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] is mistaken in relation to it. The contingent fund of the Senate is now drawn from the Treasury, under the law of 1823. The President of the United States, under the authority conferred upon him by that law, makes a special direction that the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate shall give a bond in the sum of $20,000, and that they may draw from the Treasury the funds, which are necessarily to be disbursed by them, in sums not to exceed, at any one time, the amount of their bonds. That refers to the contingent fund of the Senate and of the House. They are not permitted, therefore, to have, at any one time, in their hands more than the sum of $20,000.

Mr. MACE, (resuming.) I understand very well the former operation of the system by which officers draw money out of the Treasury, and also that a sum exceeding $20,000 is not to go into the hands of the disbursing officers of the Senate or of the House at any one time. That is simply a Treasury regulation; but that regulation is overriden by the first section of the Senate bill. I am certainly lawyer enough to know that the moment the bill passes, and is approved by the President of the United States, Mr. Dickens, the Secretary of the Senate, can go to the Treasury Department, draw out half a million of dollars, and in eight days afterwards give a bond for the faithful disbursement of it.

Now, so much for that branch of the case. I apprehend that, so far as the creating of a Committee on Accounts in the Senate and a Board of Comptrollers, is concerned, perhaps all the gentlemen upon this floor may not understand the operation of it, and may have been misled by the question propounded by the gentleman from Tennessee to his colleague. That question was, if the Senate of the United States should pass a resolution appropriating a portion of the contingent fund, whether that would not be binding upon the Comptroller of the Treasury Department? Unquestionably it would. But under this bill, the control of the contingent fund is taken from the Senate, taken from the President, and taken from every Department of this Government, and submitted wholly to the Committee on Accounts in the Senate. Under the provisions of the bill, the accounting officers in the Treasury Department are not permitted to look at the items at all. The committee may charge for a horse, for a buggy, for a suit of rooms, for a parlor, or for clothes, and all that the officer has to do is to set down the figures, and that is conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Treasury Department. Yes, as a member says, $5,000 may be charged for the entertainment of Koszuth; and $100,000 for the entertainment of Koszta, I suppose.

Now, sir, I am free to admit that, in all human probability, the Secretary of the Senate, Mr. Dickens, would disburse this money properly, although not bound to do it under any legal restraint; and in all probability, if the Senators are infallible, if the Committee on Accounts shall prove to be infallible, or is now infallible, the money would be properly disbursed. The objection I make is this: it is loose and improvident legislation. It is setting a precedent in reference to one branch of this Government which, if carried out in all its ramifications, would make this nation bankrupt, and a thousand like it. The experience that we all have had proves that we are emphatically a money-loving people.

I have found in the history of this country that many men occupying the highest stations, and elevated to the very highest pinnacle of fame—Secretaries of the Treasury, if you please—have, for the purpose of laying up an immense fortune, ruined their reputation forever. Such, then, is the history of the times; and why it is that the Senate should not be satisfied with a provision of law that brings them within the rules which govern all other bodies, I am at loss to know. I do know—if I was in the condition of the disbursing officer of the Senate, Mr. Dickens—that I could take out half a million of dollars from the Treasury, place it in bank with Corcoran & Riggs, and realize six per cent. from the time I made the deposit till I withdrew it for the purpose of paying it over, with no loss to the Government, but the realization of a large and handsome fortune to myself out of that operation. I do not say that Mr. Dickens would do such a thing; but I say that he can do it.

Mr. PECKHAM. Not by law.

Mr. MACE. He can if this bill be passed without the amendments.

Mr. PECKHAM. Does not the general Sub-Treasury law apply to such cases?

Mr. MACE. In reference to this matter, I will say, it is a principle of criminal law—under a law defining a class of offenses—if offenses of a different character are embodied in the law subsequent to its passage, that they are not indictable. Let me illustrate this, and make my position clear to every lawyer in the House. We have a law against the forgery of public securities of almost every kind. We passed a bounty land law providing for the issue of land warrants, and many were forged; but there was not a court in the United States where a man could be convicted under the United States laws, because the offense was not specially set forth in the original act. Why should we be discussing these things? What do the Senate want? They want their pay out of the Treasury of the country. They should be willing to receive their pay in the mode now pointed out by law, rather than ask this House to pass a bill of the character which they have sent us, and which leaves the law open to such immense fraud. I have no doubt that every member of the Committee on Accounts in the Senate is a high-minded, honorable man. But, when Tom, Dick, and Harry, and everybody else, are presenting their claims to that committee to be paid out of the contingent fund, we must all know the loose manner in which that committee would necessarily discharge that duty. Why not let these accounts go to the accounting officer?

I hope, therefore, that the action of the Committee on Ways and Means, who have deliberated upon this matter, will be concurred in by the House. So far as I am concerned, I am not guided by what the Senate, collectively or individually, may do. I follow in the wake of no man or Senator, and hold myself only responsible to my constituents.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. It is my purpose to detain the House but a moment upon this subject. I have listened very attentively—as I am in the habit of doing in relation to every question coming before the House—to what has been said upon this subject. I have listened attentively to-day, with the view of ascertaining, if I could, whether there was anything which could properly prevent the House of Representatives from acceding to the request of the Senate as expressed in the provisions of this bill as passed by that body. I find there is much difference of opinion among the gentlemen upon the opposite side of the chamber as to the propriety of the measure. I am informed, however—and my attention was directed to the fact by a very respectable member of the Senate—that for want of action upon the part of this House upon the bill sent here on the 13th of December, now nearly a month since, the Senators have as yet been unable to draw their pay.

Now, sir, I think there was a great deal of good sense in the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,] and I will do him the credit to say that, although I disagree with him upon many political questions, yet generally his views are very correct, very national, and very statesmanlike, in regard to the department of the Government of which we compose a portion.

I have examined to some extent the bill before us, and what is it? In the first place, it provides for making the Secretary of the Senate a disbursing agent. They propose to make him a disbursing agent, requiring him to give bond, and to add $1,000 to his salary in payment for this service. But a committee of this House have examined the provision and recommend us, in effect, to say to the Senate, "You shall not pay your own officer; we will take charge of him; we will strike out the clause providing for his compensation, and require him to give bond, and to discharge the duty for nothing." Is this courteous? Is it right? Would members of the House of Representatives think the Senate were acting properly if they were to come here and undertake to dictate how much we should give the Clerk of the House? I believe we give him $2,000 a year—three times as much as many gentlemen in the Senate receive for their services during a short session of Congress; an inequality which, in my opinion, loudly calls for reformation at the hands of the people of the States. But, sir, the Senate choose to fix the compensation of this officer at $1,000 a year for his services as the disbursing agent of that body. Now, would it be treating that body with the courtesy due it from this House if we were to refuse the passage of such a provision?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I wish to inquire, if the gentleman will allow me, what is the present compensation of the Secretary of the Senate?

Mr. TAYLOR. I cannot say, nor do I think it the province of the House to inquire.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to know if he does not already receive $3,000 per annum?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I can answer the gentleman. That is the compensation allowed him.

Mr. HOUSTON. His compensation is $3,000 a year, and he is allowed a clerk, at a salary of $1,500 per annum, whose duty it is to attend to this very business for which this $1,000 extra is proposed to be given to him.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would like also to know whether he has not all along been performing these same duties without extra compensation?

Mr. JONES. He has.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not prepared to say what are the duties devolving upon the Secretary of the Senate, or what extra compensation he has received for his services. In fact I do not think it very well becomes the members of the House of Representatives to scrutinize that matter. Why should we go abroad to look after trouble? Let us reform the inequalities that exist here in our own body.

Sir, if the Senate think proper to impose an additional duty upon the Secretary of that body—the disbursing, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MACE] says, of half a million of money—it is not right that the members of this House should say that that officer shall discharge that extra duty without receiving additional compensation. It is possible that this duty may require very great labor; certainly it requires great responsibility; and where there is labor and responsibility, there ought to be adequate compensation. The present compensation may be adequate. I do not pretend to judge of that. But I do say, that if the Senate of the United States think proper to give additional compensation to one of their officers for additional duties which they seek to impose upon him, it is not becoming in us to interfere. I speak only for myself. I, for one, do not desire to call in question the action of the Senate of the United States because they choose to fix the compensation of one of their own officers, and require him to give bond in the sum of $20,000 for the faithful discharge of his duty.

Sir, I listened with great respect and attention to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, [Mr. HOUSTON,] to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] who is so industrious and able a member of that committee, and to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE,] who has discussed this matter, to ascertain if it was possible that the Senate of the United States sought to put in the hands of their Secretary half a million of dollars at once, and require him to give bond only to the amount of $20,000. I have also read the bill which lies on the Clerk's table, and for the life of me, I cannot see that any such purpose is designed by the Senate. Nay more, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, in discussing this question, stated that under the law of 1823, I think he said, only $20,000 may be drawn at one time by this officer. The gentleman from Indiana is therefore wrong.

Mr. HOUSTON, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Ohio should bear in mind the distinction between the two funds; and there seems to be a great deal of confusion in the minds of members in that respect.

Two funds are intended to be operated upon by this bill; one is the per diem and mileage of Senators, and the other is the contingent fund of the Senate. I presume that the gentleman from Indiana spoke of both the funds together.

When I spoke of the $20,000, I referred to the law of 1823 authorizing the President of the United States to make a special order as to the amount to be advanced to certain officers who have disbursements to make. The Presidents of the United States have universally done it at the beginning of each administration from that time till the present; and General Pierce last March made that order, under the law of 1823, saying that the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of this House of Representatives should each have advanced to them the amount of $20,000 at one time out of the contingent fund, to pay the hirelings and officers of Congress, and other contingent expenses. But this bill proposes to put the contingent fund and the compensation of Senators upon the same footing, and to have it all under the control of the Secretary of the Senate, with but one bond.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not prepared to draw the conclusions from the reading of the bill, which the gentleman from Indiana and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means have drawn from it.

Sir, I think that a bill of this character, which is likely to lead to a conflict between the two Houses of Congress, or, at all events, between one branch of Congress and some of the Executive Departments, is of sufficient importance to attract the attention of members. For my own part, I thought it of sufficient importance to justify an examination of its details; and, after such an examination, I cannot draw from it the inference that it will place in the hands of the Secretary of the Senate $500,000. If I thought so, I would vote against the whole bill; I would vote to lay it upon the table. I do not think so, however. I think that the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Senate to draw to an amount not exceeding his bond, for the purposes designated in the bill. He is required to give a bond in the sum of $20,000, and to disburse the money which he may draw under the direction of a committee of the Senate; and the certificate of that committee is to be final and conclusive at the Treasury Department.

And why not, sir? Have you more confidence in the Auditor's supervision of the expenditures incurred by the Senate than in that of a committee of that body? I have not. There is evidently some conflict. I desire, as a representative of the people, to do right; but I do not wish to act offensively to the Senate, and to say that they shall not pay their own mileage, per diem, and contingencies in their own way, by their own officer, who is to be paid as they shall think proper.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] induced me—by his representation of the fact, that no appropriation could be drawn from the Treasury except by law—to look at the constitutional provision on the subject. If I were satisfied that we should place, by the passage of this bill, without an appropriation by law, large amounts of money in the hands of the Secretary of the Senate, I should vote at once to lay it upon the table. The constitutional provision, I find, reads in this wise:

"No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public moneys shall be published from time to time."

If I understood the gentleman from Tennessee correctly, there is already in the appropriation bill reported to the House to meet the contingencies of the Senate, some $260,000 or $270,000. If that bill becomes a law, and they choose to draw it by their Secretary in the form prescribed in it, I do not apprehend that it will be a violation of the Constitution. It will be according to law.

Mr. MACE. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that a large majority of the members of the House, if not all, understand the question.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have not yielded the floor to the gentleman for the purpose of his making an argument.

Mr. MACE. I only desire to occupy a few minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is as much time as I contemplate occupying myself. The gentleman has already made a speech.

Mr. MACE. The words are "moneys which have been, or may hereafter be, appropriated for members, and officers, and for contingent expenses." Now, that is the money which has been appropriated for the contingent fund, and the pay of members, and officers of the Senate, shall be paid at the Treasury on requisition drawn by the Secretary of the Senate. What is it he can draw? He can draw the whole of it; and the order to which the gentleman refers, as having been made by the President of the United States under an old law, has nothing to do with overriding the provisions of that bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. I find myself in somewhat of a difficulty. I do not know whether I shall consult the disposition of the Senate, composed of sixty-two members chosen by sovereign States of the Union, to do right, and under the Constitution sworn to do right—whether I shall reconcile the discrepancies of gentlemen on either side of the House, or whether I shall act for myself. I think that the best plan is to read the law, to ascertain what has been done heretofore, and then to draw my own conclusions. I am not yet convinced that the Secretary of the Senate would, under that or any other law, having given a bond of $20,000, be entitled to draw more than $20,000 at a time. I may be wrong; but I do not wish to place it within his power to take $500,000 out of the Treasury, and to dispose of it without any further responsibility than his bond of $20,000 would give.

I do not wish to prolong this debate. I am not in the habit of making long speeches. I have been rather practical than tedious in my course here; but I do desire, when a question of this importance is presented, to have it clearly stated. I cannot see why we should endeavor so to change the bill that the Senate has sent to us, in respect to their own pay and the duty of their own officers, as to make it perfectly inefficient for all the purposes for which it was designed. I do not desire to act offensively. I do not wish both branches of the National Legislature to be brought into conflict. There is evidently some misunderstanding, which has induced the Senate of the United States to pass this bill and to abstain, up to this 12th day of January, from drawing any pay. They desire the passage of this bill that they may have the money due them.

I have looked into the bill, and I see nothing in its provisions, as sent from the Senate, but what I can vote for. I desire to vote for the Senate bill, and against the amendments proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means. I ask the previous question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I wish the gentleman would withdraw the call for the previous question. I will renew it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will withdraw it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would say a single word on the subject before the House. I will occupy but a moment's time. I say, at the outset, that if I were a Senator I should vote against this bill. I think it is a bad bill; and I have heard no reason assigned, either upon this floor or from the little inquiries I have made from Senators—I have heard no reason whatever assigned for passing it. On the contrary, I have no doubt that the Senate and officers can be paid as they are at present paid in this House. After the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MACE] offered his amendment, some weeks ago, to this bill, I took it upon me to inquire of the Speaker, and I learned from him that there was no difficulty whatever in the payment of the members and officers in the way they are now paid, and that there is no necessity for any change. As it now is, the money remains in the Treasury, where it is perfectly safe, and the payments are made from time to time, as we all understand.

If this bill passes, then the Secretary of the Senate may obtain money from the Treasury to any amount he wishes—to the extent of several hundred thousand dollars—and, as it is suggested, he would probably deposit it for safe-keeping in some one of the banks of the city. Well, then, if this bank breaks, of course the money is lost, because, though the Secretary may give a bond, neither the Senate nor the House would be likely to collect it from him, if there were no default on his part. I am not disposed, therefore, to have the public funds placed in that situation, because I think there is no necessity for it, viz: to put them in peril unnecessarily. Nevertheless, I stand in a very difficult position on this matter. The Senate may have good reasons, which they do not think proper to give us, for their desire so to place a portion of the public funds, as a matter of convenience, in a state which may be more agreeable to them than if it were in the Treasury. I say that, for their personal gratification, or convenience, they may desire this thing to be done. Well, sir, if I vote for the bill, I shall vote against my own judgment, very decidedly formed, to gratify the Senate. I rather think that I will vote for the bill, if amended as proposed by our committee; and yet, even then, I am placed in a situation of embarrassment, caused by a conflict between a feeling of courtesy to the Senate, and of doubt as to the propriety of the measure.

Again: I have objections to the salary of the Secretary of the Senate. He has heretofore performed the like duties for his present salary of $3,000 a year, with the aid of a clerk, who, I am told, gets $1,500 a year to attend to this very business of paying Senators, &c.; and it is proposed to give the Secretary $1,000 a year more for doing the same duties that he has already been doing. I dislike that. I do not agree with my friend from Ohio, that we have nothing to do with the pay that the Senate may choose to give their officers. Sir, the officers of the Senate are officers of the United States, and we may very well inquire what compensation they ought to have. I will tell you, in effect, what will probably result from this thing. If we vote the Secretary of the Senate $1,000 additional for no additional duty—for he performed this branch of his duties heretofore, and had a clerk with a salary of $1,500 a year to help him to perform this identical duty of disbursing the funds of the Senate, besides a number of other clerks to aid him in his duties—you will find some gentlemen coming into this House, perhaps before the end of the present session, and saying that the Clerk of the House has just as arduous duties to perform as the Secretary of the Senate, and therefore his salary should be increased to $4,000. I have observed these things carefully; and I am glad that this debate has sprung up at this time, because I hope it will induce those who are new members upon this floor to take occasion to examine into the matter. We shall see, I say, during the course of this session, probably, a number of propositions brought before us for the increase of salaries, and the paying of extra allowances to officers who are already well paid. I have carefully noted how these matters go on. Somebody presents to the House the case of an officer who, he says, ought to have an increase of salary, on the ground that he has great trouble in the discharge of his duties, and is, withal, a very meritorious individual. You, therefore, increase his compensation; and, upon the strength of that action of the House, somebody else brings in another bill for the increase of the salary of another officer of the same grade of office. You push him up also; and then follows, as the next step, a general bill to raise the salaries of all the officers of that class; and they will remain so raised for a few sessions. Then, after awhile, some one will represent to the House that a certain officer, A, for instance, does more work than B, and that he should receive a still further increase of salary; and so it will go on.

Now, in my experience in Congress for many years, there has never been an office abolished by Congress; and never an instance in which a salary has been reduced. When, therefore, we shall come to the matter of the increase of the salaries of officers, it is well to look about us, and see the general consequence. I think there is no reason for an increase of this salary of the Secretary of the Senate. I shall therefore vote for the amendment which strikes out that provision of the original bill. I think I shall vote for the bill under protest, if it be amended as proposed. I shall vote for the bill to gratify the Senators. They think they have a right to the control and disposition of their contingent fund—

Mr. CRAIGE, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman vote to gratify the Senators against his own judgment?

Mr. CLINGMAN. If I vote for it at all, I can put it upon no other ground than a desire, as a matter of courtesy, to oblige Senators. The members of the Senate are, perhaps, a more dignified body than the House; and, perhaps, for that reason, they do not like the idea of going down to the Treasury Department, from time to time, for such little sums as they may happen to need. This is a mere matter of taste; yet I am willing to gratify them, if we can do so without putting the public funds in peril. I wish, however, that this bill had expressly provided—and I regret that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means did not recommend that amendment—that the Secretary should not draw out over $20,000 at a time. I would inquire of the gentleman from Alabama whether, if this bill passes, and the Secretary of the Senate gives bonds for $20,000, he is authorized to draw from the Treasury a larger sum than that?

Mr. HOUSTON. There is no restriction in the bill as to the amount which he shall draw. If this bill passes as it came from the Senate, he will have the control, not only of the pay for the mileage and per diem of the Senators, but of the entire contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If that be so, and I presume the gentleman from Alabama is right, he may draw several hundred thousand dollars, and deposit it in one of the banks of this city. I do not know whether the Secretary of the Senate would take six per cent. for the use of it while there, and I have no reason to think that he will. But it is not improbable that, when he comes to choose between the banks, some of them may make liberal offers, and those banks which are the least secure will be ready to offer the greatest inducement to him to put the money in their hands, and he may, in that manner, realize an immense sum annually, if he chooses. Now, I do not like to expose any officers to temptations of that sort. I believe Mr. Dickens is an honest man; but I regret that there is not a limitation, as I would vote for the bill cheerfully with a limitation of the kind I have pointed out; and I am in doubt whether I ought to vote for it without such a limitation, even if it be amended as the committee propose. Would it be in order to move an amendment providing that the Secretary should not, at any one time, receive a larger amount than the amount to be paid?

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman can accomplish his object if he will vote for the amendment which separates the two funds, and leaves the contingent fund of the Senate just where it is. If he will vote for the amendment to keep the funds separate, and guarded by proper restrictions, there will be no difficulty about the matter; and then this bill will apply alone to the pay and mileage of Senators.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I understand that; but at the same time I am willing that some portion of the contingent fund of the Senate should stand upon the same footing with their per diem and mileage, so that, for instance, their little daily expenses may be paid off also. If a member's chair or desk is broken, I am willing that they should have the means of arranging such matters, without being obliged to go to the Treasury. I should rather have an amendment which limits the amount in the hands of the Secretary, and then reject the last amendment of the Committee on Ways and Means, though we may possibly attain the same object by agreeing to the amendment. I make this suggestion, because I have some difficulty about the matter, and because I hope also that gentlemen will join me in looking into some of the proposed expenditures which will come before us during the session. I promised my friend from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] to renew the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The first section of the bill reads as follows:

"That all moneys which have been, or may hereafter be, appropriated for the compensation of members and officers, and for the contingent expenses of the Senate, shall be paid out of the Treasury on requisition drawn by the Secretary of the Senate, and shall be kept, disbursed, and accounted for by him according to law; and the said Secretary shall be deemed the disbursing officer, and shall be allowed the sum of $1,000 per annum as a compensation, over and above his salary as Secretary of the Senate, for the duties hereby imposed upon him."

The SPEAKER. The question first in order will be upon the first amendment proposed by the committee, which is to strike out after the word "members" the words, "and officers, and for the contingent expenses."

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. As there is to be a quarrel between the two Houses, I want to see who will make it, and I therefore call for the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question next in order will be upon the second amendment proposed by the committee to the first section, which is to strike out the words "and shall be allowed the sum of $1,000 per annum, as a compensation over and above his salary as Secretary of the Senate, for the duties hereby imposed upon him."

Mr. WHEELER. I call for the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The second section of the bill reads as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That in lieu of the bond now required by law to be given by the Secretary of the Senate, he shall give bond to the United States, within ten days after the passage of this act, with one or more sureties, to be approved by the Comptrollers of the Treasury, in the penal sum of $20,000, with condition for the faithful application and disbursement of such funds as may be drawn from the Treasury under this act, which bond shall be deposited in the Comptrollers' office; and it shall be the duty of each and every Secretary of the Senate who may hereafter be chosen, to give bond as aforesaid, within thirty days after he enters upon the duties of his office, and before making any requisition as aforesaid."

The SPEAKER. The third amendment proposed by the committee is to strike out of the second section the words "in lieu of," and insert in place thereof the words "in addition to."

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The fourth amendment was the following:

"Page 1, line 23, after the words 'by the,' insert the word 'first,' so as to make the clause read 'to be approved by the First Comptroller of the Treasury.'"

The question was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

The fifth amendment was the following:

"Page 1, line 29, after the words 'of the,' insert the word 'first.'"

Mr. HOUSTON. This amendment makes the same change as the last.

The question was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

The sixth amendment was to strike out the third section.

Mr. BAYLY. I call for the yeas and nays, and, that there may be no mistake, I ask for tellers on ordering them.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARLAN, of Indiana, and WHEELER were appointed.

Several MEMBERS. Read the section.

The section proposed to be stricken out was read by the Clerk, as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That the accounts of the Secretary of the Senate, of his disbursements of moneys on account of the contingent expenses of the Senate, when passed by the committee to audit and control such contingent expenses, and certified to have been so passed by the chairman of such committee, shall be deemed and held conclusive by all the officers of the Treasury Department."

Upon seconding the call for the yeas and nays, the tellers reported—yeas 29, noes 90.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PECKHAM. I sent for the Sub-Treasury act, and I desire now to call the attention of gentlemen—

The SPEAKER. It is too late to make any remarks, unless by the unanimous consent of the House, for the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. PECKHAM. I desire only to make the suggestion that the Sub-Treasury act is entirely at war with the position taken by gentlemen upon this floor in reference to the effect of the bill now under consideration. It is, beyond all doubt or controversy, that a disbursing officer has no right to make a deposit of the money, or to use it—

[Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order, as the main question has been ordered to be now put.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to make a brief explanation, if I have the permission of the House to do so. I will not detain the House long.

[Loud cries of "Object!"]

The SPEAKER. It is too late to make any explanation now. The question is upon the last amendment proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means, and upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I think the Chair is mistaken. I understood that the result of the tellers was, that the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is in error; they were ordered.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to know if the Committee on Ways and Means recommend the adoption of this amendment?

The SPEAKER. The amendment was reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The question was then taken upon the amendment to strike out the third section of the bill; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 126, nays 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Banks, Belcher, Bell, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Chamberlain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Corwin, Craige, Culloin, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, De Witt, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Everhart, Faulkner, Flagler, Florence, Fuller, Giddings, Green, Grey, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lindley, Lindsley, Lyon, McCulloch, McMullin, McQueen, Mace, Maxwell, Mayall, Middleswarth, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, Peck, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Puryear, Reese, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rufin, Sabin, Sapp, Seymour, Shaw, Seward, Singleton, Skelton, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Ellihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright, and Yates—126.

NAYS—Messrs. Appleton, Ashe, Thomas H. Bailey, Benson, Bissell, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Chase, Cook, Cox, Crocker, Cutting, Disney, Edmunds, Etheridge, Farley, Franklin, Goode, Greenwood, Harrison, Hiestler, Hill, Hunt, Kidwell, Macdonald, McNair, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, John G. Miller, Morgan, Peckham, Pennington, Pringle, Ready, Riddle, David Ritchie, Rogers, Frederick P. Stanton, Straub, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Walbridge, Walley, Tappan Wentworth, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—54.

So the amendment was adopted.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Ways and Means having now been disposed of, the question recurred upon the amendment offered by Mr. MACE, to add the following as an additional section to the bill:

"Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the moneys which have been, or may hereafter be, appropriated for the per diem and mileage of members of the House of Representatives, shall be paid at the Treasury, on requisition drawn by the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, and shall be kept, disbursed, and accounted for by him according to law. And the said Sergeant at Arms shall be deemed a disbursing officer, and in lieu of the bond now required of him, under the rules of the House of Representatives, he shall give bond to the United States, within ten days after the passage of this act, with one or more sureties, to be approved by the Comptroller of the Treasury, in the penal sum of one hundred thousand dollars, with condition for the faithful application and disbursement of such funds as may be drawn from the Treasury under this act, which bond shall be deposited in the Comptroller's office."

Mr. MACE. If I have it in my power to do so, I will withdraw that amendment.

The SPEAKER. It can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. MACE. I hope I shall have that consent. No objection being made, the amendment was withdrawn.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and was subsequently read the third time.

The question now being, "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. HOUSTON demanded the previous question.

The previous question received a second; and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. WALSH. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I should like to have the bill again read as it stands amended.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will again be reported.

No objection being made, the bill was once more read through by the Clerk.

The question was taken: and the bill was passed—yeas 113, nays 52; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Appleton, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Bocoek, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cutting, Dawson, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eddy, English, Faulkner, Flagler, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hiestler, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Ingersoll, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lindley, McCulloch, McMullin, Mace, Matteson, Maxwell, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Norton, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, Peck, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rufin, Sabin, Sapp, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Skelton, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Vail, Wade, Walker, Ellihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Daniel B. Wright, Yates, and Zollicoffer—113.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Thomas H. Bailey, Belcher, Benson, Bissell, Boyce, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Cobb, Craige, John G. Davis, Eastman, Edmunds, Ellison, Etheridge, Farley, Franklin, Giddings, Grow, Hamilton, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, McNair, Macy, Maurice, John G. Miller, Morgan, Nichols, Peckham, Pennington, David Ritchie, Rogers, Rowe, Seward, William Smith, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Tweed, Upham, Vansant, Walbridge, Walley, Walsh, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Witte—52.

So the bill was passed.

The question was put upon the following amendment to the title, and it was agreed to:

Strike out the words "A bill regulating the disbursement of the contingent fund of the Senate, and for other purposes," and insert in lieu thereof: "A bill to constitute the Secretary of the Senate a disbursing officer for the purposes therein mentioned."

Mr. FULLER. I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the House adjourned (at half past three o'clock) until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 13, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, Senate bill entitled "An act for the relief of Joseph Mitchell;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and,

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to what I conceive to be a question of privilege. Yesterday, when the Committee on Invalid Pensions was called, they reported adversely in the case of Royal R. Platt. On speaking with the chairman of that committee, I have ascertained that they had only the memorial of the party before them, and that the proofs had, by some mistake, been sent to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions. I now move that the memorial be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that the other papers be withdrawn from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and take the same reference.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

THE COMMERCIAL MARINE.

Mr. DRUM. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution.

Mr. EDGERTON. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I raise this question of order: The gentleman from Ohio arose in his place and demanded the regular order of business. I insist, therefore, that under that demand the resolution proposed to be submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is out of order.

Several MEMBERS. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. EDGERTON. I withdraw my objection.

The resolution was then read; as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing by law, the Secretary of the Navy to equip and maintain three public vessels at the harbors of Boston, New York, and Norfolk, respectively, which shall, in case of disaster to the commercial marine of the country, or of other exigencies requiring aid from the Navy Department, be at all times in a condition to act promptly under the orders of the Department.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, how does that resolution get in?

The SPEAKER. If objected to, it cannot be introduced.

Mr. JONES. I object to its introduction.

GEORGE R. C. FLOYD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a joint resolution from the Senate, entitled "A joint resolution for the relief of John R. C. Floyd, late Secretary of Wisconsin Territory, and sureties;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that that joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EASTMAN. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, which is, in my opinion, the most appropriate committee for its consideration. It is in regard to the settlement of certain accounts.

The question was taken; and the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a Senate bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Priscilla C. Simonds;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to call upon committees for reports.

Mr. MACE moved that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition and papers in the case of Samuel Grimes, and that they be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. MACE, from the Committee on Claims, reported "A bill for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Girard;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and the bill and report ordered to be printed.

Mr. GIDDINGS, from the Committee on Claims, moved that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition and papers in the case of J. A. Lapham, and also in the case of William Darby; and that they be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. GIDDINGS also, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition of Captain Francis Allyn and the owners of the ship Cadmus; which report was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. GIDDINGS, leave was granted to withdraw the petition and papers of Alexander Weed from the files of the House, and that they be referred to the War Department; and also to withdraw the petition and papers of John Metcalf, for the purpose of reference to the Senate.

STEAMER FALCON.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill No. 81, entitled "An act changing the name of the American-built steamer Falcon to that of Queen City."

Mr. FULLER. This is a matter which I think nobody in this House will object to. I therefore move that the bill be read a third time, and be put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee on Commerce, made an adverse report on the memorial of the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company of Baltimore; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. LATHAM, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill, entitled "An act to continue in force the act entitled 'An act to ascertain and settle the land claims in the State of California.'"

The Clerk read the bill; which provides that the term for which the commissioners for the settlement of private land claims in the State of California, appointed by an act of Congress of March 3, 1851, be extended for one year further, to be computed from and after March 3, 1854.

Mr. LATHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a statement relative to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is entitled to the floor, and may make such statement.

Mr. LATHAM. The bill for this commission for the settlement of private land claims in California, was passed by Congress in the spring of the year 1851. The commission itself was never organized until some time in January, I think, of 1852. By the spring of 1852, there were between eight and nine hundred claims filed before this commission in California, claiming something over eleven million acres of land within the limits of that State. That commission has been in continued session from that time up to the present, and has disposed of about three hundred cases. Some two hundred cases have been argued and submitted to the board, and yet remain undecided.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, merely asks that the term of the district commission may be extended for one year, in order that they may complete the business which they have already undertaken. A large majority of the cases decided have gone into the United States district court, and will come to the Supreme Court of the country. It is essential that this bill should pass before the twentieth of this month. The steamer which next goes to California leaves on that day, and will not reach there—even if she have the best of weather—till some time early in March. The commission expires on the third day of March. Now, then, if this bill go through the ordinary course of legislation, it will be absolutely impossible for it to be reached on the Calendar before the sailing of the next steamer; and the result will be that the commission will have expired, and great loss will have ensued, not only to the country, but to the respective claimants who have filed claims before that commission for adjudication. I therefore, with this statement of facts, and with a view to save loss to the Government itself, and to save loss to the claimants themselves, ask the unanimous consent of the House that this bill be now put upon its passage.

If any gentleman has any doubt as regards the condition of this commission, of the business which has been performed by it, and of the business which is now before it, I think I can satisfy him that the commission are doing the best they can, and have been doing the best they could do, to facilitate the business of the Government.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. LATHAM. I call the previous question. The previous question was seconded; and the main question was ordered to be put.

The main question being, "Shall the bill be read a third time?" was put, and decided in the affirmative.

The bill was then read a third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. COBB. The Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred House bill No. 1—better known as the homestead bill—leaving out many preliminary parts of the title—have had the same under consideration for several weeks, and have instructed me to report back a bill in the form of a substitute.

I desire to make one suggestion before the bill passes out of my hands, or, at least, out of my control. This is an important measure, and one in which the whole country, perhaps, more or less, feel a deep interest, and also a deep interest in the action which Congress may take upon the subject. Now, the question is, will we put the bill in such a condition, that this Congress cannot act upon it? Shall we let it go upon the Calendar where it can never again be reached? I desire to make this suggestion, and, if it shall be in order, to make a motion to that effect before I sit down, that this bill, with all other bills that have been, or may hereafter be reported in relation to this subject, may be made the special order for the second Tuesday of February next. Before that time, all the measures relating to the matter will be before Congress, and be printed, so that every gentleman in this House will be able to come to a conclusion as to the course of action which will be proper to be taken upon the subject; and they will be ready then to meet the expectation of the whole country. Shall we let this opportunity pass, and allow this bill to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where it never will be again reached, without some action making it a special order, so that it may come up at some particular time—say the second Tuesday of February next? I trust not; and if it be in order, I submit the motion that it be made a special order for the day named; and I hope no gentleman will object to it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to making it a special order for that day, or any other.

The SPEAKER. For what bill is this a substitute?

Mr. COBB. For the bill which relates to the subject of homesteads—being bill No. 1—the first which was introduced into the House. Does the Speaker entertain the motion to make it a special order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will allow the bill to be reported to the House first.

The title of the bill was then reported as follows:

"A bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, and all other branches of industry, and for granting to every man who is the head of a family and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy, and cultivation of the same for the period herein specified; and to graduate and reduce the price of public lands."

The SPEAKER. This bill is reported back with an amendment.

Mr. COBB. The amendment relates to the graduation and reduction of the price of public lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama proposes to make the bill now reported, with all the other bills relating to the homestead policy, the special order for Tuesday next. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] objects to such order; and the Chair rules that the motion is out of order.

Mr. COBB. Then I shall have to submit. I think the Chair is perfectly right in his decision; and therefore I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be printed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, obtained the floor.

Mr. MILLSON. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote referring this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman has not the floor to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee was recognized by the Chair; but the gentleman from Virginia rose, and said that he had a privileged question. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Tennessee as yielding the floor.

Mr. COBB. Does the Chair suppose that I have yielded the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not suppose that the gentleman has the floor upon this particular proposition.

Mr. COBB. I will yield the floor, satisfied that the bill is in good hands.

Mr. JONES. I merely wish to remark that, if I can get the floor on Monday next, I shall move to suspend the rules, so as to make the homestead bill a special order for some future day.

Mr. COBB. I was about to say that I should try to get the floor for the same purpose; so that, between us both, we may accomplish this object.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I rise to inquire what would be the effect of the motion made by the gentleman from Virginia? [Mr. MILLSON.] Will it not carry the bill with it?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

The question was then taken upon Mr. MILLSON's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. COBB. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report an amendment to that portion of the homestead bill just referred which related to the graduation of the price of the public lands.

The SPEAKER. By the unanimous consent of the House the amendment can be sent to the Committee of the Whole, to be considered in connection with the homestead bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

Mr. COBB. What right has the gentleman from New York to object?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Alabama as having reported, a few minutes ago, the homestead bill, which, upon his motion, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman now rises in his place and proposes to offer a substitute—

Mr. COBB. No, sir, not a substitute—an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proposes then to offer an amendment, which he desires shall accompany the bill as such. The Chair decides that it can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. COBB. The amendment pertains to, and is a part of the same bill.

The SPEAKER. The amendment should have accompanied the bill at the time it was reported by the committee. The Chair would suggest, however, to the gentleman, that perhaps he may accomplish his purpose by offering his amendment as a separate bill.

Mr. COBB. Then I will offer it as such.

The bill was then introduced as "A bill to reduce and graduate the price of the public lands;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

CHILDREN OF CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES BORN ABROAD.

Mr. CUTTING. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the inquiry whether any, and if any, what legislation is necessary to secure the right of citizenship to children born out of the United States, whose parents at the time of such birth are citizens of the United States, and directing them to report at as early a day as possible, by bill or otherwise, to report to the House a bill, which is eminently necessary in order to correct a lamentable defect in the law as it now stands. After the bill has been read, with the permission of the House, I will briefly explain the objects of the bill; and I am convinced that, from a sense of justice, the sympathies and patriotic sentiments of members of the House will concur in saying that it deserves immediate action at the hands of the House.

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

"A bill to secure the rights of citizenship to the children of citizens born out of the limits of the United States."

It was then read in extenso by the Clerk.

It provides that all persons born out of the limits or jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were, at the time of their birth, citizens of the United States, shall be deemed and considered as citizens of the United States, provided that the rights of citizenship shall not descend to persons whose fathers never resided in the United States.

It also provides that when a woman, not a citizen of the United States, is married to a citizen, she shall be deemed to be a citizen of the United States.

Mr. CUTTING. I desire to explain to the House the legislation that is necessary for the protection of this very interesting portion of what is supposed to be our population; and in order to do so, it will be necessary for me to advert to the state of the law upon this subject as it exists, independently of any legislation.

By the common-law, the better opinion always was, although there were some few dicta to the contrary, that the children of subjects born out of the allegiance of the crown, and under the allegiance of another dominion, were aliens to the former, and were subjects of the latter, or not, according to the municipal regulations of the country in which the births might have happened to take place.

At a very early period, as early as the year 1350—the 25th of Edward III.—England, with that foresight which has always characterized her, for the purpose of extending the trade and commerce of the country as much as possible, and therefore to take away any embarrassment or difficulty to her subjects in planting themselves over the world, passed an act by which, reciting that there were some doubts upon this subject, it was declared that the children of British subjects born out of allegiance, where their mothers had gone by and with the consent of their husbands, should be deemed natural-born subjects of England. That provision continued in full force, with some alterations, until the reign of George II., when an act was passed which was similar—almost identical, indeed, in phraseology—to the first section of the bill that I have been instructed to report. It provided that in all cases of children born of British parents out of the allegiance of England, they, and all thereafter to be born, should be taken to be subjects of England.

In the reign of George III., in the year 1773, that act was extended so as to give the same privileges to the children born of the second generation; that is to say, the children of fathers whose fathers were English subjects were naturalized, and made equivalent to natural-born subjects.

In the reign of Victoria, in the year 1844, the English Parliament provided that the children of English mothers, though married to foreigners, should have the rights and privileges of English subjects, though born out of allegiance. I have not, in this bill, gone to that extent, as the House will have observed from the reading of it.

The same condition of statute regulation prevails in France, and, so far as my information extends, in every civilized country—protecting the children of their subjects who happen to be born abroad.

In the year 1790 Congress legislated upon this subject, and in the act providing for the naturalization of aliens, there was a section introduced protecting and securing the rights of American children born abroad; and the provisions of that section were entirely sufficient to have met every exigency that existed, because it applied not only to the children of parents then living, but to the children of all parents thereafter to exist who might be born abroad.

This act of 1790 continued in force as respects this branch of it until the 14th of April, 1802, when the whole series of the naturalization laws were by one blow repealed, and a substitute passed by Congress; and in legislating upon what seemed to be the minor consideration in reenacting that small portion of the original act of 1790, which was designed to provide for the security of the children of our own citizens, it was embodied in a form of expression so loose and so ambiguous that it was exceedingly difficult ever to gather its true sense and meaning.

But a more fatal difficulty existed. By the phraseology of the act of 1802, it seems that only those parents are embraced within its provisions who existed on the 14th of April, 1802, when this act was passed; so that while that statute lives to the children of all persons born abroad on the 14th of April, 1802, or anterior to that time, the rights of American citizens, it so happens that every citizen born a minute after the expiration of the 14th of April, 1802, and who, with their families, have traveled abroad, either upon visits of pleasure or for the purpose of trade or business, or for the higher purpose of spreading the Gospel and shedding the lights of Christianity upon darkened countries—the children of all of these persons, no matter what their objects and motives may have been in traveling abroad, born to them abroad, are aliens to this country; so that the children of a man who happened to be in the world on the 14th of April, 1802, born abroad, are American citizens, while the children of persons born on the 15th of April, 1802, are aliens to the country.

Well, now, this injustice, this inequality was not manifest for a long period of time, because it only created or left this disability to the children of those persons who were to be born after 1802, and, of course, you had to go forward a quarter of a century before you found the parents, and then you had to advance nearly another quarter of a century before the children of these parents were placed in a position to ascertain what their political and civil rights were.

Some ten or twelve years ago, the embarrassment arising out of this defective legislation was ascertained and perceived. Of course it created great anxiety in the minds of those of our citizens who had been and are still abroad; because though away from the soil, they carry with them that love, that affection for their fatherland, that those who remain in it constantly have, and perhaps in a greater degree. Those persons who are out of our limits look back to the country of their childhood and their early homes, with a degree of energetic affection that perhaps does not exist, or is not aroused within us while we are here, scarcely feeling the glory and the advantages that we derive from the fact of bearing the proud name of American citizen.

Now it seems to me that this is a case of defective legislation, which ought to be immediately acted upon. We find, by looking at what has been done, that in 1841 a bill, substantially the same in legislation as the one I have the honor to propose, was introduced into the Senate, and immediately ordered to a third reading, but then seemed to have been forgotten, and remained in that condition. So, too, I observe that the Committee on the Judiciary in this House have, at another session, reported a bill, but, unfortunately, that bill thus reported for the purpose of correcting this great evil, took its direction to that committee which is the receptacle—it seems to me—of all things which are to be lost—I mean to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. And, undoubtedly, the chances are that if this direction be given to this proposed correction of that great evil, it will not again be reached.

Now, it appears to me that there is no matter of legislation which can appeal more strongly to the sensibilities of this House. It seems to me that there is no more interesting portion of our people than those who leave this country for the purpose of extending the trade and commerce of the country, or for the purpose of carrying the great principles of our institutions, and of the institutions of Christianity, into foreign lands—that there can be no subject brought to the attention of this House which will more earnestly address itself to their bosoms and to their right feelings; and, in this expectation, believing that the House, and each member of the House, will feel that this is a subject interesting to himself individually, and that each member of this House will desire to advance and carry it through, I throw myself on each one of them to assist in at once correcting this evil, the existence of which all admit.

One word more, Mr. Speaker, as explanatory of the second section of the proposed bill, and I have done.

The second section of this act provides that where an American citizen marries a woman—a foreigner—that by the act of marriage itself the political character of the wife shall at once conform to the political character of the husband. That section was taken in so many words, or in nearly so many words, from the recent act of 1844, Victoria. And it is a remarkable fact that where England has been a power antagonistic as it were to that great principle of legislation which has prevailed with us—namely, that honorable liberality by which we naturalize foreigners—although, I say, the legislation of Great Britain up to 1844 has been the reverse of this, yet, to the honor of that country be it said, they have been always foremost in promoting the interests and in protecting the rights of its own subjects. And they have said, that where a wife—a foreigner—is married to a subject of England, it is better that she should understand that she is an English subject, so that she may at once inculcate in the minds of her children those principles of that country to whose political fortunes she has become united. And the House will perceive, sir, that there can be no objection to it, because women possess no political rights; and where you confer on her the political character of her husband, it is a relief to the husband, it aids him in the instilling of proper principles in his children, and cannot interfere with any possible right of a political character. And therefore, sir, it is that the section, in my opinion, ought to be immediately passed. For there is no good reason why we should put a woman into the probationary term required by the naturalization laws, nor to the inconvenience of attending at the necessary courts, or places for the purpose of declaring her intentions and renouncing her allegiance; nor, again, put the husband to the expense of the proceeding; nor, yet again, to the embarrassments connected with the transfer of real property. I ask the House, therefore—

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman from New York permit me to make an observation?

Mr. CUTTING. Certainly.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman from New York has brought forward a bill in which the people of my district—which is bounded by the Province of New Brunswick for two hundred miles—are deeply interested. And I hope that the bill will be considered.

Mr. CUTTING. And let me say to my friend from Maine [Mr. FULLER] in addition—and I will add it to his remarks—that this subject has recently attracted the notice of a great many very worthy and respectable people, who feel that this great evil ought to be relieved by the speedy and prompt action of the Government. In the State of New York it has been an object in our legislation to pass special acts for the relief of persons, in reference to property, coming by descent from children who should be escheated in consequence of their birth abroad.

We cannot, of course, in the State of New York, regulate their political rights—that must be done by Congress; but to the small extent to which we can go, you will find upon the statute-book from year to year, for five or six years past, special acts of legislation designed to provide against escheat of property, by reason of the alienage of the children born abroad of American citizens.

I have had sent to me a pamphlet written by one of the most eminent lawyers in the United States, whose fame is known from the northern extreme to the southern boundaries of our country—I refer to Horace Binney; and gentlemen who are acquainted with his standing and position before this country, will perceive that I have not overrated him. He has recently published an elaborate pamphlet, intending thereby to draw the attention to the subject to which I have now invited the attention of this House.

I beg leave to close the remarks which I have made—and which have been much more extended than I intended—by simply appealing to the individual feelings of patriotism, and sense of right of every member of this House, to put this bill upon its passage, so that there may be no delay. It is a reproach to us that it has not been acted upon before.

Mr. McNAIR, (interrupting.) I wish to inquire of the gentleman from New York, if this section of the law now upon the statute-book does not meet his case? It is this:

“That the children of persons duly naturalized under any of the laws of the United States, or who, previous to the passing of any law on that subject by the Government of the United States, may have become citizens of any one of said States under the laws thereof, being under the age of twenty-one years at the time of their parents being so naturalized, or admitted to the rights of citizenship, shall, if dwelling in the United States, be considered as citizens of the United States; and the children of persons who now are, or have been, citizens of the United States, shall, though born out of the limits or jurisdiction of the United States, be considered citizens of the United States.”

Mr. CUTTING. Does not the gentleman see that the very vice which I have referred to is contained in the language which he has read? The phraseology is, “that the children of persons who now are,” that is on the 14th day of April, 1802, “or who have been citizens of the United States, shall, though born out of,” &c. Does not the gentleman see therein the very lamentable fact of which I have spoken? The difficulty is, that the act is not prospective in its terms.

Mr. HAVEN. As there seems to be no necessity that there should be further discussion upon this bill, I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was then ordered to be put.

The main question being, "Shall the bill be ordered to be engrossed and read a third time?" was put, and decided in the affirmative.

The bill was subsequently engrossed, and read a third time.

A MEMBER. Let the bill be read through.

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That persons heretofore born, or hereafter to be born, out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were or shall be, at the time of their birth, citizens of the United States, shall be deemed and considered, and are hereby declared to be citizens of the said United States: Provided, however, That the rights of citizenship shall not descend to persons whose fathers never resided in the United States.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That any woman, married, or who shall be married, to a citizen of the United States, shall be deemed and taken to be a citizen of the United States.

Mr. DRUM. I move to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I approve of the bill, but the naturalization laws, in many particulars, besides the one already under discussion, need amendment.

Mr. CUTTING. I rise to a question of order. Has not the previous question been ordered?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been exhausted.

Mr. DRUM. Because the naturalization laws need amendment, I think the only chance of amending them would be to amend a bill of the kind now before us, which is preëminently worthy of adoption; and for the purpose of procuring an amendment of these laws in many other particulars, some of which are quite as lamentable as the cases provided for by this bill, and which have come under my personal notice, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of general amendment.

One case I will relate, and it arises out of a very similar State law to the one complained of by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUTTING,] and provided for in this bill. The case to which I refer is this: There are many cases of foreigners who have come to this country, left their homes and children, became naturalized citizens here, and whose children have subsequently, after the lapse of a few years, been brought to this country; but they are not naturalized citizens under the act of Congress which has been read by my colleague. That act of Congress has been considered not to embrace cases of this kind. There are many such instances in which persons have grown up believing themselves to be naturalized by the naturalization of their parents, but they are not citizens of the United States. I could mention various other instances in which the naturalization laws need amendment, besides the special case provided for in this bill.

Mr. ORR. I think there is no necessity for referring this bill to the Committee of the Whole. The bill has been reported by the Judiciary Committee, and it remedies a very glaring defect in the existing law. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. DRUM. I will withdraw the motion I made to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole.

The question being upon the passage of the bill, it was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

ROBERT G. WARD.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported "A bill for the relief of Robert G. Ward," which was read the first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. STANTON. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report the following bill, with an amendment:

"A bill to amend an act, entitled 'An act to divide the State of Arkansas into two judicial Districts,' approved March 3, 1851."

Mr. STANTON. That is a bill providing simply that the courts in the western judicial district of Arkansas shall be authorized to sentence persons who may be convicted to confinement in the penitentiary, which is in the eastern district of that State. It is a very important provision, but one which can give rise to no debate. The amendment I propose is to remedy an omission which was in the original bill.

The bill was then read through by the Clerk. It provides that the courts in the western judicial district of Arkansas shall have authority, upon conviction of persons of offenses for which punishment by confinement in the penitentiary is annexed, to sentence such convicts to undergo imprisonment in the penitentiary in the eastern judicial district of the said State.

The following amendment is proposed by the committee, to come in at the end of the bill:

"And the counties of Sevier and Sebastian, in said State, are hereby added to and made a part of the said second western district."

Mr. STANTON. These two counties lie upon the extreme western border of the State, and were omitted by accident in the bill creating that district. I suppose of course there will be no objection to its adoption.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed, was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. HILLYER. I desire to know if the morning hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not yet expired.

DISTRICT COURTS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, without amendment, the following bill, with a recommendation that it do pass:

"An act concerning the district courts of the United States in California."

The bill was then read through by the Clerk. It provides that there shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a district judge for the southern judicial district, heretofore established in California; and that the sessions of the district court of San José, Stockton, and Sacramento, shall be abolished. It also prescribes that in case of the sickness or inability of the said district judge to hold the terms of the district court at the places prescribed by law, or either of them, it shall be lawful for the district judge of the northern district of California to hold the said sessions of the southern district; and that in case of the sickness or inability of the district judge for the northern district to hold the sessions of said court at the times and places prescribed by law, or either of them, it shall be lawful for the judge for the southern district to hold said sessions for the northern district.

Mr. STANTON. The original bill passed in 1851, extending the judicial system of the United States over California, established two judicial districts, and provided for the appointment of two judges. In 1852—in a general appropriation bill, on account of some difficulty, as I understand, between the Senate and President, in regard to the nomination of a judge—the law was so altered as to require the judge of the northern district to perform the duties of both. I have been informed by the Senators and Representatives from California, that the duties of that judge are so onerous as to render it almost impossible for him to perform them. They inform me that he is engaged constantly, from the beginning of the year to the end, without any intermission of his duties. I can readily believe this to be true, from the fact that all the cases before the land commission in California are generally taken by appeal to the United States district court of that State.

Under these circumstances, this bill becomes necessary, not only for the purpose of enabling these judges to interchange with each other, but for the purpose of reinstating the law as it originally stood in 1851, when the judicial system of California was established.

Mr. HOUSTON. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary a question. I think I understand the statement he has just now made. It is true that the act of last Congress devolved the duties of both districts upon one judge. It was done, however, with the assent, and, I believe, at the suggestion of the Representatives or Senators from the State of California. But my recollection is that the salary of the judge who has been acting was increased—that he either received the salaries of both judges, or that his own was increased. Am I correct in that?

Mr. STANTON. He did not receive the salaries of both, but his own salary was increased from $3,500 to $5,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. I recollected the general fact that the salary was increased upon the express ground that he was required to discharge a double duty, and I should like the gentleman from Tennessee now to tell me whether he proposes to interfere with the salary which was appropriated by the last Congress?

Mr. STANTON. The act of 1851 established the salaries of these judges at $3,500. The act of 1852 devolved the duties of both of the judges upon one, and raised his salary to $5,000. I have not examined the phraseology of the act of 1851, but I presume that it controls the salary of this judge. At the same time, I should be glad that the salary should be raised to $5,000, because I think that $3,500 is entirely insufficient. The commissioners in the land commission get $8,000, and they are an inferior tribunal to the district court, because cases are carried by appeal from that commission to the district court.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not intend to throw any obstruction in the way of the passage of this bill. But I desired this information because I think it would be as well, at once, to throw back the salaries of these judges to the amount they were fixed at by the original law. As the duties are again to be separated, I think the former salaries ought to be restored.

Mr. LATHAM. I think I can satisfy the gentleman from Alabama that it would be wrong to throw this salary back to $3,500; and I will state the reason: It was supposed, when the duties of the two districts were devolved upon one judge, that one judge would be able to discharge the duties of both. Experience has satisfied all persons in that State that that is a matter of absolute impossibility. The court is in session, almost without intermission, from the first day of January to the last day of December. He has the revision of the acts of the California land commission, which is composed of three commissioners, besides the ordinary jurisdiction which belongs to the United States district court, and a maritime jurisdiction extending over about one thousand miles of our Pacific coast. It is an absolute impossibility for one judge to discharge the whole of the business imposed upon him. Now, then, this bill simply provides that, under the provisions of the bill of 1851 the President may appoint a judge for the southern district, in order to relieve this judge of the northern district from a portion of his labor. The annual salary of the new judge will be $3,500. The salary of the judge of the northern district will be what it is at present. He certainly earns it, for there is no judicial officer who works more laboriously than he does, and who is so poorly compensated.

Mr. HILLYER. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would remark to the House that there are at present but few private bills on the Calendar. Some of them, however, are of a very important character, and involve considerable amounts of money. The reports have only recently been made, and members have not had an opportunity to look into them and to inform themselves of the character of the claims. If we go to the Private Calendar, we will make but little progress to-day; and, if the motion of the gentleman from Georgia be withdrawn, I shall move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not wish to be the means of causing the bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary to be put out of its place, and, therefore, would inquire of the Chair what would be its condition if now passed over?

The SPEAKER. No motion being made to recommit, it would go to the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I then move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be entertained.

Mr. HILLYER. I will make a remark in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.] This is the regular day for considering the bills upon the Private Calendar. Those bills interest a very large portion of our community, who, I will venture to say, have been badly treated by this House. Many of these claims are just. They have been pending for years before the legislative body of our country, and have not yet been acted upon. I do hope that the House will not depart from the regular order of its business so as to disturb its action on these private claims. I trust that the House will resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, according to our rules, and according to the rights this day of parties upon the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remark that he has indulged the gentleman from Tennessee, and the gentleman from Georgia, in remarks upon the motion that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House; but such motion is not debatable.

The question now being on the motion, that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar,

Mr. WALSH demanded tellers; which were ordered, and Mr. McNAIR, and Mr. HARRIS of Alabama, were appointed.

The question was then put, and the tellers reported—ayes 87, noes 90.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. With the permission of the House, however, before that question is taken, the Chair will present a communication from the State Department.

No objection being made—

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the State Department, transmitting certain reports and statements required by "An act to regulate and fix the compensation of clerks in the different offices," approved April 20, 1818; and by the eleventh section of "An act legalizing and making appropriations for such necessary objects as have usually been included in the general appropriation bills, without authority of law, and to fix and provide for certain incidental expenses of the Departments and offices, and for other purposes," approved 26th August, 1842; and also that called for by the resolution of the House of Representatives, of January 13, 1846.

REFERENCE OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The question was then taken upon the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was decided in the affirmative.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee, at its last meeting, had under consideration the subject of the reference of the President's message, and upon that subject the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EWING having the floor, remarked that there was one point in the message of the President on which he desired to make a few remarks—the levying of tonnage duties on domestic commerce for the support of internal improvements. He objected to the recommendation contained in the President's message in this respect, especially on the grounds of its unconstitutionality. Were this mode carried out, he considered that it would be the introduction, not only of a system of unjust taxation, but of great discord, and, perhaps, of a dissolution of the Union. By a careful examination of the Constitution, it would be found that the only power of a State to levy duties was upon foreign, and not upon domestic commerce. [Mr. E. quoted various authorities in support of this position, which will hereafter be published.]

Having referred to the constitutionality of the question, and assuming that he had only been partially successful in the proving the positions he had laid down, he might content himself, and there rest. But perhaps he might be allowed to say that, after the West had born its fair share of the burden of taxation, by which the Atlantic coast was studded with buoys, light-houses, dock-yards, and fortifications, it seemed to be somewhat ungracious for the President of the United States and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] to make such suggestions as that such improvements as were required in our western States should be made by a tax upon the localities requiring them.

Such being the statement of a President coming from one of the older States, it might perhaps hardly be wondered at; but what should be said of a western Senator—a man of much judgment and popularity—recommending such a course as this? This was indeed a heavy burden which he proposed to add to those the people of the West had already to bear, and he trusted such a measure would never receive the sanction of the Government of this country.

Untold millions had been expended upon the States bordering upon the sea—millions to which all the States had contributed—and yet they were advised to make sub-confederacies, and levy tonnage duties to make those improvements which were necessary to the very existence of that commerce which contributed to the welfare of all. This was the most monstrous suggestion ever heard of. There was already one great Confederacy; in that the whole States were united; and now they were advised to split it up into fragments, in order to meet this fanciful constitutional objection to internal improvements! Was ever anything more monstrous?

During the delivery of Mr. E.'s remarks, a discussion arose upon a point of order as to whether a member of the House could advert to remarks made by a member of the Senate; which the Chairman decided could not be done in order.

[Mr. EWING's speech will be found in the Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. ORR.) The Chair is of opinion that he decided the question of order raised by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] too broadly. I find in the Manual this rule:

"It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other House, or the particular votes or majorities on it there; because the opinion of each House should be left to its own independence, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other; and the quoting them might beget reflections leading to a misunderstanding between the two Houses."

Mr. EWING. I think the Chair is laboring under a mistake. The speech from which I read was a speech of the last session, and it has, consequently, passed out of the power of Congress as completely as if it were a matter of half a century gone by. It has been published by the Senator himself to the country. It was a matter belonging to the action of the last Congress. It is a part of the history of that Congress, and is not now a proposition pending before the other branch of the National Legislature.

The CHAIRMAN. If the remarks of the gentleman [Mr. EWING] had been confined exclusively to the action of the last Congress—to the proceedings of the last Congress—the Chair is of opinion that the gentleman might have alluded to them in order; but if the gentleman alludes to a matter now pending before another branch of Congress, the Chair thinks he is not in order; and the gentleman, I understand, made some allusion to what had transpired during the present Congress, and such an allusion would be out of order according to the Manual. That which has been said or done in the Senate at a preceding Congress is a legitimate subject of comment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to say a word.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If the gentleman [Mr. RICHARDSON] be not going to speak in reference to the point of order, he will permit me to make a single suggestion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to make a remark on that subject. It is proper that the question should be decided correctly.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not choose to interrupt the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] during the progress of his remarks, though the point suggested itself to me at once, when the allusion was made. During the short period that I have served here, no gentleman has ever been permitted to allude to remarks made in the Senate.

To avoid that rule, they have very often quoted from speeches which they have seen published in such and such a paper.

Mr. CLINGMAN. In the public newspapers.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes. The point has been made even then, and the Chair has sustained it, and the House has sustained the Chair in its decision. The reason for the rule is, that there may be no conflict between the members of the two bodies; and the moment you depart from that rule you open the door which lets in consequences which would be evil enough, God knows.

Mr. KEITT obtained the floor.

Mr. McQUEEN. My colleague [Mr. KEITT] supposed that the House would have gone into the consideration of private bills to-day, and not into committee. He is therefore not at this moment prepared for the question under consideration, and asks the courtesy of the House to rise. I make that motion.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee [Mr. ORR] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the President's message, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the House do now proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The SPEAKER. The first business upon the Speaker's table is Senate bill No. 13, entitled "An act prescribing the manner of appointing the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury." The demand for the previous question was pending when this bill was last under consideration.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. There is an amendment to the original bill, proposed by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON.] The question will first be taken upon that amendment, and then upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I am willing to withdraw that amendment, as the substitute of the gentleman from South Carolina covers the same ground.

The SPEAKER. It can be withdrawn if there be no objection.

No objection was made, and the amendment was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill, and then the substitute.

The bill was then read, as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, authorized by the thirteenth section of the Act to establish the Home Department, and to provide for the Treasury Department an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and a Commissioner of the Customs," approved the 3d of March, 1849, be, from and after the passage of this act, appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

The SPEAKER. The substitute is to strike out all after the enacting clause, and substitute in lieu thereof what will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

"That hereafter, as the office of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury shall be vacated, the appointment of his successor shall be made by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the substitute for the bill.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I call for the yeas and nays upon that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put, upon the adoption of the substitute, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 96, nays 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bissell, Bocoek, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edmundson, Ellison, Etheridge, Farley, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, H-nn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Lilly, Macdonald, McNair, McQueen, Maxwell, Mayall, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Orr, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rowe, Rufin, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Skelton, George W. Smyth, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Walker, Warren, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—96.

YAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Benton, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Chase, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Everhart, Ewing, Flagler, Franklin, Haven, Hiestor, Hill, Hunt, Kerr, Knox, Lindsey, Lindley, McCulloch, McMullin, Matteson, Maurice, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Powell, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Shannon, Gerrit Smith, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Walley, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witte, Yates, and Zollieffer—70.

So the substitute was adopted.

THE SPEAKER. The question now is upon ordering the bill to be read the third time. Upon that question the previous question is not exhausted.

MR. WHEELER. I move that the House adjourn.

MR. SMITH, of New York. Is it now in order to make any remarks?

THE SPEAKER. It is not in order at this time.

MR. HOUSTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

MR. STANTON, of Tennessee. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

MR. WHEELER. I ask for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BRIDGES and WHEELER were appointed.

The House was divided upon the demand for the yeas and nays, and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

MR. HOUSTON. I will withdraw my motion to reconsider and lay upon the table.

The question upon ordering the bill to a third reading was then put.

[Considerable confusion prevailed in the Hall.]

MR. WHEELER. I moved to adjourn before the Chair put the question upon ordering the bill to a third reading. I insist that the motion be entertained.

THE SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. Jones.) The gentleman could not have made the motion, for he was certainly not recognized by the Chair.

MR. ORR. Has the result of the vote upon ordering the bill to a third reading been announced?

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will consider the question as not having been put.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

MR. HILLYER. I move that when the House adjourn, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" and "Yes!"]

MR. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I ask the indulgence of the House to make a single remark, suggested to me by the Doorkeeper of the House. I never made a motion to adjourn over since I have been in Congress; but I am informed that such an adjournment, upon the present occasion, is absolutely necessary, in order to adjust the gas fixtures about the Hall, to render it tolerable and healthful.

The question was put, and carried in the affirmative.

MR. SAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been put, was agreed to.

The bill was then read a third time by its title.

MR. ORR. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

MR. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and the House refused to adjourn.

MR. BAYLY. I move that there be a call of the House; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question having been seconded, and the main question ordered to be put, a motion for a call of the House cannot be entertained.

MR. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Upon the passage of the bill I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and decided in the negative—yeas 70, nays 107; as follows:

YAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Benton, Bissell, Boeck, Brooks, Carpenter, Churchwell, Clingman, Grainger, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, DeWitt, Disney, Dunbar, Eddy, Edmundson, Elliott, Ewing, Farley, Greenwood, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Ingersoll, Keitt, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, McQueen, Maxwell, Mayall, Meacham, Smith Miller, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Orr, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Pratt, Ready, Riddle, Robbins, Ruffin, Seymour, Shaw, Singleton, Skelton, George W. Smyth, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Warren, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollieffer—70.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Breckinridge, Bridges, Chandler, Chase, Clark, Cobb, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, Dawson, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Drum, Eastman, Edgerton, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Green, Grey, Hastings, Hiestor, Hill, Hunt, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Knox, Lilly, Lindley, Lindsey, McCulloch, Macdonald, McDougall, McMullin, McNair, Mace, Matteson, Manrice, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Milson, Morgan, Nichols Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pringle, Puryear, Reese, Richardson, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Rowe, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Tweed, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, and Yates—107.

So the bill did not pass.

MR. MACDONALD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to pass the bill, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

MR. STANTON, of Tennessee. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

MR. CHURCHWELL. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

MR. McMULLIN. I move that this House do now adjourn.

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

MR. ROBBINS. I call for tellers on that motion.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. SAPP and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 83.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The House was then divided on the demand for the yeas and nays on Mr. MACDONALD's motion; and there were 26 in the affirmative.

MR. BAYLY, of Virginia. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays. They were called for before the vote on the adjournment.

Tellers were not ordered, only 23 members rising in the affirmative.

MR. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Count the other side.

THE SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. Jones, of Tennessee.) It does not make any difference. It requires one fifth of the members present to order the yeas and nays; and, in the opinion of the present occupant of the chair, the yeas and nays have already been ordered—26 members having voted for them.

MR. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move that the House do now adjourn.

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that that motion is not in order, the House having just decided that question by refusing to adjourn.

MR. STANTON. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion of the gentleman from Maine since the last motion to adjourn was made and voted on.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that that is such action as would authorize him to entertain another motion to adjourn now.

MR. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move that there be a call of the House; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays. I want to have a full vote upon this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MR. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move that the House do now adjourn.

[Cries of "Yes!" "No!" "Pass the bill first!"]

MR. WHEELER. I demand tellers on the question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. RICHARDSON and WHEELER were appointed.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn; there being, on a division—ayes 77, noes 79.

[Cries of "Call the roll!" "Call the roll!"]

The roll was then called; and there were 32 in the affirmative, and 128 in the negative.

So the motion to order a call of the House was not agreed to.

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on laying the motion to reconsider on the table. On that question the yeas and nays are ordered.

MR. SAPP. I move that the House do now adjourn.

MR. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order.

THE SPEAKER. State your point of order.

MR. WENTWORTH. The point of order is, that the Clerk ought to have called the names in time; and that if he had called the names in proper time, the House would have been saved this trouble.

The Chair decided against the point of order.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, but was interrupted by MR. BAYLY, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, does the Chair decide that the call for a division was not made before the yeas and noes were ordered?

THE SPEAKER. The Chair decided that the call was not made until after the decision had been announced, and the calling of the roll had commenced.

MR. RICHARDSON. I rise to another question of order, and it is, that during the calling of the roll no point of order can be raised.

MR. WHEELER. What is the question before the House, Mr. Speaker?

THE SPEAKER. The question is on laying the motion to reconsider on the table.

The roll was then called; and there were—yeas 106, nays 30; as follows:

YAYS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Boeck, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Carpenter, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Colquitt, Corwin, Craig, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dowdell, Drum, Dunbar, Edmundson, Ellison, Everhart, Farley, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Giddings, Gooden, Green, Greenwood, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kittredge, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lilly, Lindley, Macdonald, McNair, Mace, Maxwell, Mayall, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Orr, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Puryear, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Wade, Walker, Warren, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—106.

NAYS—Messrs. Appleton, Chandler, Cox, Crocker, Dick, Eastman, Eddy, Etheridge, Ewing, Grey, Grow, Hiestor, Hill, Hillyer, Knox, McMullin, Matteson, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Pennington, Ready, Russell, Sage, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Wheeler, and Yates—30.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MR. PERKINS, of New York. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the House adjourned, (at four p. m.) to twelve o'clock, m., on Monday.

IN SENATE.

Monday, January 16, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of Thursday was read and approved.

THE STEAMSHIP SAN FRANCISCO.

MR. PEARCE. Mr. President, I ask leave of the Senate at this time to submit a resolution, to which I am sure there will be no objection:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to report upon the expediency of making suitable acknowledgments, and presenting testimonials to the commanders and crews of the British ship Three Bells, the American bark Killy, and the ship Antarctic, for the humanity and gallantry displayed in the rescue of the surviving officers, passengers, and crew of the steamship San Francisco.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

MR. PEARCE. Mr. President, I beg leave to say a very few words upon the subject of the resolution. The recent catastrophe of the steamship San Francisco was so unusual—the perils of those who were on board of her were so imminent, and prolonged amidst such variety and intensity of suffering—they were so connected with the Government, and their rescue was achieved by efforts of such bold, generous, and persevering humanity, that the occasion seems to me to demand acknowledgments on the part of the Government which are seldom made. The wrecked steamship was in the employment of the Government. The persons rescued were, for the most part, our own officers and troops.

For nearly or quite two weeks, their sufferings and perils were prolonged, while the shattered ship was exposed to the fury of the ocean under the most appalling circumstances, and with the prospect of destruction every hour. Her rescue was effected, sir, by men who could be moved only by the noblest impulses, and who thus impelled, themselves encountered extraordinary risks and dangers.

The ship Three Bells, though not first in the rescue, may appropriately be named first, because she was a British ship. Though this ship was leaking and short of provisions, her noble-hearted commander and his crew lay by this shattered wreck for six days, straining every nerve for the rescue of their fellowmen; and all the accounts testify that nothing could exceed the tenderness and kindness with which those who were rescued were treated on board of that ship.

The bark Kilby was American, and was the first in the rescue. She, too, had been storm-tossed and disabled in part; yet for two days her gallant commander and crew lay by the wreck of the San Francisco; and were then only parted from it by the irresistible force of the ocean. For two days more they cruised about amidst a stormy sea in search of her; and even now that vessel is a wanderer amidst the perils of that stormy element; though, happily, many of those who were rescued by her were transferred to another ship, and have arrived safely among their countrymen and friends.

The conduct of the officers and crew of the ship Antarctic is equally honorable.

Other Governments, sir, recognize and reward such services as these. Very lately, Captain Nye, of the mail steamship Pacific, his mate and boat's crew, were thanked and rewarded by the British Government, in a most liberal and grateful spirit, for a similar rescue of British sailors. It becomes us, sir, to follow, with at least equal steps, this example; and as our Executive does not possess the necessary means and authority, Congress should supply them. This will be both just and wise, as rewarding great merit, and encouraging others to similar gallantry hereafter.

Extraordinary heroism and humanity will always receive the just applause of men. But the public authority should furnish an enduring evidence of the public approbation, and such memorials of it as may be honorable to the Government, and cherished by the brave men who have so richly earned them.

The committee will, of course, obtain authentic and official information before they report for the final action of Congress.

I have said nothing, sir, of the officers and crew of the lost ship. All accounts agree as to the unblenching courage, the active skill, and patient perseverance of her commander, who seems to have displayed all the qualities which give honor to the character of the American seaman. What shall be due to him, his officers and crew, and the destitute troops on board his ship, will doubtless be properly determined hereafter. The acknowledgment due to the rescuers, to be graceful, should be as prompt as possible.

Mr. SHIELDS. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that I have just come from the War Department, and have had a conference with the head of that Department in relation to this matter. I have also prepared a resolution of inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining something authentic in relation to everything connected with the matter, so that we may know not only on whom to bestow thanks, but where to afford relief. This is a matter which properly belongs to the War Department. The men who were lost were soldiers, and the vessel was chartered by the War Department, and the vessels sent in search of it were sent by that Department. All the authentic information will be obtained from that Department. In consultation with the Secretary of War, I learned that within two or three days he expects to have full and authentic information on the whole subject. With the consent of the honorable Senator from Maryland, therefore, I wish to offer a resolution in lieu of his, calling for information. I do not wish to enter into any comment on the matter, because the information is not yet authentic, and we cannot yet act wisely, or perhaps justly, towards the parties engaged in the rescue of this vessel, or towards those who are accused of neglecting to render efficient aid, without having the whole authentic information before the body.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition of the Senator from Illinois is, to strike out all after the word "resolved" and insert

That the Secretary of War be requested to lay before the Senate all authentic information which he may possess in relation to the wreck of the steamer San Francisco, and the loss of life and property occasioned by this disaster, the means employed by the Department and otherwise for the rescue of the vessel and passengers, the number and situation of the survivors, and the nature and extent of the relief required by their calamitous condition.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, the considerations which the Senator from Illinois has stated to the Senate had prevented me from submitting a resolution for the direct action of the Senate. I made this a resolution of inquiry in its character, so that from its terms the committee would be enabled to make just such inquiries as the Senator proposes the Secretary of War shall be asked to make. I do not therefore see that it is very important; however, I am quite willing, if the Senate is anxious to substitute one for the other, that it may do so.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the resolution will pass as offered by the Senator from Maryland. The subject, that he proposes to refer to the Naval Committee has reference to the gallantry displayed by the commanders and crews of the vessels that relieved the persons on board the San Francisco. The Committee on Naval Affairs had this subject under consideration this morning, and has instructed one of its members to introduce a resolution from the committee covering the subject in the one under consideration. Presuming that that portion of the subject would pertain to the action of the committee, I am glad to see the Senator from Maryland entertains the same opinion, and has taken the initiative in this matter to instruct the committee to act.

There are several acts of legislation which, it seems to me, are required at the hands of Congress in connection with this great disaster, some of which should be matured by the Committee on Military Affairs, others by the Committee on Commerce; and what should be done in appreciation of the conduct of those on board of the vessels who relieved the sufferers on board the San Francisco, by the Naval Committee. There ought to be pensions granted to the heirs and legal representatives of those who were lost on that vessel, who were in the service of the United States. There ought to be additional pay granted to the officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers, who have been saved from the wreck.

I have been informed by an officer of the Army that they drew six months' pay in advance, to give themselves an outfit; all of which is lost, as well as their private baggage. The Government ought to provide for these sufferers by a liberal extra pay, to meet the actual loss they have thus sustained. I hope the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHIELDS] will confine his resolution to those questions which properly pertain to the action of the Military Committee, in granting extra pay; and that the chairman of the Committee on Commerce will take charge of such a portion as may pertain to that committee, in regard to the testimonials that should be given to the officers and crews of those ships. I think that the subject should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs; and I hope the Committee on Pensions will be instructed to report a bill giving pensions to the heirs or legal representatives of those persons in the service of the United States, who were lost by this terrible shipwreck.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have not the slightest objection to let the resolution of the Senator from Maryland go to the committee of which the Senator from California is chairman. The resolution which I was about to offer is one entirely different, because it is one covering the whole ground, and is one asking for authentic information in relation to the whole matter. Now, sir, I intended, in offering that resolution, to abstain from any comment, from a single observation either of thanks or otherwise, until we have full information before us. First, as to the nature of the disaster; second, as to the relief which the Government was able to furnish—and I understand that the Government was not able to furnish relief very promptly for the want of the proper kind of vessels—next, as to the relief afforded by private individuals; next, as to the number who were lost by the disaster; next, as to the survivors, their condition, and the character of the relief to be extended to them.

It is only information for this body that I ask for from the proper Department, now engaged in the collection of that information, having sent to the city of New York for officers, who are to be here in a day or two, to give all the information. That is all the object I had in view. It does not conflict with the resolution of the honorable Senator from Maryland; but I do not wish to commence bestowing thanks, or basing any action in this body upon newspaper report merely. I do not think any Senator ought to rise up here and single out any one individual, although I agree fully with the Senator from California, that if these reports be true, and this gallant Englishman, at the risk of his own life and vessel, lay by the side of the San Francisco for days, and rescued the survivors, he is entitled to the thanks of this country. But let us ascertain that fact authentically; let us not fly off here, as we often do, without having one particle of correct, authentic information. How can we distribute justice among these men, or how can we afford relief properly, without information? I want information immediately, and an officer is expected in this city to-night who can give that information. That is my object; but I do not desire to interfere with the proposition of the Senator from Maryland. Let that go to the committee; they will have enough to do, and I hope, as I am sure they will, do what is requisite, with great ability.

Mr. MASON. I understand that the two resolutions are entirely distinct. The resolution offered by the Senator from Maryland, provides for some appropriate testimonial on the part of Congress in honor of the gallantry and humanity which led those three vessels to the rescue of the survivors on the wreck. The object of the Senator from Illinois—and a very proper object—is to inquire and ascertain the facts, and see what other duties or obligations may devolve upon the Government.

Now, sir, I respond entirely and fully to what has fallen from the Senator from Maryland. This is an extraordinary occasion, and one which should be extraordinarily met. We have not full accounts, but we have facts which none can dispute, showing that the officers of these three vessels, although themselves disabled by the same storm, imperiled their own lives, and the vessels committed to them, in order to make this rescue; and they did it gallantly, by perseverance for days and nights. But I want to say this also: it strikes me forcibly that the resolution of the honorable Senator from Maryland should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; not from any choice between the two committees, but because it is the appropriate duty of that committee to make this acknowledgment. The San Francisco was chartered by the War Department; it was filled with troops of the United States, belonging to the War Department; the loss has occurred to that branch of the military service, and the acknowledgment, it seems to me, should come from it. The Secretary of War, under whose guidance this vessel was chartered, and the troops prepared to be sent abroad, I should think, would feel, very deeply feel, it a duty on his Department, and on him personally, to be responsible for that matter. The resolution of the Senator from Maryland goes only to some appropriate testimonial for the gallantry of the officers and crews of the three ships; and, with his permission, I would suggest that the reference should be changed to the Committee on Military Affairs, as properly belonging to that committee, instead of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

I would say, further, in reference to what has fallen from the Senator from California, that it will devolve upon this Government, and ought to devolve upon it, to make full remuneration for the losses which have been sustained by the officers and troops who were on board that ship, and who were survivors; and to provide, so far as may be right and proper for those who are left, and the families of those who are deceased. But we must do it with care and judgment to avoid a bad precedent hereafter. I am willing to go as far as any gentleman can go in making a suitable testimonial. I therefore think that if the honorable Senator from Illinois will withdraw his resolution for the present, and permit the resolution of the Senator from Maryland to go to his committee, it will be the proper reference. I say again, I do not suggest this from a desire to make any distinction between the two committees, but because it seems to me that the subject belongs more properly to the one than to the other.

Mr. GWIN. I have no pride about this subject, and no desire except to do justice to those parties for whose benefit the resolution is intended; but I will state to the Senator from Virginia, that he is mistaken in regard to the chartering of the San Francisco. The War Department shipped on board of it a portion of a regiment and provisions; but the vessel was open to other passengers, and received other passengers, and had other passengers on board. The great loss has fallen, it is true, on the officers from that regiment, because a majority of the passengers belonged to it. The vessel, I repeat, was not chartered by the War Department; it was open to other passengers as other vessels were; but inasmuch as this pertains to the ocean, and the subject has been brought before the Committee on Naval Affairs this morning by other members—not by myself—I thought it was an appropriate reference, or I should have said nothing on the resolution of the Senator from Maryland. But as this is one of the smallest portions of the duty imposed on Congress, in consequence of this disaster—the making a complimentary return to the officers and crews of those ships who gallantly rescued our officers—it is a matter immaterial to me where it shall go.

Mr. SHIELDS. It is wholly so to me; and I hope the Senator from Virginia will permit the resolution to remain as it stands. I agree with my honorable friend from Virginia, that this matter properly belongs to the military department; but it matters very little to which committee it goes. I will therefore withdraw my amendment, and permit a vote to be taken upon the resolution of the Senator from Maryland, and submit mine afterwards, as an independent proposition.

Mr. MASON. I understand that the Senator from Maryland has modified his resolution so as to make the reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope not.

Mr. MASON. I hope, with all respect to the chairman of that committee, that it will be done.

Mr. PEARCE. It is of course a subject indifferent to me, whether the resolution goes to the Committee on Military Affairs, or the Committee on Naval Affairs. I believe that I should have acquiesced in the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia, but I find that the Senator from Illinois, who is chairman of that committee, does not wish it to go to his committee; for that reason I decline to alter the reference.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to make a single suggestion. I understand from the Senator from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, that he has had a communication on this subject with the War Department. He has stated so to the Senate. It then appears to the Senate that the War Department has already instituted inquiry upon this subject, and the information to be communicated must come through that Department; and when that much is announced to us—that the Secretary of War has already taken the initiative on this subject—it necessarily must be under his official cognizance that we are to receive the information; and it, therefore, does seem to me that both parliamentary courtesy and propriety require that the subject should go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

I do not intend to go into some of the topics which have been touched upon here; but the information which shall be afforded may disclose much that we know nothing of, and may touch delicate questions of obligation upon the part of this Government—may touch, sir, the liabilities of the owners of the vessel; and I have no doubt that it will show a very different degree of merit, so far as regards the conduct of the different officers whom we intend to honor. It is presumed—and I hope very properly presumed—that they are entitled to all that has been indicated; but how far the owners of the vessel may be subject to liability, I cannot undertake to say. That will depend upon the information furnished, and upon the severe judgment of the Senate. In connection, however, with that, I must say, whatever may be the liability of the vessel, I cannot withhold here the common opinion which was expressed towards its captain—Captain Watkins. Sir, the nine cheers which were given to him on that occasion were the best language that can be pronounced on any occasion so far as regards himself.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I have only one regret in connection with this subject—that on a resolution, offered under such circumstances, and with such purposes, there should appear to be any difference of opinion in the Senate. I do not think it a matter of much importance whether the resolution be directed to the Committee on Naval Affairs, or the Committee on Military Affairs. It would be very proper for either committee. Nor do I think that the consideration should at all influence us that the Secretary of War has instituted inquiries for the purpose of ascertaining the facts of the case. Our committee can obtain the information, wherever it should be. Even if in itself it were a little more desirable that the Military Committee should have been named, I would not, for one, alter the resolution from what it is as offered. With regard to the relative amount of merit, what may be the relative meritorious services rendered by the different persons connected with the achievement, there is nothing in the resolution prejudging it.

It is a simple direction to the Committee on Naval Affairs to inquire what would be a proper acknowledgment of those services in respect to the several parties connected with them. If the Committee on Naval Affairs find that no acknowledgment is due to any one of them, they will say so; if they find that more is due to one than to another, they will say so. I think it is a great deal better, therefore, though in itself not a matter of much importance, to pass the resolution as it is offered.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President, I did not intend to occupy a moment of the precious time of the Senate this morning by any remarks; but it seems to me that these resolutions are distinct, and present separate duties for the respective committees contemplated in them. It will be a matter of some labor for each committee to examine all the facts connected with the case. It will occupy some time on the part of the Committee on Naval Affairs. It will also occupy much time on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs, if the resolution of the honorable Senator from Illinois be referred to it. If I understand it, they are distinct in their character, and separate entirely in the purpose which dictates them. In the first place, the proposition was to inquire what honor was due to the civilians, or maritime gentlemen, who interfered in the rescue and salvation of the crew, and to relieve, if possible, the vessel. It is to ascertain what honor, on the part of this Government, would be considered either complimentary or remunerative to them. That is one distinct branch of the subject, and I think a very important one; for we have no example of a case so extraordinary as this—as to the fidelity of purpose with which these mercantile gentlemen lay to, surrounded the wreck, and rescued the crew. I believe, therefore, that some honor worthy of this Government, worthy of the humanity, and worthy of the daring gallantry of these men, ought to be rendered to them. Whatever remuneration is necessary to be made to the soldiers on board, and whatever provision is necessary to be made for them, or for the survivors, and the heirs of those who perished, is another distinct part of the subject, separated and disconnected from the other entirely.

By referring these subjects to different committees they will have an opportunity of making more rapid progress, and the consequence will be, that it will meet with more ready dispatch. We shall thus show the promptitude of this Government on occasions of this kind, in giving expression to its sense of obligation, and how it feels for the generous conduct of those who rescued the ill-fated beings who were found on that wreck. It will show that this Government is never laggard in discharging its duty as the representative of a generous people; for whatever may be the action, no matter how generous and liberal towards those who are to be remunerated for their conduct, or whatever may be the expression of Congress, I am satisfied that the American people will cheerfully respond to it. Well, sir, believing that it will hasten the objects contemplated in this resolution more rapidly by referring the resolution of the honorable gentleman from Maryland to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the other to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that it will not be offering disrespect to either the Navy or the War Departments, but will be simplifying matters and presenting them to the Senate more clearly, with less delay, and enable them to ascertain with more dispatch, and perhaps with equal justice, in the end, I am in favor of referring the resolution of the gentleman from Maryland to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the resolution of the Senator from Illinois to the Committee on Military Affairs. These are the views which I entertain. I insist that they are right. I have confidence in the capacity and investigating powers and industry of both committees; and I hope they will harmonize in their acts. In my humble opinion, this matter, to some extent, concerns the public honor.

The question was then taken on the resolution; and it was adopted unanimously.

Mr. SHIELDS. I now offer my proposition as a distinct resolution, and hope it will be considered at this time.

The resolution, as inserted above, was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

NEBRASKA TERRITORY.

Mr. DIXON stated to the Senate, that when the bill to establish a territorial government in the Territory of Nebraska should come up for consideration, he should offer the following amendment:

Sec. 22. And he it further enacted, That so much of the 8th section of an act approved March 6, 1820, entitled "An act to authorize the people of the Missouri Territory to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to prohibit slavery in certain Territories," as declares "That in all that territory ceded by France to the United States, under the name of Louisiana, which lies north of 35 degrees 30 minutes north latitude, slavery and involuntary servitude, otherwise than in the punishment of crimes whereof the parties shall have been duly convicted, shall be forever prohibited," shall not be so construed as to apply to the Territory contemplated by this act, or to any other Territory of the United States; but that the citizens of the several States or Territories shall be at liberty to take and hold their slaves within any of the Territories of the United States, or of the States to be formed therefrom, as if the said act, entitled as aforesaid, and approved as aforesaid, had never been passed.

That Senators might be afforded an opportunity to consider it, he moved that the amendment be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that it had passed the bill from the Senate to regulate the disbursement of the contingent fund of the Senate, and for other purposes, with various amendments, in which it asked the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill, on motion by Mr. HUNTER, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, that it had passed a bill to secure the rights of citizenship to the children of citizens born out of the limits of the United States. Also, that it had passed the bill from the Senate to continue in force the act entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California," and for other purposes.

Also, that it had passed a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Arkansas into two judicial districts," approved March 3, 1851.

Also, that it had passed Senate bill changing the name of the American-built steamer Falcon to that of Queen City; and had rejected the bill prescribing the manner of appointing the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT, pro tempore appointed Mr. ALLEN an additional member of the Committee on Pensions, in accordance with a motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, adopted January 5, 1854.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. GWIN presented the petition of the Sacramento, Auburn, and Nevada Railroad Company, praying the right of way and a donation of land in aid of the construction of their railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a petition of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the first regiment of New York volunteers during the war with Mexico, praying to be allowed extra pay while on service in California; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of the heirs of Joseph Pomroy, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PETTIT presented the memorial of the Ohio Falls Marine Railroad Company, praying the aid of the United States in the construction of a marine railway for the transportation of steamboats around the Falls of the Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. HUNTER presented the memorial of the Southern Baptist Convention, praying that stipulations may be made in our treaties with foreign countries to secure religious toleration to American citizens who may be resident therein; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented the petition of inspectors of the customs and agents of the revenue at Philadelphia, praying an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FOOT presented the memorial of Captain Hiram B. Sawyer, of the Navy, praying to be restored to the pension roll, and allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON presented the petition of R. M. Walsh, praying compensation for services as Charge d'Affaires at Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, a petition of the officers of the penitentiary for the District of Columbia, praying an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented the petition of the administrator of J. Dickerhoof, a soldier in the war with Mexico, praying a pension on account of disease contracted in the service; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented the petition of E. Mayne, county judge of Van Buren county, Iowa, praying that that county may be reimbursed an amount of money expended for the benefit of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. COOPER gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill making a grant of land to the State of Pennsylvania for purposes of internal improvement, and to establish and endow a normal school for the education of teachers.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, it was Ordered, That the petition of Elizabeth R. Drane, widow of Anthony Drane, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, it was Ordered, That the documents on the files of the Senate relating to the claim of William S. Waller, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, it was Ordered, That the documents on the files of the Senate relating to the claim of John P. Duvall, be referred to the Committee on Territories.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, it was Ordered, That the documents on the files of the Senate relating to the claim of John G. Camp, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion by Mr. EVANS, it was Ordered, That the memorial of the heirs and executors of Samuel Proileau be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. THOMPSON, of New Jersey, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Mary F. R. Levely be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. WILLIAMS, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Charles Stearns be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

VERMONT SENATORSHIP.

Mr. PETTIT. The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the resolution in reference to the right of the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS to a seat in the Senate, has had the same under consideration, and has directed me to submit a report. I am also requested to present a paper in connection with it, expressing the views of the minority. While I am up, I will ask that the report accompanying the papers lie upon the table, and be printed; and that the subject be set down for consideration for Wednesday next. I am so directed by the committee which has had the subject under consideration. I therefore move that the report and the accompanying papers be printed, and that the consideration of the subject be postponed until Wednesday next, and made the special order for that day.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the proceedings of a meeting, in the city of Philadelphia, of the soldiers of 1812, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Pamela Brown, widow of the late Major General Jacob Brown, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for her relief. The bill was read a first time and ordered to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill to divide the State of Ohio into two judicial districts, and for other purposes, reported it back with several amendments.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported a bill "providing for the payment for the printing of the returns of the Seventh Census, and for the paper purchased for said printing;" which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the following bills; which were severally read a first time and ordered to a second reading:

"A bill to increase the present military establishment of the United States, and for other purposes;"

"A bill to regulate the pay and increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes;" and

"A bill to promote the efficiency of the Army by retiring disabled officers."

Mr. CHASE, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to which was referred the petition of John Thomas, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ADAMS. The Committee on Retrenchment and Reform, under the reform portion of its duties, has had under consideration the petition of the clerks in the Executive Departments, asking an increase of compensation, and has directed me to report a bill to amend the third section of the "act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending 30th June, 1854, and for other purposes."

The bill was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

COMPENDIUM OF THE SEVENTH CENSUS.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Committee on Printing has directed me to offer the following resolution; which I ask may be considered at this time:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate, — thousand copies of a compendium of the Seventh Census, to be arranged by the Superintendent of the Census, embracing the population by towns and counties; the ratio tables of population; tables of nativities, births, marriages, and deaths; of the deaf, dumb, blind, insane, and idiotic; of schools and colleges; of aggregates of occupations; of churches; of newspapers and libraries; and of agricultural products; with illustrative notes and comparative tables: Provided, The said compendium shall be printed in royal octavo form, and not exceed four hundred pages.

Mr. GWIN. What is the number of copies proposed to be printed?

Mr. HAMLIN. The number is left blank in the resolution. I may state that the House of Representatives has ordered one hundred thousand copies of this abstract to be printed. If the Senate shall order an edition of twenty thousand copies it will cost $7,873. An edition of thirty thousand will cost but $10,717. As the number increases the comparative cost diminishes.

Mr. BADGER. Then let us have thirty thousand copies.

Mr. HAMLIN. Fifty thousand copies will cost about $14,000.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the blank will be filled with fifty thousand, as the additional cost is very small. I make a motion to fill the blank with "fifty."

Mr. BADGER. That is even better than thirty thousand.

Mr. DAWSON. I would inquire what abstract it is that is to be printed?

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Senator had given his attention to the reading of the resolution, it would answer his question as well, if not better than I can. It specifies precisely what the abstract shall contain. It is, I think, if I may be allowed the expression of an opinion, the best abstract that can be obtained from the work, and will be contained in an octavo volume of four hundred pages—one hundred less than the document which I hold in my hand, the size of which Senators can see.

Mr. DAWSON. Has it yet been compiled?

Mr. HAMLIN. It is, by the terms of the resolution, to be compiled by the present Superintendent, but the resolution specifies of what it is to be composed.

Mr. DAWSON. I am aware of that; but the point which I wish to suggest is, whether it would not be better that the abstract should be presented in manuscript to the committee, and an order afterwards made for its publication.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The resolution specifies of what the abstract shall be composed.

Mr. DAWSON. But we do not know whether it will come out right or not. One abstract has already been published.

Mr. BADGER. We must take it on trust.

The motion to fill the blank with "fifty" was agreed to; and the resolution, as thus amended, was adopted.

CAPTAIN INGRAHAM.

Mr. GWIN. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the House joint resolution of thanks of Congress, and the presentation of a medal to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham, has requested me to report it back without amendment. The committee has also instructed me to ask the Senate to put it on its passage at this time. It is a short resolution, and I presume there can be no objection to it.

The resolution was read, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to submit an amendment to that resolution, but I do not desire to have the subject brought up now. It is past the hour of one o'clock, and I think it unfair to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] to proceed with this matter now.

Mr. CASS. Certainly it is.

Mr. BADGER. I therefore move to postpone the further consideration of the joint resolution until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion submitted by Mr. Cass on the 5th instant, to refer to the Committee on Foreign Relations the message of the President of the United States received on the 3d instant, communicating, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of December 12, 1853, the correspondence which had taken place with the British Government on subjects growing out of the treaty of Washington of July 4, 1850, since the message of the President of December 30, 1852.

Mr. CLAYTON continued his reply to Mr. Cass, which he commenced on Thursday last.

Mr. CASS briefly responded when the Senator from Delaware concluded.

Mr. CLAYTON rejoined, and after a few words from Mr. CASS,

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the subject was laid upon the table.

[See Appendix for this debate.]

THE SAN FRANCISCO.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, informing the Senate that the House had adopted a joint resolution authorizing the appointment of a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress, to consider and report on the form of acknowledgment

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 17, 1854.

NEW SERIES...No. 12.

due to the officers and crews of the several ships which rendered assistance to the passengers, officers, and crew of the steamer San Francisco.

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, it seems to me that that resolution cannot be passed and become a law, unless it goes to the President for his approval. A joint resolution has to go through the forms of law, and be signed by the President. We can therefore take no action on the resolution, unless it can be amended under our rules in such a manner as to provide that such committee as may be appointed by the Senate may have intercourse with the committee to be ordered by the House, to consider the subject jointly. I certainly think that the resolution cannot be passed without the signature of the President of the United States; and I leave it to the Senate to decide what disposition shall be made of it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would suggest that it would be better to refer it to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think the reference is unnecessary. I have prepared an amendment which, I hope, will relieve the resolution of the objection which the honorable Senator from California has raised, and which, perhaps, is well founded. I move to strike out all after the word "Resolved," and insert the following:

That a committee of five members on the part of the Senate be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to inquire and report in what form the acknowledgments of Congress and the gratitude of the nation may be most appropriately expressed to those benevolent and courageous men who, under Providence, were the means of rescuing from death so many citizens of this Republic.

The PRESIDENT stated the question to be upon the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. After consultation with several Senators, I understand that it is incompetent for the Senate to convert a resolution, which is originally joint, into a separate one by its own action. If that be the case, all that we can do in this instance is to lay the joint resolution of the House on the table, and to pass, as an independent proposition, the resolution which I have offered. I therefore withdraw my amendment, and move that the resolution which we have received from the House do lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. I now offer my resolution as a substantive proposition, instead of as an amendment.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, January 16, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication received from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report giving information of the expenses incurred by the United States in consequence of the impediments to the navigation of Red river, accompanied by a report from the Quartermaster General in regard to certain expenses of the Army.

The SPEAKER. The question is on a reference of the communication and report.

Mr. BISSELL. Is it on reference of the message from the War Department?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BISSELL. Then I move its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BISSELL. I amend my motion. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The motion to refer to the Committee on Military Affairs is withdrawn, and the motion now is that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and that it be printed.

It was so ordered.

Mr. FLORENCE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The pending question the Chair will state to the House. It is to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. CHURCHWELL] in regard to the duty on railroad iron, on the table. It is a privileged proposition, and no other motion can be in order except to adjourn.

SUFFERERS ON THE SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. BISSELL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for the introduction of a bill for the purpose of referring it to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a very important bill, requiring immediate action. I will read the title of the bill, and I think that no gentleman will offer any objection to it:

"A bill for the relief of the citizens of the United States who are sufferers by the recent disasters on board the steamship San Francisco."

I hope there is no objection to letting that bill be put on its passage.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move an amendment to that proposition.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House—if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] will excuse me—to introduce a resolution which will make room for his, and which has a concurrent action.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] addressed the Chair; but the Chair has not yet heard what the gentleman proposes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to ask the permission of the House to offer a resolution in my place; which, if the Chair will allow me, I will read.

Mr. BISSELL. I believe my proposition is first entitled to consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BISSELL. The bill is brief, and I ask that it may be read.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the bill will be read.

No objection was made, and the bill was read for information, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be paid, under the direction of the President, to each of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates who, on the — day of December, 1854, embarked at New York, under orders for California, on the steamship San Francisco, and who was on board that vessel on the occasion of her recent disaster at sea, a sum equal in amount to his pay and allowances for four months.

And he it further enacted, That if any such officer, non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, shall have died before the passage of this act, from any cause consequent upon said disaster, his widow, if one survive him, and if not, then his children, if any there be, shall be paid the same sum to which he would otherwise have been entitled under the provisions of this act.

Mr. BISSELL. I wish to say one word upon the bill, and one word only.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman will proceed.

No objection was made.

Mr. BISSELL. As there seems to be no objection to the introduction of the bill, I will simply move to refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs, and will detain the House no longer.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House to read a resolution which I propose to offer to the House.

No objection was made; and the resolution was read by Mr. CHANDLER, as follows:

Whereas information has been received that more than five hundred citizens, many of them officers and soldiers of the Army of the United States, on board the steamship San Francisco, have been saved from death by the gallant, perilous, and merciful interposition of the officers and crew of the British ship Three Bells, and of the American ship Antarctic and bark Kilby, after a severe gale on the Atlantic ocean, by which the San Francisco was utterly disabled, and nearly two hundred persons had miserably perished:

And whereas it is becoming a Republic to cherish the lives of its citizens, and especially to make appropriate acknowledgments of the obligation conferred by those who, at the imminent peril of property and life, rescue from certain destruction the persons of those citizens, and particularly the special servants of the nation:

Be it resolved, (the Senate concurring) That a joint special committee, to consist of nine persons on the part of the House of Representatives, and of — persons on the part of the Senate, be appointed, and instructed to inquire and to report in what form the acknowledgments of Congress and the gratitude of the nation may be most appropriately expressed to those benevolent and courageous men, who, under Providence, were the means of rescuing from death so many citizens of this Republic.

Mr. CUTTING. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] whether he would have any objections to send to the committee which shall be charged with the consideration of his resolution, a resolution that they shall make a further inquiry and report thereon to this House, to this effect? That it is unbecoming this Government to allow the owners and masters of the merchant ships which were hove to, to lose their time in taking on board these unfortunate men, and in transporting them to a place of safety, without awarding to them the same reasonable compensation that would be paid if a bargain had been made? It is not fitting that this Republic should have her officers and soldiers transported gratis, without paying a proper remuneration.

I ask the gentleman whether, if I read the resolutions, he will adopt them as his own. I do this, not from my own suggestion, but in conformity with letters received from citizens of New York, and in deference to those gentlemen. With the consent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will offer the resolutions.

I had supposed that the Committee on Military Affairs was the proper one to take this matter under consideration, and to whom this subject should be referred. I will read the resolutions which I have drawn up.

The resolutions were then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the said joint committee be requested to inquire and report whether some provision, by way of pension, or otherwise, ought not to be made in favor of the widows—or if no widows—in favor of the minor children of those officers and men who were embarked by order of the Government on board of the steamer San Francisco, and who were deprived of life while in the service of their country, by the perils they encountered after leaving the port of New York, on their way to California. And that the said committee do also inquire and report whether an indemnity ought not to be provided in favor of those officers and men in the service of the Government, whose baggage and effects were lost, or damaged, on board of the said steamer, by the accidents and perils of the voyage.

Resolved, That the committee do also report to this House some suitable mode of testifying to Captain Creighton, of the British ship Three Bells, and to his officers and crew, and to the masters, officers, and crews of the bark Kilby, and the ship Antarctic, the appreciation by Congress of their humane, persevering, and gallant conduct, by which, under Providence, so many American citizens were rescued by them from the wreck of the San Francisco.

Resolved, That the said committee do also inquire and report whether compensation or indemnity ought not to be made by this Government to the owners and masters of the ships Three Bells, Antarctic, Lucy Thompson, and the bark Kilby, for services rendered, and for losses and expenses incurred by them in saving, and transporting to a place of safety, the officers and men in the service of the United States, who were rescued from the wreck of the aforesaid steamer.

Mr. FLORENCE. If my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] will yield me the floor for one moment, I have some resolutions in regard to this subject which I desire to present for the consideration of the House.

Mr. COBB. How many others are there?

Mr. FLORENCE. I am responsible for these only. I desire, if a committee should be raised, that the resolutions which I hold in my hand, and which I will read for the information of the House, may be referred to such committee.

The resolutions were then read, as follows:

Whereas, a distressing calamity has occurred in the disaster which befell the steamer San Francisco on her recent voyage to California, in which vessel was being conveyed officers and troops of the United States, with their families, and by which disaster nearly or quite two hundred souls found a watery grave; and

Whereas, it is right and proper, when such an event happens, eliciting, as it has, the sympathy of the whole nation for the sufferers, and appalling entire communities by the painful suspense which for a period of ten days has hung over the fate of those on board the ill-starred vessel, that suitable action should be had by an American Congress, in consideration of the gallant and heroic conduct of those who, governed by the generous impulses of brave hearts, risked their lives, and periled the safety of the vessels in which they were embarked, in affording comfort and succor to the officers, crew, and passengers of the San Francisco, by which act of daring and praiseworthy humanity five hundred souls were saved from an awful and painful death which stared them in the face, and to which, but for such providential intervention, they would have soon been hastened: Be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sincere and heartfelt thanks of an American Congress are extended to those gallant men who commanded the American bark Kilby, the British ship Three Belis, and the American ship Antarctic, for their heroic, humane, and gallant conduct, as displayed in their untiring efforts to restore to their friends and country the unfortunate persons for whose safety the liveliest interest has been felt wherever the disaster to the steamship San Francisco has been made known.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be authorized and requested to have suitable medals struck off, commemorative of this sad event, to be presented, with copies of these resolutions, to all who were engaged in the act of safety afforded to the officers and troops of the United States.

Resolved, That in view of the sad effects of the calamity to the San Francisco, and the pecuniary loss sustained by the survivors and those who met a watery grave, the Secretary of War is instructed to afford such relief to the survivors and their families, as shall, in his judgment, seem to be just and proper; and report such action, at an early period, to this Congress.

Pending the reading of the above, Mr. WALSH, rising to a point of order, said: There is so much noise in this part of the Hall that I cannot possibly pay proper attention to those soul-thrilling resolutions.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must resume their seats, and preserve order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I accept the addition suggested by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUTTING.]

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow all these propositions to be referred at once to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOUSTON. That would be the best reference.

Mr. CHANDLER. Oh, no; we want a special committee. The Committee on Military Affairs has nothing to do with the subject.

Mr. FAULKNER. This subject has already in one form been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUTTING] directly calls for the action of that committee in another and more extended form. I suggest, therefore, whether it would not be better to let the whole subject go before them, and let them make an early report upon it.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is necessary that it should go to a joint committee, and there is no joint committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a point of order. I hold that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has no right to yield the floor to others for the purpose of reading essays on the subject, nor has he a right to yield it for the purpose of debate, nor has he a right to debate himself. If he will present the question upon his own proposition, disconnected from any proposition to pay for services, and to give pensions, and all that sort of thing, I shall vote for it very cordially; if not, I am in favor of the reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FLORENCE. I call the gentleman from Ohio to order.

Mr. BISSELL. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me a moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BISSELL. I only desire to make a single remark. I wish to say that it is clothing and food that these poor fellows want; and they want them now. They arrived in New York without a change of clothing, with icicles dangling from their garments. They want food; they want clothing immediately. They have drawn three months' extra pay, and used it up. I think that when we have attended to the matter of supplying them with food and clothing, that we may then, if we choose, adopt the resolutions giving medals and votes of thanks.

Mr. CAMPBELL. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will remark—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think that gentlemen are taking too much advantage of my good nature this morning.

At the request of several members, Mr. CHANDLER's proposition was again read.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move, Mr. Speaker, a reference of the whole subject to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that my proposition will not take that course. In the first place, the Committee on Military Affairs is not a joint committee; and in the next place, it does not officially and professionally know anything about the risks which have been incurred—not only risk of life, but imminent risk of property—and of danger incurred by violation of charters and things of that kind. All this should go before a special committee. I move, therefore, that the resolution be adopted. I accept, as a modification of my proposition, if it be thought proper, the resolutions which were read by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUTTING.]

At the request of several members, and by unanimous consent, the resolutions of Mr. CUTTING were again read.

Mr. HAMILTON. In my judgment, this whole subject should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Will the Chair be pleased to state whether the resolutions are before the House for consideration?

The SPEAKER. They are before the House by its unanimous consent.

Mr. CHANDLER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CUTTING] authorizes me to say that he withdraws his resolutions, which were accepted by me as a modification of my proposition.

Mr. CUTTING. I desire my resolutions to go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the previous question on the adoption of my resolution.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I would appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his call for the previous question but a single moment.

[Cries of "Withdraw!" "Hold on to the call!" &c.]

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I move that all of the resolutions presented touching this question be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It was my purpose to have requested that they be sent to the Committee on Commerce, and therefore had prepared a couple of resolutions with that view. I know that the patience of the House is now exhausted on the subject; but, if it be the general pleasure, I will read them.

[Cries of "Read, read!" "Object, object!"]

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I can only assure gentlemen that they are infinitely briefer than any of those which have already been presented.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objecting to the reading of the resolutions will please rise in his place and object.

Mr. LETCHER. I object to the reading of the resolutions.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not withdrawn my call for the previous question.

Mr. WALSH. I simply desire to ask a question for information. Will the motion which has just been made carry all of the propositions to the Committee on Military Affairs?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CUTTING] has withdrawn so much of the proposition as was included in the proposition presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] as he himself presented; so that the resolutions originally offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, are alone before the House, and upon their adoption the previous question has been called, which cuts off all amendments and all debate.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I understood that the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdrew his call for the previous question in my favor.

The SPEAKER. He declined doing so.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. WALSH. I desire to make a remark.

Mr. CHANDLER took the floor.

The SPEAKER. Is it the unanimous consent of the House that suggestions be made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania or the gentleman from New York touching the matter now under consideration?

[Cries all over the House of "No!" "No!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is then compelled to rule everything out of order until action has been taken on the call for the previous question.

Mr. WALSH said, (amidst much confusion:) If I understood the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. FLORENCE,] it proposed that, besides votes of thanks and medals, copies of his resolutions should be presented. Now, sir, I am opposed to accompanying an act of charity with the infliction of the reading of all those resolutions.

Mr. ORR. I trust that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow a motion to be made to refer this whole matter to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. CHANDLER. I decline to withdraw my call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. No discussion; no motion is in order, and the Chair must hold gentlemen to the rules.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. Has my colleague [Mr. CUTTING] entirely withdrawn his resolutions?

The SPEAKER. He has.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] then to allow my resolutions to be attached to his own by way of amendment?

Mr. FAULKNER. I rise to inquire whether my proposition to refer this whole subject to the Committee on Military Affairs does not take precedence of the call for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It does not, for the reason that, at the moment the gentleman proposed to submit the motion, the gentleman from Pennsylvania was upon the floor; which the Chair stated at the time.

Mr. FAULKNER. He, however, yielded the floor to me, as the Chair is aware.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, as the Chair understood at the moment, declined to yield the floor. There was a good deal of confusion at the time.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a point of order, which is, that this whole debate is out of order, the previous question having been demanded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is quite right. No further proposition is in order, nor any further debate. As many, therefore, as second the demand for the previous question, will rise.

Mr. ORR demanded a count; and there were—ayes 105, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded; and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the resolution; and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. HAMILTON. I now call for the regular order of business.

Mr. DEAN. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question.

Mr. DEAN. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay that motion upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. HAMILTON, and it was agreed to.

DUTIES ON RAILROAD IRON.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the following resolution, which will be read by the Clerk:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be requested to report a bill giving a credit of four years to railroad companies, to pay duty upon iron imported by them for railroad purposes.

The SPEAKER. Upon the adoption of this resolution the previous question was demanded and ordered; and a motion was then made to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. Upon the motion to lay the resolution upon the table I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to suggest to my colleague the propriety of so modifying his resolution as to instruct the committee to inquire into the propriety of such a resolution. This resolution, with the whole subject of the tariff, has been referred to that committee, and I think it would be quite as well—

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to this debate. We have already two resolutions before the House, and the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. JONES. Will my colleague take a suggestion from me?

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I would gratify my colleague, but the Committee on Ways and Means have before them now two resolutions of the character of his proposition.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order; and even suggestions cannot be permitted, if objection is made, under the previous question.

The roll was called; and there were—yeas 98, nays 91; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barry, Belcher, Benson, Boyce, Bridges, Caruthers, Chandler, Clark, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Curtis, Cutting, Thos. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Drum, Edgerton, Edmonds, Ellison, Everhart, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Hastings, Haven, Hibbard, Goodrich, Grow, Hamilton, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Houston, Howe, Ingersoll, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Jones, George W. Jones, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsley, McCulloch, Macdonald, McNaair, Matton, Meacham, Middlesworth, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Andrew Oliver, Packer, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Pringle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rowe, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Seymour, Shower, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Stratton, Straub, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Waller, Walsh, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—98.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Banks, Barksdale, Benton, Bissell, Bocock, Breckinridge, Brooks, Campbell, Chamberlain, Chase, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Craig, Cullom, John G. Davis, De Witt, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edmondson, English, Etheridge, Ewing, Giddings, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hendricks, Henna, Hill, Hunt, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Knox, Lane, Latham, Lindley, McQuinn, McQuinn, Mace, Macy, Maurice, Maxwell, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Riddle, Rogers, Ruffin, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Samuel A. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hestor L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Yates, and Zollcoffer—91.

So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his privileged question.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to move a reconsideration of the vote just taken, by which the resolution was laid on the table; and that the latter motion be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I propose the following resolution, and move to suspend the rules in order to enable me to offer it: The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That House bill No. 1, "to encourage agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, and all other branches of industry, and for granting to every man who is the head of a family and a citizen of the United States a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, on condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same for the period herein specified, and to graduate and reduce the price of public lands;" and House bill No. 37, "a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting to every man who is the head of a family and a citizen of the United States a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, on condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same for the period herein specified," be the special order of the day in the order in which they were reported to the House, for Tuesday, 14th of February next, and for each successive day (private bill days excepted) till disposed of.

Resolved, That all debate upon said special order or bills shall terminate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, at three o'clock p. m., on Tuesday, the 21st of February next, when the committee shall proceed to vote on the pending amendments, such as may be offered to said bills; after which the committee shall rise and report to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair proposes that, by unanimous consent, the House take a single vote on the adoption of the resolution, if carried by two-thirds.

A MEMBER. I object.

The SPEAKER. If the resolutions were carried by a vote of two thirds it would work a suspension of the rules. The gentleman might object, at any rate. I only mention it for the convenience of the House.

The question was then put on the motion to suspend the rules, and the Speaker announced 102 votes in the affirmative.

Mr. COBB. I move that the yeas and nays be called, on the motion to suspend.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The roll was then called, and there were—yeas 138, nays 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton,

Banks, Belcher, Benton, Bissell, Breckinridge, Bridges, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Cullom, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Disney, Drum, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Elliott, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Farley, Fenton, Florence, Giddings, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Andrew J. Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Hendricks, Henna, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Knox, Kurtz, Lane, Latham, Lilly, Lindley, Lindsley, Lyon, McCulloch, McDonald, McMullin, McNair, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Maxwell, Mayall, Meacham, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Packer, Parker, Peck, Phelps, Robbins, Rowe, Russell, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Simmons, Skelton, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer—138.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Aiken, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Benson, Bocock, Brooks, Clingman, Colquitt, Craig, Crocker, Dickinson, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edmonds, Faulkner, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Goode, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Haven, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Lamb, Letcher, McQueen, Millson, Morrison, Orr, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Reese, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Walley, and Daniel B. Wright—53.

So the rules were suspended, two thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I now introduce the resolution which has been read, and ask the previous question upon its adoption.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman proposes to terminate debate upon this bill at a particular time. The Committee of the Whole have not yet considered it; and I think, according to precedent, the House cannot close debate upon a bill until it has been considered in the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order, as the suggestion would interfere with the object of the resolution to suspend the rules.

Mr. JONES. We are now acting under a suspension of the rules.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The main question being, "Shall the resolution be adopted?"

Mr. HILLYER called for the yeas and nays thereon.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was then, taken and decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. JONES moved to reconsider the vote last taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER presented the following resolution, which was read by the Clerk:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency and practicability of establishing a branch of the Military Academy of the United States at the Hermitage, in the State of Tennessee.

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolution, and there were on a division—yeas 38, noes not counted.

So the resolution was rejected.

HALF PAY TO WIDOWS, ETC.

Mr. READY, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions:

"A bill to amend the several acts of Congress allowing and continuing to widows of deceased officers and soldiers of the United States half pay, in certain cases, for a specified time."

STEAM FRIGATES.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER offered a resolution, which was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Resolved, That the House bill (No. 52) entitled "A bill to authorize the construction of six first-class steamers, and for other purposes," be made the special order of the day, in the Committee of the Whole, for Thursday, the 19th day of January instant, and for each successive day thereafter, private bill days excepted, until the same shall be concluded.

Mr. BOCK. That resolution has been offered by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Zollcoffer] at my request. I have nothing to say at this stage of the proceedings, but I hope the House will make it a special order, for the time specified in the resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would like to have the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Bocock], if he intends to press that matter, make some limitation as to the time in which it shall be disposed of; for when debate of that character arises everything else is cut off.

Mr. BOCK. I am perfectly willing to agree to any reasonable limitation that the gentleman may ask for, but it can be done at any time.

When the House goes into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill, if there is anything like a disposition upon the part of the committee to spend too much time in its consideration, a resolution can be offered by the gentleman from Alabama, or any other gentleman, to limit the debate. Such a resolution can be offered at any time.

Mr. HOUSTON. My friend knows very well that the proper time to close debate upon any subject is before the steam gets up. When we once get under way in the discussion of a matter like this it is almost impossible to limit debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call both of the gentlemen to order.

Mr. WHEELER. I object to the introduction of the resolution. The gentleman from Tennessee has already offered one resolution.

The SPEAKER. The objection comes too late.

Mr. BISSELL. I do not wish to debate this matter, but merely desire to say that I am not aware there is any reason why such peculiar privilege should be given to this bill.

The question was then taken upon the adoption of the resolution; and there were—yeas 66, noes not counted; so the rules were not suspended.

THE DISPOSITION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to offer the following resolutions.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Whereas, in the opinion of this House the true policy of the Government of the United States, in disposing of the public lands, requires that they should be disposed of in such manner as best to facilitate the settlement thereof, and the commercial interests of the nation: And whereas, in the judgment of this House both of these important ends will be best attained by granting donations of land to actual settlers, and by making such appropriations thereof, to aid in the construction of such railroads as are of a leading national character, as may come clearly within the exercise of the constitutional powers of the General Government—to which class of railroads we think these belong—which shall extend from the States lying on the east side of the Rocky Mountains, to those which are, or hereafter may be, organized on the west side of said mountains: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill to the House, embracing the following features, to wit:

1. To provide for the prosecution of such surveys by the General Government, of railroad routes to commercial points in the States and Territories on the west side of the Rocky Mountains, as may already have been commenced; and such additional surveys as may be necessary to determine the practicability of constructing one or more railroads of the character above described, and for the completion of such surveys to the perfection and establishment of railroad lines permanently, not exceeding three in number, on the most practicable, suitable and direct routes aforesaid.

2. To provide for a grant, by donation, of one hundred and sixty acres of land, to be selected in quarter sections, equal to four quarter sections, out of each three sections, to each actual settler, within forty miles on each side of the railroads hereinafter mentioned, in such manner as the President may direct, with the proper restrictions as to the time of settlement and cultivation, the character of persons who may avail themselves of such grants, and the mode of perfecting such grants, and such other provisions as may be deemed necessary to give each settler a permanent homestead.

3. To provide for the incorporation of companies upon such conditions as shall enable them to avail themselves of the provisions hereinafter named—one or more, on each of said lines of railroad. No one company, however, to be incorporated for the construction of less than one hundred miles road, and for the whole extent of such road or roads, to be laid off into divisions of one hundred miles each.

4. To provide that the shares of stock in each of said companies shall be $200 each. That when any holder of a share of said stock shall produce the proper certificates, necessary to show that he has paid, in cash, or its bona fide equivalent, the full amount thereof to the actual construction and in actual operation throughout an entire division of one hundred miles—such holder of stock, upon the production of such certificates to the proper department of the Government, shall, for each such share of stock, be entitled to a land warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land, upon any of the unoccupied land hereinafter appropriated to that purpose, and in the manner, and subject to the restrictions hereinafter provided.

5. To provide for the free grant to such companies, of the right of way for such railroad or roads, throughout the whole extent thereof, over the public domain, of sufficient width for a double track road; and also for reserving at least sufficient width of land, along such railroad or roads, for a free common wagon road, of such construction as Congress may at any time hereafter provide for, with the privilege of crossing such railroad or roads therewith, at any points which may be found necessary, and requiring such company or companies to construct the necessary crossings; and to provide for such other reservations as the public interests may require.

6. To provide for the surveying into townships, sections, and quarter sections, in the manner in which public lands are now surveyed, of the public lands, to the distance of at least forty miles on each side of such right of way and reservations, and for the reservation of every sixteenth section for schools; and also for such other reservations for educational and such other purposes as the public interests may require, in conformity with the present policy of the Government in these particulars.

7. To provide for the application of the preemption laws to that portion of the said lands, forty miles each side of said railroad or roads, which shall not have been designated by the President, for donation to actual settlers, as herein above provided, for the protection of the rights of such of the stockholders in each of said companies, as shall, by actual settlement and improvement thereon, entitle themselves to a preemption claim; as also the rights of such preemptions as may have settled upon the residue, or every third quarter section thereof, herein reserved by the United States.

8. To provide for the location, upon one hundred and sixty acres of said land, so surveyed, forty miles on each side of said railroad, or roads, to be selected in quarter sections, equal to four quarter sections, out of each three sections, of each land warrant issued upon each share of railroad stock, as above provided, in such manner as the President may direct, with the proper provisions for the protection of the interests and rights of those who may entitle themselves to preference in such location, by virtue of their preemption claims as above provided; each holder of such land warrants being authorized to locate the same, upon any of the unoccupied portion of said lands set apart for this purpose, only within the limits of the length of that division of said railroad, or roads, within which the certificates of stock shall have issued, upon which such warrants shall have been granted; and preference in such location shall be given, in the order of the date of the payment, as aforesaid, of each of such shares of stock.

9. To provide for the manner in which several companies, upon each or either of said lines of railroad, shall so consolidate the service thereof as best to subserve the public interests and facilitate the movement and convenience of the rolling machinery thereon; and also for the reservation, in the General Government, of the power to establish, from time to time, a maximum tariff of rates of toll, within which said companies shall be limited. And also to provide for the reservation of the perpetual right of the United States to transport their mails upon all such railroads free of charge.

10. To provide for the extinguishment of Indian titles along such railroads, and upon the lands to be surveyed as aforesaid.

Mr. BOYCE. I move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will suggest that the resolution is simply one of inquiry relative to a proposition upon which we shall be speedily called to act. I trust that the objection which has been made will be withdrawn, and that the resolution will go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BOYCE. I withdraw the motion which I submitted to lay the resolution upon the table.

The question was taken; and the resolution was adopted.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF INDIANA.

Mr. MACE obtained the floor.

Mr. RIDDLE. I rise to what I deem to be a privileged question. I have been instructed by the Committee on Engraving to submit a resolution to the House. I have been waiting for some days for an opportunity to do so.

The SPEAKER. The State of Indiana is now being called upon for resolutions. The gentleman from Indiana having been recognized by the Chair, he will, under the circumstances, be entitled to the floor for the present.

Mr. MACE, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill of the following title; which was read a first and second time by its title:

"A bill to divide the State of Indiana into two judicial districts, and to provide for holding the circuit and district courts therein."

Mr. MACE. My friend and colleague wishes to propose an amendment to the provisions of the bill. After it has been adopted, I shall move a reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ENGLISH. There is an amendment I should like to see made to this bill. No place is fixed in the bill for the holding of courts in the southern circuit. I think New Albany is obviously the place which should be selected, and I make that motion, and hope my colleague will consent to it.

Mr. MACE. I accept my colleague's amendment.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MAPS AND DRAWINGS ACCOMPANYING THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. RIDDLE. I am instructed by the Committee on Engraving to submit the following resolution for the adoption of the House:

Resolved, That the Committee on Engraving be, and they are hereby, authorized to contract for the engraving and printing of the maps and drawings accompanying the President's message for nine hundred and thirty copies; also the maps accompanying the Report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for five hundred extra copies: Provided, That the cost shall not exceed the sum of $900.

Mr. R. said: I am instructed by the committee to state that the resolution simply provides for the engraving only of maps and drawings for the numbers of the messages of the President which are bound for the use of members.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to know whether it is in order, while the State of Indiana is being called upon for resolutions, to submit a report from a committee?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Engraving is privileged under the rules to submit reports at any time. The gentleman from Delaware is in order in submitting the resolution which has just been read.

Mr. RIDDLE. The resolution simply provides for the engraving of the maps and plates for the copies which are bound for our libraries and the individual members. The committee found that to engrave the maps and plates for the whole number of copies of the message would consume more than one half of the amount appropriated for that purpose. All consume about thirteen thousand. The resolution provides that about one thousand shall be printed, which will consume eight hundred and fifty or nine hundred.

The question was then put; and the resolution was adopted.

PENSIONS TO SURGEONS.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

"A bill extending the provisions of the pension and bounty land laws now in force, so as to include surgeons who served in the Mexican war under contracts with the commandants of regiments."

Mr. HENDRICKS, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

"An act to erect in the city of Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, a United States court-house and land office."

Mr. MILLER, of Indiana. I have an amendment to that bill which I beg leave to offer.

The Clerk read the amendment; as follows:

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That the further sum of — dollars be appropriated for the construction of a suitable building for the distributing post office at the city of Vincennes, in the State of Indiana; the said appropriation, and the erection of said building, to be under the control and direction of the President of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. I move its reference to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The SPEAKER. I would inform the gentleman that a motion is pending to commit the bill and amendment to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and unless objected to, they will be so committed.

No objection was made, and they were so referred.

INDIANA BONDS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, in pursuance of previous notice introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

"A bill authorizing the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury to surrender to the State of Indiana certain bonds to the government of the State of Indiana."

Mr. LANE. I desire to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of equalizing the salaries of district judges, so as to increase the salary of the judge for the district of Indiana.

There being no objection, the question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

COMPENSATION IN CASES OF DISASTERS.

Mr. BISSELL offered a resolution, which was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an annual appropriation, so as to enable the President of the United States to make suitable acknowledgment to captains of foreign vessels that may risk their ships and lives in rescuing American citizens in marine disasters.

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolution, and it was decided in the affirmative.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT CHICAGO.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill, which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

"A bill to provide for the erection of suitable buildings for a post office, custom-house, land office, bonded warehouse, and United States court-house in the city of Chicago."

Mr. WENTWORTH also submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be instructed, after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, to inquire into the expediency of giving a credit for duties upon railroad iron to such railroad companies as shall obligate themselves to pay for the same by the transportation of the mail, under such regulations, and at such rate of compensation, as shall be prescribed by the Post Office Department.

Mr. SKELTON. I propose to debate that resolution.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move the previous question, upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. LILLY. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Illinois has introduced two resolutions, whereas, under the rule, he is entitled to offer only one at a time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inform the gentleman from New Jersey that the gentleman from Illinois has introduced but one resolution. The first paper offered by him was a bill.

Mr. SKELTON. I rise to a question of order. When a resolution is introduced into this House which gives rise to debate it passes over, under the rules of the House. I rose in my place, and proposed to debate the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inform the gentleman that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] was on the floor, and was entitled to the floor at the time, and was in order in moving the previous question; and that motion will cut off debate, if it is sustained by the House.

Mr. FULLER. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Is the resolution open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not, a motion having been made to lay the resolution upon the table.

The House was then divided on a call for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative, there being—yeas 91, nays 64; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Benson, Benton, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Campbell, Caruthers, Chandler, Cox, Crocker, Cumming, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dick, Dickinson, Drum, Edgerton, Edmonds, Etheridge, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Flager, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Goodrich, Grow, Hamilton, Hastings, Haven, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Howe, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, Macdonald, McMullin, Matteson, Maurice, Middlesworth, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Packer, Peck, Phelps, Pringle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rowe, Russell, Sage, Seymour, Shower, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Snodgrass, Stratton, Straub, John L. Taylor, Trout, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, Walsh, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witte, and Hendrick B. Wright—91.

NAYS.—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Banks, Bissell, Boeck, Chamberlain, Chrisman, Churchill, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Craig, John G. Davis, De Witt, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edmundson, Elliott, Ellison, English, Ewing, Green, Grey, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Hens, Johnson, Roland Jones, Kerr, Lane, Latham, Lindley, Lindsley, Mace, Macy, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Orr, Parker, Bishop Perkins, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Rogers, Ruffin, Sapp, Shannon, Shaw, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, David Stuart, Ellihu B. Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, and Yates—64.

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

CUMBERLAND ROAD.

Mr. JAMES C. ALLEN. I desire to introduce the following bill, of which previous notice has been given, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals:

A bill to cede to the State of Illinois that part of the Cumberland road lying within the said State. Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Why not put it upon its passage? We want to get rid of that road.

The bill was then read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to this House the progress which has been made in the improvement of the Rock Island and Des Moines rapids, under the appropriation of $100,000 voted for that purpose; what plan of improvement has been adopted; how much of the work has been completed; the character of said work; and what amount of said appropriation has been expended.

Mr. BOCK. The resolution being a call for information, it should lie over. I therefore object to its consideration now.

The SPEAKER. The resolution lies over under the rule.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, offered the following resolution; which was read, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of passing a law providing for the settlement of claims growing out of depredations committed by the Indians in the Black Hawk war of 1832.

GRANTS OF LANDS.

Mr. LAMB, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill granting lands to the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, and to Minnesota Territory, in aid of the construction of a railroad from New Orleans to St. Paul's; which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LAMB also, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill to enlarge the powers, and increase the compensation of the district judge of the United States for the district of Missouri; which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CESSION TO ST. LOUIS.

Mr. BENTON offered the following resolution; which was read, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of ceding to the city of St. Louis, for the purpose of a public park, forever the ground on which the United States arsenal now stands.

IRON MOUNTAIN RAILROAD.

Mr. CARUTHERS, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill granting to the State of Missouri a portion of the public domain, to aid in the construction of the Iron Mountain railroad; which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WARREN, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill for the relief of John Gossett; which was read the first and second time by its title, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

INDEMNITY TO FLORIDA.

Mr. MAXWELL, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill "to indemnify and reimburse the State of Florida for moneys paid in protecting her frontier citizens against the Seminole Indians;" which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan, introduced the following resolution; which was read, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into the necessity and propriety of constructing a custom-house and Government warehouse, with rooms suitable for holding United States court therein, at the city of Detroit, in the State of Michigan; and that said committee report to this House the conclusion they may arrive at upon said inquiry, and what action, if any, it may deem necessary and expedient for the public interest in the premises.

ROCK RIVER AND DES MOINES RAPIDS.

Mr. HENN, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

"A bill for the more effectual improvement of the Des Moines and Rock River Rapids, in the Mississippi river."

LAND DISTRICTS IN IOWA.

Mr. HENN also, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill to divide the northern and Missouri river land districts in the State of Iowa."

RAILROADS IN WISCONSIN AND MICHIGAN.

Mr. WELLS, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bills; which were severally read a first and second time by their respective titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill giving the right of way and grating alternate sections of the public lands to the State of Wisconsin, and its grantees and assigns, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Milwaukee to Prairie du Chien, on the Mississippi river."

A bill giving a right of way and granting alternate sections of certain public lands to the State of Wisconsin, and its grantees and assigns, to further the construction of a certain railroad therein specified; and

A bill giving a right of way and granting alternate sections of certain public lands to the States of Michigan and Wisconsin, and their grantees and assigns, to further the construction of certain railroads therein specified.

TRESPASSES ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. EASTMAN. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior inform this House what steps he has taken to prevent trespasses upon the pine timber lands in the State of Wisconsin and Minnesota Territory; and whether or not he has appointed an agent or agents for that purpose; and if so, who are appointed, and the dates of appointment; and under what provision of law are they appointed; and what instructions he has given them; and also communicate to this House any report that said agents have made, in full; and what salary or compensation is paid to such agents; and how much money has been received by said agents from persons who have cut timber on the lands of the United States, by way of compounding such trespass; and the expenses incurred in collecting the same, and all the items thereof.

The SPEAKER. That being a resolution calling for information, it must lie over one day, unless, by unanimous consent, it can be considered now.

Mr. EASTMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that it may be considered now.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. Then the resolution must lie over.

Mr. EASTMAN. I move to suspend the rule of this House which requires that the resolution shall lie over one day, that it may be put on its passage at this time.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in reference to that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not going to debate it. I understand that the appointment of the officers alluded to in the resolution is in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy, unless some special law has been passed lately.

Mr. EASTMAN. I desire to ascertain whether that be so or not.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Secretary of the Navy appoints them in my country.

The question was taken; and the rules were not suspended. So the resolution lies over.

RAILROADS AND PRE-EMPTIONS.

Mr. LATHAM, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bills; which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill granting to the State of California a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from Sacramento City, via Auburn, to Nevada City, in said State;"

"A bill for the extension of the preemption privilege in the State of California;" and

"A bill granting to the State of California a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marysville to Benicia, in said State."

UNITED STATES MARSHALS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. LATHAM, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill to regulate the fees of United States marshals in the State of California; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McDUGALL, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bills; which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill making a grant of land to the State of California, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State;" and

"A bill making a grant of land to the State of California, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of a railroad from San Francisco to San José."

MAIL LINE FROM CALIFORNIA TO CHINA.

Mr. McDUGALL, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads:

"A bill authorizing the Postmaster General to contract for a semi-monthly mail, by steamships, between San Francisco and some point in China."

MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. McDUGALL also, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads:

"A bill to provide for the increase of the mail service between New York, San Francisco, and Oregon; and between New Orleans, San Francisco, and Oregon, and for other purposes."

MILITARY POSTS.

Mr. McDUGALL also, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title:

"A bill to provide for the establishment of a line of military posts and common road; also, authorizing the construction of a telegraph line and a railroad from the valley of the Mississippi to the Bay of San Francisco."

Mr. McDUGALL. Mr. Speaker, preliminary to the reference of this bill, I ask the indulgence of the House for the purpose of explanation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the remark of the gentleman from California.

Mr. McDUGALL. I simply wish to ask the indulgence of the House for the purpose of making an explanation of my motion to refer the bill just introduced.

The SPEAKER. If it be the pleasure of the House to permit the explanation.

Mr. EASTMAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California has a right to be heard on the proposition now before the House, which is that the bill be read a third time and referred.

Mr. McDUGALL. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is understood throughout the country and by this House that this is the most important subject of legislation which will come before this Congress; and while it is the most important, it is at the same time the most difficult; and I have a right to say that the country demands the action of this Congress on this particular subject-matter.

There is not in this House a committee organized with respect to this particular subject—the subject-matter of this bill, or any other bill with the same object, embracing questions that pertain to four or five of the regular standing committees of the House. More than that, the great difficulty about this measure is the conflict of opinion with respect to the manner in which the bill should be brought forward, and the conflict of interests between different localities on the Atlantic side. Now, by the organization of a large special committee brought from the different sections of the country, whose business it shall be to frame a bill avoiding or adjusting all conflicting interests, we may be able to present a bill which will possess sufficient claims to the confidence of this House to secure its affirmative action.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move that this bill, with the entire subject-matter, be referred to a special committee of thirteen; and upon that motion I move the previous question.

Mr. DEAN. I would ask the gentleman from California to withdraw the call for the previous question, until the bill is read again.

The SPEAKER. It can be read by the unanimous consent of the House.

A MEMBER. Does the gentleman desire to have the entire bill read?

Mr. DEAN. The entire bill.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. It is a long bill, and as members desire to look at it, I object to the reading of the bill now.

The SPEAKER. It will be read by its title.

The bill was accordingly again read by its title. Mr. McDUGALL. I withdraw the demand for the previous question, for the purpose of answering an interrogatory. The character of this bill is inquired into. I wish to say to gentlemen that it is not material what the particular character of this bill is. The object which I have in view is to secure a committee. I do not flatter myself that I have been able to mature a perfect bill; but, coming from California, where we are not affected by any of the local interests which disturb the States on this side, I think it my business to act upon this matter. I do not claim that I have brought forward a complete measure; but I ask the House to constitute a committee whose business it shall be to consider the opinions and views of all gentlemen who may present them to this body, so as to secure definite and sound action upon the matter. I move the previous question.

Mr. MILLSON. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether, if the House should sustain the previous question, it will not force us to vote between two propositions alone; the first upon a reference to a select committee, and, that failing, then upon the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It will be competent, the previous question being sustained, to bring the House to vote upon the bill, if the House refuse to refer.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call for tellers upon that question.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. HARLAN, of Indiana, and CAMPBELL were appointed.

The House was then divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 84, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put. The question was then taken upon Mr. McDUGALL's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was referred to a select committee.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. DE WITT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported back as correctly enrolled the following bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

"A bill to change the name of the American-built frigate Falcon to that of Queen City;" and

"A bill to continue in force an act entitled 'An act relating to the settlement of private land claims in California, and for other purposes.'"

SALARIES OF OFFICERS IN OREGON AND NEW MEXICO.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill "to increase the salaries of the executive and judiciary officers in Oregon and New Mexico;" which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WILLAMETTE RIVER.

Mr. L. also introduced a bill "to improve the navigation of the river Willamette, and to appropriate money for that purpose;" which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ROADS, ETC., IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. RICE, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced "a bill making further appropriations for continuing the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota, in accordance with the estimates made by the War Department;" which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Also, a bill to purchase the Sioux half-breed reservation on Lake Pepin, in the Territory of Minnesota; which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill to establish additional land districts in the Territory of Minnesota; which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

INDIAN TITLES TO MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. RICE also submitted the following resolution, which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be requested to inquire into the expediency of extinguishing the Indian title to the mineral lands lying east of the Mississippi river, and west of Lake Superior, and to report by bill, or otherwise.

CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. FULLER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be authorized to employ a clerk for the remaining time of the present session of Congress: Provided, the compensation to be paid said clerk shall not exceed four dollars per day.

Mr. HOUSTON. A suspension of the rules is required to pass that resolution. I object to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine is in order in presenting the resolution, his State having been regularly called for resolutions.

Mr. FULLER. I hope the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. EASTMAN. I move to amend the resolution so as to include the Committee on the Militia. [A laugh.]

Mr. WHEELER. And I move still further to amend it so as to include the Committee on the Expenditures of the War Department. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to lay the resolution and amendments on the table.

The question was put, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and I also move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put on the latter motion, and it was disagreed to.

The question recurred on reconsidering the vote by which the resolution was laid upon the table; and, being put, it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to reconsider the said vote.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to withhold that motion until I can ask leave of the House to withdraw a resolution which stands at the head of the Calendar. I introduced it sometime during the early part of the session, but it was not acted on then, and now it never will be reached, unless I withdraw it; it will have to be printed in every Calendar from this time to the close of the session, and I wish, therefore, to withdraw it at once.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw my motion for the purpose indicated by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the House do now proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope that the motion which has just been made will be agreed to. There are but two or three bills upon the table, which we can dispose of in a few minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I trust that the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table, and allow the States which have not been called this morning to be called for resolutions now. Some of them have not been called for a fortnight.

The question was taken on Mr. WASHBURN's motion, and it was disagreed to.

SURVEY OF A RIVER AND HARBOR.

Mr. CROCKER offered the following resolution; which was considered, and adopted by unanimous consent:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to this House a report of the survey of Taunton river and New Bedford harbor, in the State of Massachusetts, ordered by the last Congress.

SURVEY OF SCITUATE HARBOR.

Mr. CROCKER offered the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to this House the report of the survey of Scituate harbor and North river, in the State of Massachusetts, ordered by the last Congress.

PENSIONERS UNDER ACT OF 1853.

Mr. EDMANDS, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

"A bill for the relief of pensioners under the act of February 3, 1853."

EX-ACTING CONSUL AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is requested to furnish this House, if, in his opinion, the public interests will allow, with all of the correspondence relative to the alleged violation of the rights and forcible ejection from office of the acting consul of the United States at Constantinople, in July, 1851; also, the papers relative to the subsequent promotion of said acting consul to the consulate at said city; also, the papers relative to an alleged refusal of Captain Stringham, of the United States Navy, to convey said consul to his post in accordance with the instructions of the State and Navy Departments; and also the correspondence relative to the removal of said consul from his place.

There was no objection to the consideration of the resolution; and, the question being taken, it was adopted.

SUFFERERS ON STEAMER SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. CUTTING. I move that the resolution which I had the honor to introduce this morning in reference to the steamer San Francisco be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

It was so ordered.

THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I beg leave to offer the following resolutions.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Whereas, all the members of the human family, notwithstanding all contrary enactments and arrangements, have at all times, and in all circumstances, as equal a right to the soil as to the light and air, because as equal a natural need of the one as of the other; And whereas, this invariably equal right to the soil leaves no room to buy, or sell, or give it away: Therefore,

1. Resolved, That no bill or proposition should find any favor with Congress which implies the right of Congress to dispose of the public lands, or any part of them, either by sale or gift.

2. Resolved, That the duty of civil government in regard to public lands, and indeed to all lands, is but to regulate the occupation of them; and that this regulation should ever proceed upon the principle that the right of all persons to the soil—to the great source of human subsistence—is as equal, as inherent, and as sacred, as the right to life itself.

3. Resolved, That Government will have done but little toward securing the equal right to land, until it shall have made essential to the validity of every claim to land both the fact that it is actually possessed, and the fact that it does not exceed in quantity the maximum which it is the duty of Government to prescribe.

4. Resolved, That it is not because land monopoly is the most efficient cause of inordinate and tyrannical riches on the one hand, and of dependent and abject poverty on the other; and that it is not because it is, therefore, the most efficient cause of that inequality of condition so well-nigh fatal to the spread of democracy and Christianity, that Government is called upon to abolish it; but it is because the right which this mighty agent of evil violates and tramples under foot is among those clear, certain, essential, natural rights which it is the province of Government to protect at all hazards, and irrespective of all consequences.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move that the resolutions be laid upon the table.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then put on the motion to lay the resolutions on the table, and it was agreed to.

ASSAY OFFICE IN NEW YORK.

Mr. WALKER. I offer the following resolution; and on its adoption I move the previous question.

The Clerk read the resolution; as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to report to this House whether the assay office now in course of construction in the city of New York is of sufficient capacity for the coinage of gold and silver; and if so, whether, in his opinion, it would be convenient and proper for Congress to authorize said coinage at the said office.

Mr. WALKER. On that resolution I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule of the House the resolution must lie over.

Mr. WALKER. Does not the motion for the previous question relieve it from the operation of that rule?

The SPEAKER. The motion for the previous question does not exempt it from the operation of the rule. We have an express rule which requires that all resolutions calling for information must lie over one day. That is the language of the rule. But the Chair hears no objection to the motion.

Mr. FLORENCE. I object.

Mr. WALKER. Then I move the suspension of the rules, or of so much of the rules as applies to this case.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not hear the resolution distinctly. Will the Clerk read it again?

The resolution was accordingly read a second time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rule, which requires the resolution to lie over one day.

Mr. WALKER. I call for tellers upon that motion.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the motion was not agreed to.

So the resolution went over under the rules.

THANKS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I was prevented this morning from submitting the resolutions which I hold in my hand, and I offer them now, moving at the same time to refer them to the select committee which is to be appointed to consider the subject-matter of similar resolutions which were offered this morning, and upon the resolutions I call the previous question.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to have prepared a joint resolution, extending the thanks of Congress to Captain Creighton, of the British ship Three Bells, to the commanders of the bark Kilby, of Boston, and ship Antarctic, of New York, for the humane and generous conduct in rescuing the officers and crew of the mail steamer San Francisco in their late perilous exposure on the ocean; which was accomplished at the imminent hazard of their lives, and those who acted under their command.

Resolved, That the committee, by bill or otherwise, report the necessary legislation, making provision by the Government of the United States to indemnify the losses incurred by the commanders and owners of the vessels above named, in their endeavors to save the lives of the officers and soldiers of the United States Army from the wreck of the San Francisco, and to inquire into the propriety of granting some testimonial of approbation to the commanders, officers, and crew of the Three Bells, Kilby, and Antarctic.

The SPEAKER. The committee to which the gentleman proposes to refer the resolutions is a joint committee of the two Houses.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. Then I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question was taken, and the resolution was so referred.

REMOVAL OF GREENE C. BRONSON.

Mr. MAURICE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the removal of Greene C. Bronson, late Collector of the port of New York, by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the causes alleged in the correspondence between such Secretary and the said Bronson, and the recently published letter of the Attorney General of the United States to a citizen of Massachusetts, in relation to the design of the Government to "crush out" a particular sentiment of political action, were, and each of them was, a gross infringement of the sacred principle of State rights, and an attempt on the part of the Federal Government to control or influence the free exercise of the elective franchise by the people of sovereign States, and, as such, deserves the disapprobation and censure of this House.

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire and report whether any legislation is necessary to preserve from future violation the inalienable right of the citizens of the several States to conduct their separate State elections in their own way, unawed and uninfluenced by the interference of federal officers in such elections.

Mr. WALSH. I propose to debate that resolution.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from New York to debate the resolution carries it over.

PROTECTION TO AMERICAN CITIZENS.

Mr. LYON presented the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the sentiments of his Excellency the President of the United States, as set forth in his inaugural address, in respect to the right of every American citizen, in any part of the world, to the protection of the United States Government, and the great principles of international law enunciated in the correspondence of Secretary Marcy, with the Chevalier Hilsenmann, are hereby recognized and affirmed, and that whenever a proper occasion occurs, the same ought to be applied and enforced.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. ROWE. I ask leave to withdraw the papers and petition of Joseph M. Young, asking for an increase of pension for services in the war of 1812, for the purpose of verification, and for other proof.

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

The SPEAKER. It is competent for the House to vote it.

Mr. LETCHER. It is not unusual for gentlemen to withdraw papers, and to present them, after an interval of ten years, in an entirely different shape. I have no objection to allowing certified copies to be taken of the papers.

The SPEAKER. If debated, the proposition goes over.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I move that the House adjourn.

NEW REGISTER.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported back, as correctly enrolled, a bill "to change the name of the American-built brig John Dutton, and to grant a register in her name;" which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker.

THE NAVIGATION OF THE HUDSON.

Mr. WHEELER. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to this House for what reasons the appropriation of $30,000, made by the last Congress for the improvement of the navigation of the Hudson river, has been withheld; and, also, why some definite action has not been taken in reference to the said improvement."

Mr. EASTMAN. I object.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. FLORENCE. I hope that the gentleman will withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. DRUM. I hold in my hands a resolution relative to the pay and mileage of Mr. Muhlenberg, which I desire to offer.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to inquire if the motion to adjourn prevails, whether it would be in order to introduce resolutions for the next two weeks; all the States have not been called, and I think it is unfair to adjourn now, without completing the call of the States.

The SPEAKER. The question now pending is the motion made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Davis,] that the House adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand the yeas and nays on the adjournment.

[Loud Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. WHEELER. Well, I will withdraw the demand.

Mr. FLORENCE. I renew it.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and, on a division, there were—yeas 73, noes 75.

So the House refused to adjourn.

CIRCUIT COURT IN NORTHERN NEW YORK.

Mr. HAVEN, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"A bill to provide for holding a stated session of the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of New York at the city of Buffalo, in said district, and to increase the salary of the district judge in said district."

Mr. H., in moving the reference of the above bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, expressed a hope that that committee would give it an early consideration.

COMMON SCHOOLS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to offer a resolution. It is one in which I have no personal interest as a Representative; but I offer it at the urgent request of several gentlemen who are citizens of the District of Columbia, and I desire some action on the subject at the proper time.

The resolution is in these words:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire whether there are any, and if any, what laws are now in force in the District of Columbia in reference to schools in said District; and that said Committee further inquire whether legislation is needed and expedient by Congress on the subject of common schools in said District; and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

It will be perceived that the resolution merely asks for an inquiry into the subject, and I hope the House will pass it.

The question was taken upon the resolution, and it was agreed to.

THE ERIE CANAL.

Mr. FLAGLER submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making suitable grants of public lands to aid in the enlargement of the Erie Canal.

The question was taken upon the resolution; and it was rejected.

INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. SIMMONS, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

"A bill concerning invalid pensions, and regulating the time of their commencement."

HENRY A. MUHLENBERG, DECEASED.

Mr. DRUM offered the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Speaker be authorized to direct the payment to the widow of the Hon. Henry A. Muhlenberg, deceased, late a member of this House, the daily pay and mileage due him at the day of his death.

Mr. DEAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

DISASTERS TO THE COMMERCIAL MARINE.

Mr. DRUM. I desire to offer another resolution.

Mr. WHEELER. Let Pennsylvania have as fair a chance as the other States.

Mr. DEAN. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. DRUM. I offer the following resolution; and if there be objection to its consideration, move a suspension of the rules:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing, by law, the Secretary of the Navy to equip and maintain three public vessels at the harbors of Boston, New York, and Norfolk, respectively, which may promptly be used by the Navy Department, in the event of any disaster to our commercial marine, or of any other exigency requiring their aid.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I propose to debate that resolution.

Mr. ORR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LILLY. Did not the Chair forget to call the State of New Jersey in its order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state, to the House that he had, through inadvertence, skipped over the State of New Jersey in the call upon States for resolutions.

Mr. LILLY. I would ask whether, if the House now adjourns, New Jersey or Pennsylvania will be the first State in the call at the next time?

The SPEAKER. New Jersey. If the House refuses to adjourn, it is the purpose of the Chair to call New Jersey.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn; there being, on a division, only 63 in the affirmative.

Mr. LILLY. I desire to offer a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. DEAN. The gentleman cannot do so now, for the reason that there is already a resolution pending.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Drum.]

Mr. MAXWELL. I propose an amendment to the gentleman's resolution. I move that a vessel of the character proposed be also stationed at Pensacola, in the State of Florida.

Mr. FLORENCE. I would also suggest that there be one at the Delaware breakwater.

Mr. BOCK. I would ask the gentleman who has offered the resolution one question. I do not propose to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. No discussion, no amendment is now in order.

Mr. MAXWELL. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania accepts the amendment I have proposed, I will introduce it at this point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's amendment will be in order after the House determines the proposition to suspend the rule requiring the resolution, as it is one for information, to lie over one day.

The question was then put on the motion to suspend the rule, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. LILLY. I propose the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making a grant of land to James W. Marshall, the discoverer of gold in California; and to report by bill or otherwise.

The question was put on the adoption of the resolution; and was not agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for tellers on that motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PERKINS, of New York, and CLINGMAN were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes not counted.

Mr. FLORENCE. I call for the yeas and nays, and move that tellers be appointed on the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The tellers then resumed their places; and having counted the negative votes, reported noes 44.

So the motion was carried, and the House accordingly adjourned at twenty-five minutes before four o'clock.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 17, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

STEAMSHIP SAN FRANCISCO.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. appointed Messrs. SHIELDS, GWIN, PEARCE, HAMLIN, and EVERETT the select committee on the part of the Senate, in accordance with the resolution adopted yesterday, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to consider and report on a proper form of suitable acknowledgment to the gallant men who rescued the passengers and crew of the steamship San Francisco.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

THE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Post Office Department, communicating, in compliance with the resolution of the 9th instant, a statement of the causes of the detentions of the northern mail between the cities of New York and Washington; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a communication from the State Department, transmitting, in compliance with the acts of April 20, 1818, and August 26, 1842, a statement of the names of clerks and other officers employed in the Department, or in any of its offices, during the year 1853, &c.

Also, a communication from the Department of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the joint resolution of May 29, 1830, a list of such persons as have made application for pensions, and who ought, in the opinion of the Department, to be placed on the pension rolls, but for which there is no sufficient authority in law, on account of an omission in the act of February 3, 1853, to provide for their class of claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SUMNER presented the memorial of Jacques Charlant, praying for arrearages of pay for services in the war of the Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, a memorial of citizens of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, praying for the reduction of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. CHASE presented the petition of John Young, and other citizens of Ohio, praying that further protection be afforded to inventors, and those holding rights under them; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. SUMNER. I have in my hand a memorial from citizens of New York, in which they pray that Congress will take such steps as may be necessary to separate the Federal Government from all connection whatever with slavery and the slave trade by the repealing of all acts authorizing or supporting the same. Among the signers of this memorial are many eminent in various walks of life. Here are William Jay and John Jay, who in the second and third generation honor the name of an illustrious revolutionary patriot, and the first chief justice of this country. Here also is the name of our recent associate in this body, John P. Hale. As this memorial, in its various points and bearings, is not within the province of any single standing committee of the body, I shall not move its reference to any one of them; but shall await the motion for a special committee. In the mean time, I move that it lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I have also a remonstrance, signed by some of the same persons from the city of New York, against paying for the Amistad negroes, on the ground that they were native negroes who had been kidnapped and reduced to slavery by an act of piracy. As the question of paying for these negroes is now before the Committee on Foreign Relations, I move the reference of the remonstrance to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER presented the petition of Robert C. Thompson, only surviving child and administrator of William Thompson, praying to be allowed the seven years' half pay to which his father was entitled for services during the revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, the memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, praying that the United States Mint in that city may not be removed therefrom; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of Mary F. B. Levely, praying to be allowed the arrears of pension due her husband, Henry Levely; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, presented the petition of John Reddin, late a soldier in the army, and discharged on account of a disability, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BRIGHT presented a petition of citizens of Allen county, Indiana, praying a donation of land to the States of Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, for the construction of a railroad from Fort Wayne via Rochester, Lacon, New Boston, and Wapello, to Council Bluff City; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSON presented a petition of Daniel Kelly, praying compensation for his losses and suffering during his imprisonment in the Island of Cuba in 1810; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Hiram Paulding, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief. The bill was read, and ordered to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Albert Hart, reported a bill increasing his pension; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Lavinia Taylor; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, submitted adverse reports upon the petitions of John Brown and Orson Young; which were ordered to be printed.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to which was referred the memorial of Joseph L. Smith, praying that certain public documents may be given to each of the common schools of the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the memorial of John Bamsey, praying authority to locate a land warrant granted to him for services in the war of 1812, on any public lands subject to private entry, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill to extend the provisions of the several laws granting bounty lands to officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the papers in the case of William Eaton, in the case of James D. Cobb, and in the case of A. A. Cole; which was agreed to. The reports of the committee were ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the papers in the case of Allen G. Johnson, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Adam B. Stewart, a paymaster in the United States Army, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the petition of Catharine Clark, and the petition of Benjamin Perkins, submitted adverse reports thereon.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred documents in the case of William Senna Factor, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of John M. Mackintosh, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

FRENCH SPOILIATIONS.

Mr. HAMLIN. The select committee to which were referred the bill to provide for the ascertainment and satisfaction of French spoiliations prior to July 31, 1801, and sundry papers on the subject, has directed me to report back the bill, with a recommendation in favor of its passage. I desire to give notice that I shall at an early day ask for a vote of the Senate upon the bill.

MAJOR RINGGOLD.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred a joint resolution for the presentation of a sword to the nearest male relative of the late Major Samuel Ringgold, has had the same under consideration, and directed me to report that it is inconsistent with the institutions of the country to pass such a resolution. Honors and distinctions are not hereditary with us. The committee does not think that an exception should be made by special legislation; and, therefore, while it acknowledges the meritorious services and gallant conduct of the late Major Ringgold, it directs me to report adversely, and to move that the joint resolution lie upon the table.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. EVERETT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Charles A. Kilby.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DOUGLAS, in accordance with previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to authorize the sale of reserved lands, and for other purposes; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHIELDS asked, and by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill to aid the Territory of Minnesota in constructing a railroad for military, postal, and other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, asked, and by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill for the payment of outstanding loan office and final settlement certificates, issued for money loaned, or for services, or for supplies during the revolutionary war; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. NORRIS, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to incorporate the proprietors of the Washington Cemetery; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN OHIO.

Mr. CHASE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill to divide the State of Ohio into two judicial districts. It will be remembered that a few days ago, this bill was considered by the Senate; but on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee has had the bill under consideration, and has reported it with one or two amendments, one of which was suggested by that Senator. I hope the bill will be taken up.

Mr. WADE. I wish my colleague would consent to let that bill lie over for a few days. I am in favor of the bill myself, but I have received several communications from the central part of Ohio, informing me that the people of certain portions of the State are not satisfied that it ought to be divided, and they wish to come here and make their opposition known. They, in fact, desire that I should cause the bill to be delayed until the beginning of February; when they expect to be here, and show reasons why the bill should not be passed. I hardly think they can show that. I am in favor of the bill; but I am willing to give them an opportunity to make their opposition known. For that reason, I would prefer that the bill should lie over until they can appear and state their own views upon it.

Mr. CHASE. I think I can satisfy my colleague that this bill should be taken up and passed now.

I have in my hand, and should have presented to the Senate, but for the report of the committee, a memorial signed by fifty members of the Legislature, of all parties, from all parts of the State, urging the prompt consideration of the bill. If it is not considered at an early period of the session, it can hardly receive the action of the House of Representatives. It has been defeated once before by delay. There are, undoubtedly, gentlemen in the interior of the State who will object to the passage of this bill, inasmuch as the court is now located at Columbus. Its passage would interfere with the comfort of a few, while it would materially advance the interest of nearly all the suitors, and the convenience of nearly the whole bar. Under these circumstances I feel justified in asking the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill at this time. It is in accordance with the wishes of the members of the Legislature, and in accordance with the wishes of a great majority of the people of the State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foot in the chair). The Chair will apprise the Senator from Ohio that the amendments have been sent to the printer, who has not yet returned them.

Mr. CHASE. The bill was printed when it was introduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the amendments are not here to be acted upon.

Mr. BADGER. Let it go over for the present.

Mr. CHASE. Such being the case, I will withdraw my request for the consideration of the bill.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. BUTLER, it was Ordered, That the petition of Mary Perry be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. SEBASTIAN, it was Ordered, That the memorial and papers in the case of Theodore E. Elliott be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, it was Ordered, That the memorial of E. A. Williams and W. D. Ligon be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of the widow and children of John Balster be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers in the case of William Gunton and others be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of David P. Wells be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CENSUS REPORT.

Mr. BENJAMIN submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That one hundred copies of the census volume of 1850, out of the extra number of copies printed for the use of the Senate, be delivered to the Superintendent of the Census for distribution from his office, and for preservation in it.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill from the House of Representatives to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Arkansas into two judicial districts," approved March 3, 1851, was read a first and second time by its title.

The PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, if there be no objection.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. This bill should properly be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It relates entirely to amendments of the Indian intercourse law. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill from the House of Representatives, to secure the rights of citizenship to the children of citizens of the United States, born out of the limits thereof, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SALINE LANDS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. WALKER. The Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of the commissioner appointed by the State of Wisconsin to locate and select saline lands in the State, praying that the land may be granted to the State for the benefit of the University, has directed me to report a bill relinquishing to the State of Wisconsin lands reserved for salt springs therein.

The bill was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. WALKER. That bill, it will be recollected by the Senate, proposes to grant no land whatever to the State of Wisconsin; but briefly what it does provide for is this: To Wisconsin, as to the other States formed out of the Northwestern Territory, were granted twelve salt springs, with six sections of land adjacent to each. That land has been located by the commissioner authorized to make the location by the Legislature of Wisconsin. The State now comes forward with a memorial, which is among the papers, and asks Congress to change the purpose for which the land was granted, from that of saline purposes to that of aiding our State University. It is simply to change the appropriation of land from the one purpose to the other. As there will probably be no contest about it, I ask that the bill may be considered and passed now.

The bill was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being proposed, it was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JOHN FAGAN.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the petition of John Fagan, reported a bill for his relief; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. JOHNSON. With the permission of the Senate, I will make a brief statement in reference to this bill. It has been depending in the other branch of Congress for several years. It has been considered by committees, and has been favorably reported upon several times, and hence it has been maturely examined. It is not a case of much magnitude, for it only involves some two hundred and twenty-two days' services, which are worth $444. I believe that is the amount.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is a case which is proved by the records from the War Department. This is my recollection of it; and as it has been more recently examined by the Senator from Mississippi, he can correct me, if I fall into any error. The claim is for services in the Indian Department many years ago by the applicant, who is now a very old man, who has hitherto failed to get it through the other House for—as Senators are aware is frequently the case—want of time. If necessary, I will ask that the report of the committee be read; and I express the hope that the Senate will put the bill upon its passage.

The bill was read a second time by unanimous consent, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct that four hundred and forty-four dollars be paid to John Fagan for his services in taking charge of a delegation of Seminole Indians, and removing them from Florida to the country west of the Arkansas.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CAPTAIN LEWIS WARRINGTON.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill for the relief of M. K. Warrington and C. St. J. Chubb, executors of Captain Lewis Warrington and others. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Navy to open an account with the parties named, the officers and crew of the sloop-of-war Peacock, their legal representatives and assigns, on account of one moiety of the proceeds of the ship Epervier, her tackle, guns, implements of war, and specie on board at the time of her capture in 1814; which moiety was, by mistake, paid into the Treasury of the United States; and to satisfy their respective rights therein, according to the act of April 23, 1800, for the better government of the Navy of the United States, and to pay the sum which may be found due.

The report of the Committee on Naval Affairs was read, from which the following facts appeared: In April, 1814, the British ship Epervier was captured by the United States ship-of-war Peacock, and afterward, in the district court of Georgia, decreed, with her tackle, guns, and other implements of war, as a prize to the captors; and a sale ordered to be made by the marshal. A large sum of specie on board was also decreed to be a prize. The sale was made. The Epervier was a vessel of equal force with the Peacock, as appears by the report of the captors, by the report of the officer put in charge by Captain Warrington, by the negotiations between the Department and Captain Warrington for the purchase of the prize, and by the decree of condemnation.

By the act of April 25, 1850, it is enacted that the proceeds of all vessels, and the goods taken on board of them, of equal force with the capturing vessel, shall be adjudged good prizes. In this case, however, one moiety was, by mistake, paid into the Treasury of the United States. It is to remedy this mistake that the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

MOSES OLMSTEAD.

On motion by Mr. WADE, the bill for the relief of Moses Olmstead was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place his name on the invalid pension list, at a pension of eight dollars a month for life, from January 20, 1853.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

PIONEER MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

On motion by Mr. NORRIS, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill to incorporate the Pioneer Manufacturing Company of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. PETTIT, when the bill was formerly under consideration, to add the following:

"And provided, further, That the stockholders, individually and collectively, shall be responsible for all the acts done, and obligations incurred, for the corporation created by this act."

Mr. PETTIT. In offering that amendment, I did not design to occupy the time of the Senate in the discussion of the principle involved in it. It is one so well understood, and has been so much discussed in all the legislative bodies of the country, as well as before the public otherwise, that I think no new light can be thrown upon the principle proposed by me to be grafted upon the bill. Heretofore, I understand that this manufacturing has been carried on by an individual, whose name I do not now remember, who has been liable for all his engagements and contracts in reference to this manufacturing business. He may have had one or two partners with him. He now proposes, as I understand, to extend the number of his partners, and obtain an act of incorporation. The only object of a corporation can be, that a great number of men associated may assume a given or fictitious or legislative name to avoid difficulty in making and executing contracts, to avoid difficulties in suits and litigations.

That is the main object of an incorporation. It is neither more nor less than a partnership to be created here; and I cannot consent to create it by an enactment of Congress. I cannot see why those whom he associates with himself, those into whose confidence he enters—and they entering into his in return—should not be collectively liable for all the engagements incurred in the carrying on of that business for which he himself was individually liable before. It is beyond my power of comprehension.

It is no more and no less than a partnership. If A starts a mercantile or manufacturing business here, you say by your law he shall be liable for all the debts incurred for carrying it on, of any and every description. But you say, if you do not adopt this amendment, that if a dozen or twenty men associate themselves together for the same purpose, they shall not be, or need not be, liable for all their debts. This is a violation of principle, and one which ought not to be adopted.

Gentlemen may say it is a convenience for these men who propose to carry on this business. That may be all true; it may be a convenience for all of us to slip a liability for our engagements; but let me say to Senators that it is a convenience, and an especial convenience, to the employees of this corporation, and to the persons from whom it may purchase its commodities for manufacturing, that they shall be secure; that there shall be a liability by which they may be indemnified for labor done and performed, or for materials furnished.

I know no reason, I repeat, why it is that a dozen men, associated under the name of a corporation, shall be exempt from liability, when one or two would be liable for all their engagements in carrying on the same business. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken, with the following result:

YEAS.—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Bright, Brodhead, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Norris, Pettit, Sebastian, Sidel, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, Walker, Williams, and Wright—27.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Cooper, Dawson, Everett, Fish, Foot, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Pearce, Smith, Sumner, and Thompson of Kentucky—14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

THE NEBRASKA TERRITORY.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on Monday next I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill to organize the Territory of Nebraska. I give this notice for the purpose of calling the attention of Senators to the subject.

Mr. SUMNER subsequently gave notice that when the bill to organize the Territory of Nebraska should come up for consideration, he would move the following amendment:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to abrogate or in any way contravene the act of March 6, 1820, entitled "An act to authorize the people of Missouri Territory to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to prohibit slavery in certain Territories," wherein it is expressly enacted that "in all that territory ceded by France to the United States, under the name of Louisiana, which lies north of thirty-six degrees and thirty minutes north latitude, not included within the limits of the State contemplated by this act, slavery and involuntary servitude, otherwise than in the punishment of crimes, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall be, and is hereby, forever prohibited."

The amendment was received informally, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH GIDEON.

On motion by Mr. BELL, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill for the relief of Joseph Gideon.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officer to settle and adjust the account of Joseph Gideon as an acting purser of the storeship Fredonia, from December 18, 1847, to May 16, 1848, and from June 8, 1848, to January 18, 1851, and to pay him the difference between the compensation of a captain's clerk and an acting purser during those periods.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time and passed.

JUDITH WORTHEN.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of the heirs of Judith Worthen, deceased, reported a bill for their relief; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. HAMLIN. That bill has passed the Senate half a dozen different times, I believe. Its design is to place the heirs of the individual within the provision of the general law, where she would have been placed but for the rule adopted by the Department. A general law has been passed, bringing all within its principle except this one person. I therefore hope the Senate will consider and pass the bill now. It is a bill involving the payment of some $200. I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to pay to the heirs of Judith Worthen, deceased, widow of Isaac Worthen, late a revolutionary pensioner, such sum as she would, if now living, be entitled to receive under the "act granting half pay and pension to certain widows;" approved July 7, 1838, and the several acts of Congress on the same subject subsequent thereto.

At the request of Mr. BRIGHT, the report of the Committee on Pensions was read, from which the following facts appear: Judith Worthen applied at the Pension Office for a pension, under the act of July 7, 1838, which gave to the widows of certain revolutionary soldiers, for the term of five years from March 4, 1836, the annuity or pension which might have been allowed to her husband under a previous act, if living at the time it was passed. Her husband received his pension under the previous act referred to until his death, on the first of March, 1841.

On the third of March, 1843, she made her declaration, under the act of July 7, 1838, and the next month filed her papers with the Commissioner of Pensions; but they were not finally acted upon until April 30, 1844, on which day an act was passed providing that no pension should thereafter be granted to a widow for the same time for which her husband had received one. The five years for which the pension is claimed by the widow, by the act of July 7, 1838, extends from March 4, 1836, to March 4, 1841. The husband died March 1, 1841, and, in consequence of the law of that date, the Commissioner granted his widow a pension for only three days. This arose from the neglect to examine her papers in time. It is, therefore, claimed that the delay should not prejudice her right, and that the money should be paid to her heirs. To avoid the injustice of the act of 1844, in cases like this, a joint resolution was passed January 3, 1845, providing that the restriction should not be considered to affect the claims of those widows whose applications for pensions or arrears of pensions, had been made at the passage of the resolution. The restriction was reenacted in February 1845. But such a case as this was excepted from its operation. On this statement of the facts the committee reported the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time, and passed.

EZRA WILLIAMS.

Mr. CHASE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the petition of Ezra Williams, reported a bill for his relief; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. CHASE. As that claim is a very meritorious one, and the amount is very small, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider it now.

The bill was read a second time by unanimous consent, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Ezra Williams $500, in full, for his services in preparing an alphabetical index of the numerical register of warrants in the land bounty division of the general land office under direction of the late Commissioner, Richard M. Young.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CLAIMS IN THE BASTROP GRANT.

Mr. SLIDELL. I ask the Senate to proceed now to the consideration of the bill "confirming certain land claims in Louisiana, in the Bastrop grant." This bill was passed by the Senate at the last session of Congress. It merely proposes to carry into effect the provisions of a previous law, and there can be no possible objection to it. It will occupy but a very few minutes. I move that the bill be taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to confirm such of the claims entered in the report of the register and receiver at Monroe, Louisiana, of July 30, 1852, as, in their opinion, ought to be confirmed, according to the principles of the act of Congress of March 3, 1851, in pursuance of which their report was made; which confirmation is to operate only as a relinquishment on the part of the United States. It also provides, that where any claim, thus proposed to be confirmed, was not actually located prior to March 3, 1851, no location of it shall be made to the prejudice of any actual settler; but such claim may be located on any public land in the Ouachita district, subject to private entry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

PRE-EMPTION IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. GWIN asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill for the extension of the preemption privilege in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, subsequently said: I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which the bill for the extension of the preemption privilege in the State of California was referred, to report it back, with a recommendation that it pass. As it is a matter of very great importance to the people of that State, and as it is a simple extension of the preemption privilege, I ask that the bill be now considered.

No objection was made, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct that the provisions of the act of September 4, 1841, granting preemption rights to settlers on the public lands, as modified and made applicable to the State of California, by the act of March 3, 1853, shall be further modified, so far as such claims apply to lands subject to private entry, by granting to each settler in the State who is entitled to preemption under those laws, an extension of time, for the term of two years, after the commencement of settlement, as the period within which the proof of right and payment shall be made for the lands granted; and that the third proviso in the sixth section of the act of March 3, 1853, shall be so modified as to extend said rights to settlement made prior to, and within two years after, the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC PRINTING.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution authorizing an increase of the force in the office of the Superintendent of the Public Printing.

It proposes to authorize the Superintendent of the Public Printing to increase the force in his office by the appointment of two additional clerks, at the same salary as is now paid to the clerks already employed.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask that the letter of the late Superintendent of the Public Printing, addressed to me as chairman of the Committee on Printing, may be read. He was a very competent officer. No one could be more so. He understood the duties of his office very well, and I think his statement is entitled to more credit than that of any other gentleman, here, at least.

The letter was read, as follows:

WASHINGTON, January 2, 1854.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry "whether, in my opinion, any increased clerical force is necessary in the office of the Superintendent of the Public Printing," I have to state, that at the time of the passage of the printing law of 1852, and my appointment to the office of Superintendent, much diversity of opinion existed in and out of Congress as to the number of persons that would be required to render the requirements of the law effective, some estimating it as high as ten, and none less than five. The duties of the office were attempted to be performed by me alone, from September until December—the more pressing duties under the law not coming into operation until the commencement of the session of Congress—but I had to solicit the gratuitous services of others to aid me in bringing up the work. Upon the meeting of Congress, I found it indispensably necessary to ask for the assistance of two clerks and a messenger, (which were promptly granted by Congress,) with the hope and expectation that the law could be given a fair trial with this small force, by diligent attention to business. Since the commencement of the present session of Congress the entire duties of the office under the law have come into operation. During the last session the Department work was executed under previous contracts, which had not expired; during the recess the Department work came into operation; and at the commencement of the present session the law was, for the first time, in full operation in all its provisions at the same time. Since the passage of the act of 1852 the duties of the office have been very materially increased by the first section of the civil and diplomatic bill, which required the Superintendent to take charge of, inspect, &c., the binding and engraving of the Government, so far as the public documents were concerned. These duties are very laborious, and are of great importance in securing the faithful execution of the public work connected with the printing and binding of the documents, numbering as they do hundreds of thousands of volumes, many of them containing costly maps and engravings. It was at the suggestion of the late chairman of the Committee on Printing, Mr. Borland, that this additional duty was imposed upon the office. From his long service on the committee, he had experienced the necessity of having some disinterested authority to interpose between the binders and the engravers, and ascertain when the proper number had been furnished, and whether they were furnished in time for the printing of the documents which they were to accompany. Previous to this there had been no officer of the Government to receive this work. It went from the engraver to the binder, and complaints were frequently made of the loss of public documents in consequence of the loss or non-reception of the plates. Great complaint had also been made as to the manner of executing the binding, and the necessity was felt of having some one to examine it before the work was received and paid for; and I can say, with perfect safety, that this portion of the duty imposed on the office was during the recess equal to that of the printing of the documents.

The printing of Congress is now divided between two offices, involving considerable additional duty on the Superintendent, and from this cause alone I was not unprepared for the request from him for additional assistance.

In conclusion, taking all these things into consideration, I think that the additional aid which you inform me he asks is not only necessary for the faithful performance of the duty imposed on him, but that, if properly employed, will much more than remunerate the Government for their expense, and facilitate the completion and delivery of the public documents. An examination into the details of the office by any one will elucidate this fact better than I can explain it in writing.

I am yours, very respectfully,

JOHN T. TOWERS.

Hon. H. HAMLIN, United States Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

COMPENDIUM OF THE CENSUS.

Mr. BUTLER. I hold in my hand a motion in writing, which it is proper that I should submit now, if at all. It is to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday adopted a resolution ordering the printing of fifty thousand copies of a compendium of the census. I was not in when that resolution was under consideration, or I should have opposed it. It is well known to gentlemen that I entertain peculiar constitutional views in reference to this whole matter; and I think that originally there was more matter included in the census than the Constitution warranted us in having collected. I understand now that the Senate yesterday ordered the printing of fifty thousand copies of an abstract which has been ordered by the House of Representatives, without ever having seen the abstract. Hence I make the motion to reconsider; for I have no idea of taking these things on faith merely. The motion may lie over, if gentlemen do not desire its consideration now.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he did not vote for the resolution yesterday?

Mr. BUTLER. I said so.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then a question of order will arise, whether he can make a motion to reconsider, when he did not vote for the resolution.

Mr. MASON. I will make the motion. I was here yesterday, and I voted in the affirmative, I presume, by being silent. There were no yeas and nays taken.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Did the gentleman from Virginia vote for the resolution yesterday?

Mr. MASON. I was silent, I believe; but as there was no division, I may be presumed to have given an affirmative vote, according to parliamentary usage.

Mr. BADGER. Undoubtedly, whenever no division takes place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foot in the chair.) The Chair so regards it. The motion of the Senator from Virginia is now before the Senate. What disposition shall be made of it?

Mr. MASON. I leave it to the disposition of the Senator who originally made the motion.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not wish to have the question considered now. I am, however, very decided in my opinion that the vote of yesterday ought to be reconsidered. The reason which I stated is of itself sufficient—that it is proposed that we shall take fifty thousand copies of an abstract which has been ordered by the House, without ever having seen it, or heard any explanation of what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered on the Journal.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 17, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the Journal of yesterday, but was interrupted by Mr. COBB, who remarked: It is obvious that it will take nearly an hour to read the Journal this morning, and as we have had experience in the correctness of the Clerk in making up the Journal, I presume all are satisfied that it is correct. If, therefore, it is the pleasure of the House to suspend the reading thereof at this point, we shall save an hour. I believe nobody is paying any attention to the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent the further reading of the Journal can be dispensed with.

Mr. CURTIS. I object.

Mr. ORR. I believe there is not a quorum present, and I think the reading had better proceed.

The SPEAKER. As objection is made the Journal must be read. The Clerk might omit the reading of the resolutions. If that be the pleasure of the House, the Clerk will proceed, omitting the resolutions.

Many MEMBERS. "Yes!" "Yes!"

The Clerk accordingly proceeded with the reading of the Journal, omitting the portions referred to.

The SPEAKER here laid before the House a communication from the Commissioner of Public Buildings, transmitting, in conformity with an act of Congress of July, 1840, some estimates for deficiencies, an appropriation to supply which he represented as necessary, and without which the public service under his supervision must suffer.

The same was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

DELEGATE FROM NEW MEXICO.

On motion by Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, it was Ordered, That the credentials of the Delegate from New Mexico, (JOSE MANUEL GALLEGO,) heretofore presented to the House, be referred to the Committee on Elections.

SUFFERERS OF THE SAN FRANCISCO.

A message was received from the Senate, by the hands of Mr. MACHEN, its Clerk, informing the House that the Senate had appointed a committee to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to take certain action relative to the sufferers on board of the steamship San Francisco.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the House immediately proceed to the consideration of the resolution from the Senate. I hope the House will do so. It is only a modification of the resolution which went from the House to the Senate yesterday morning, and to prevent, too, its assuming the form of a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. If it is not objected to, the resolution of the Senate will be reported to the House for information.

There was no objection, and the resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five members on the part of the Senate be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to inquire and report in what form the acknowledgment of Congress, and the gratitude of the nation, may be most appropriately expressed to those benevolent and courageous men, who, under Providence, were the means of rescuing from death so many citizens of this Republic."

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the House concur in that resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is no necessity of a vote of concurrence. It is a simple resolution. The Senate have passed one, and we have passed another.

Mr. CHANDLER. The House resolution of yesterday was a joint resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would inquire of the Chair if the resolution passed by the House was in the form of a joint resolution?

The SPEAKER. The House passed a resolution containing the words "the Senate concurring."

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the House concur.

Mr. FLORENCE. If it is in order, I move the resolutions, which I offered yesterday, as an amendment to this proposition.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman's motion must go over.

Mr. FLORENCE. Then I ask the unanimous consent of the House to refer those resolutions to the Committee on Military Affairs.

No objection being made, the resolutions were so referred.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I suggest that the resolution just passed over, the one from the Senate take the same direction, otherwise we shall hardly be able to reach them at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the concurrence of the House in the adoption of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] insists upon the regular order of business.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to concurring with the Senate in this resolution. I thought that we had concurred in it.

The question was then taken upon Mr. CHANDLER's motion, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the Senate resolution was concurred in.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I believe the first business in order is a report from the Committee on the Judiciary, being Senate bill No. 28, concerning the district courts of the United States in California.

Mr. HOUSTON. I believe I have the floor upon a proposition to refer this bill, which was reported to the House from the Judiciary Committee.

The SPEAKER. That bill is in order. A proposition is pending to recommit to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have examined the bill and the law since that motion was made. I propose to withdraw the motion I made. I think the bill ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. The motion to recommit is withdrawn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire if resolutions, which have been heretofore offered, calling for information from the Departments, and which are required to lie over, do not come up now?

The SPEAKER. Not until after the select committees are called upon for reports.

Mr. WHEELER. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up the resolution of inquiry which I presented yesterday. It is merely a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. ORR. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is upon ordering the following bill to a third reading:

"A bill concerning the district courts of the United States in California."

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative; and the bill being engrossed, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I have been instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to offer a resolution, which I hope will be adopted by unanimous consent. It is merely a call for information.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform the House what arrangements are now made to obtain buildings for the accommodation of the several circuit and district courts of the United States; what is the amount of rent; what other expenses are annually paid in said districts, and what general provision, in his judgment, can be judiciously made to provide buildings for the immediate convenience of said courts and their officers; and whether any, and what difficulties and embarrassments occur in the use of the State prisons by the officers of the United States courts, and what remedy can be provided therefor.

The resolution was, by unanimous consent, considered and agreed to.

COLONEL BENJAMIN S. ROBERTS.

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, without amendment, the bill of the House, No. 63, explanatory of the act for the relief of Colonel Roberts, of the United States Army.

Mr. P. said: The Committee on the Judiciary have directed me to report this bill back to the House without amendment. It is accompanied by a report, which may be read, if any gentleman desires it; or I will state in a few words the substance of the bill, and the reasons for adopting it.

It is a bill for the relief of Colonel Roberts, of the United States Army. During the last Congress a bill was passed by this House for the relief of this officer, who was forced to resign his commission contrary to law in the year 1839. The case was brought before the last Congress, and elaborately examined by the Judiciary Committee in the Senate; and Mr. Berrien, in behalf of that committee, made a report recommending the restoration to Colonel Roberts of his pay, allowances, and emoluments during the time in which he was withdrawn from the Army.

The facts are simply these: In 1837 there was a considerable amount of money—some four or five thousand dollars placed in his hands—to disburse as an army agent. This money consisted principally of paper issued by the Commercial Bank of Cincinnati. Under a regulation of the Government at that time, no money was allowed to be paid out by Government agents from banks which did not redeem their notes in specie; and about the time this money was placed in Colonel Roberts's hands, that bank declined to pay specie. The consequence was that he appeared as a defaulter to the Government, and he was soon notified by his commanding officer that, unless he immediately resigned his commission, he would be dismissed from the service. This, it has been ascertained, was directly in the face of the law. The result was, that Colonel Roberts was withdrawn from the service, and continued so until the breaking out of the war with Mexico—some seven years after—when he was again allowed to enter the Army, and was rapidly promoted, as a reward of his gallantry.

The regulations of the Government at the time Colonel Roberts was withdrawn from the service, required that whenever an officer of the army, having in his charge the disbursement of money, was charged with being a defaulter, his case was to be presented to the proper authorities, and he was to be allowed, as the lawyers would say, a "day in court," in which to defend himself. No such privilege was allowed to Colonel Roberts. He was driven from the Army, without any opportunity of defending himself, upon the simple notice of his commanding officer that unless he resigned his commission he would be dismissed from the service. This was in direct violation of a law of Congress, passed in 1823. In 1828 another law was passed, providing that where a default was charged against an officer, his pay and emoluments should be retained until the default was made out. This was not done in Colonel Roberts's case when he was in fact dismissed from the Army—

Mr. MILLSON, (interrupting.) I ask the gentleman to allow me to make a single suggestion. The bill and report, as I understand it, have not been read to the House. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that if he will allow the report of the committee upon the bill to be read, the House will better understand his argument upon it.

Mr. PARKER, (resuming.) I am stating the substance of the report. This case, as I was going to observe, came up before the Senate during the last session of Congress.

Mr. Berrien, from the Committee on the Judiciary, then made a full report of the facts of the case, the substance of which I have stated. And upon that report a bill was predicated which, upon its face, provided for the payment to Colonel Roberts of his pay and subsistence during the time he was thus illegally and most oppressively dropped from the service.

It was ascertained, on referring the matter to the accounting officers of the Treasury, that the words used in that bill, "pay and subsistence," under a regulation of the Department, did not cover the whole of the compensation to which Colonel Roberts was entitled; and the sole object of this bill is to remedy that defect in the phraseology of the legislation of the last Congress.

I am further informed that the report of Mr. Berrien contemplated the payment of the whole of what we now propose to give this officer; but the clerk to whom the drafting of the bill was confided used expressions different from those employed in the report, and thus Colonel Roberts was unable to obtain the full compensation to which he was entitled.

This bill simply provides that the words "pay, emolument, and allowances" shall be substituted for the words "pay and subsistence."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will allow a motion to be made to refer the bill to a Committee of the Whole House, so that the House may have a choice in the matter.

Mr. WASHBURN. I cannot withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. PARKER. The case has been examined with great care.

[Cries of "Read the bill!"]

The Clerk then read the bill.

Mr. PARKER. I ask for tellers on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BOCK and EASTMAN were appointed.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—yeas 85, noes 41.

So the previous question received a second.

The question then was, "Shall the main question be now put?"

Mr. MILLSON. I feel constrained in this place to demand the yeas and nays on the ordering of the main question; so that it may be seen who are in favor of forcing this bill through in an unusual manner, without discussion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

At the request of several members, and by unanimous consent, the bill was again read through.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. The report of the committee accompanying the bill has not been read. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that it may be now read at the Clerk's desk; so that all members may understand upon what grounds the passage of the bill is proposed.

There was no objection; and the report was read by the Clerk.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I desire to put a question to the Speaker before the yeas and nays are called. What will be the effect of voting against the putting of the main question now?

The SPEAKER. The effect will be to carry the bill over until to-morrow, or another day, at all events.

The roll was then called, and there were—yeas 113, nays 60; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abernombie, Aiken, Belcher, Benson, Bissell, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chrisman, Clark, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Cunningham, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmonds, Edmonson, Elliott, Elison, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Flagler, Florence, Fuller, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Andrew J. Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Johnson, Keitt, Knox, Lane, Latham, Lindsey, McCulloch, McDougall, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Phillips, Pratt, Pringle, Puryear, Reese, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Simmons, Samuel A. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Straub, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Tweed, Upham, Vansant, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Hendrick B. Wright, and Yates—113.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Barksdale, Barry, Bockock, Bridges, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Craig, Curtis, Dawson, Drum, Faulkner, Fenton, Giddings, Grow, Hamilton, Hastings, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kuriz, Lamb, Lilly, Macdonald, McMullin, McNair, Mc-

Queen, Maxwell, Mayall, Middleswarth, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Olds, Orr, Packer, Peck, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Rufin, Shower, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, Stratton, John J. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Wade, Walbridge, Walsh, Witte, and Daniel B. Wright—60.

So the main question was ordered to be put.

The main question—that the bill be engrossed and read a third time—was then put and agreed to; and the bill being engrossed, was read the third time and passed.

Mr. PARKER moved that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and that that motion do lie on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, presented the following report; which was read:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the resolution of this House, presented by Hon. PRESLEY EWING, of Kentucky, proposing an amendment of the Constitution in the mode of electing the President and Vice President of the United States, report:

That having had the benefit, in committee, of an oral and interesting exposition of this important question by the honorable mover of the resolution, they have bestowed upon the same much anxious consideration, and are satisfied that there is decided merit in the amendment as proposed. They are also satisfied that the conviction in the public mind is strong, and almost universal, that there are serious evils inseparably connected with the existing provisions in this behalf that may and should be remedied; and believing that there is now a calm in the political elements most auspicious for the grave consideration of this subject, the committee deem it due the American people that Congress should propose to them some carefully-considered and well-digested amendment in the premises. They therefore ask that their committee may be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That a select joint committee, composed of nine Representatives, and five Senators, be appointed by the presiding officers of the two Houses respectively, to whom shall be referred the said resolution proposing an amendment of the Constitution in the mode of electing the President and Vice President of the United States, with instructions to take that matter, and the subject generally, into consideration, and to report upon the same in such manner as to them may seem most expedient.

Mr. McMULLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay that report on the table, and that it be printed.

While I am up, Mr. Speaker, I will state that I should like very much if the members of committees would make their reports in such manner as not to occupy the whole of the morning hour of the House.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I imagine that there is no necessity for this matter being laid over. It is a simple question of inquiry, and one, I believe, which has elicited the attention of almost every American citizen. There is no newspaper in the land that does not condemn the present mode of electing the President and Vice President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not debatable.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg leave to suggest that this is not merely a motion to lay on the table, but it is a motion to lay on the table and print; and the motion to print is debatable.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on laying the report on the table.

Mr. EWING. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chair what would be the fate of this movement if it were ordered that the report lie on the table? and whether that would be the closing up all further inquiry on that subject?

The SPEAKER. Practically it would be, unless taken up by the vote of the House.

Mr. McMULLIN. If the gentleman desires to debate the question he will not be prevented. He can do so by moving to recommit. My object is to economize the time of the House.

The SPEAKER. The report of the committee closes with a resolution proposing a select committee to which this subject shall be referred.

Mr. McMULLIN. I am aware of that, sir, but—

Mr. EWING. Will the gentleman from Virginia withdraw his motion till I make one solitary word of explanation?

Mr. McMULLIN. I will withdraw my motion, for the gentleman's convenience.

Mr. EWING. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the course proposed now is not a suggestion of mine. I had this resolution—when it was first presented—referred to the Judiciary Committee, in preference to its reference to a select committee; and, contrary to the advice of many in this House and in the Senate, who professed to take some interest in the matter, I had it referred to the Judiciary Committee, because I believed that, by an explanation of the purposes and probable consequences of the change, that committee, or any other committee, would see the importance, at least, of the proposed reform, and the propriety of inquiry into the matter. I wanted the sanction of a regular standing committee—of that eminently respectable committee—of this House. I believed that they could bring public attention—the attention of this House—to the question in a degree which I could not secure for it myself.

I therefore originally desired that the Judiciary Committee should act upon it. I went before them, and—by an indulgence of no ordinary kind, and by a kindness and courtesy for which I take great pleasure in making my acknowledgments now, and will at all other times—I was allowed to explain the objects of the proposed change; and they agreed to report in favor of it. But subsequently, they seem to have arrived at the conclusion, that perhaps it would be more proper to make the report now upon our table. They, therefore, themselves propose a select committee. If in intending to advance the purpose which they had in view, they have pursued such a course, they put an end to all inquiry about the matter. Thus, if the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. McMULLIN,] almost—if he will allow me to say—inconsiderately made, should prevail, and that all further inquiry should be closed upon the matter, I should regret, and I am sure that the committee would regret, that they have not attained the purpose which they had in making the report. If they had made it as I desired, and thought myself, individually, that it should have been made, it would not have been brought to so premature an end, as will be the case if the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. McMULLIN] is adopted. I hope that gentleman will not now, whatever his private opinions may be upon the examination which he has given to the subject, insist in bringing to so premature and summary a conclusion, all inquiry upon this subject. Does the gentleman insist upon the motion which he has made?

Mr. McMULLIN. The gentleman from Kentucky is mistaken if he supposes that I have acted prematurely in this matter. I am as well prepared now as I shall be at any time during this session to act upon this question. I had supposed that every other gentleman upon this floor, like myself, was prepared to act; and it was for that reason, and because I was unwilling to have the time of the House occupied with the consideration of this question, that I submitted the motion I did. But if it shall seem to be the pleasure of this House, or of a respectable number of it, that this subject be disposed of, with a view to its discussion, I will not act adversely to the feelings of the House, by insisting upon the motion which I have made. My purpose was to move that the subject be recommitted—

Mr. BISSELL, (interrupting.) If this debate is not in order, I object to it.

The SPEAKER. It is in order, the proposition to lay upon the table having been withdrawn.

Mr. McMULLIN. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me a moment further, I will, for the purpose of testing the sense of the House, move to recommit the subject; and upon that motion I call the previous question, so as to afford gentlemen the opportunity of discussing it hereafter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest, as a matter of form, that the resolution should be so amended as to read "to act with such committee as shall be appointed by the Senate," instead of "the Senate concurring."

No objection was made; and the modification was adopted.

Mr. FLORENCE. I would inquire of the gentleman from Virginia what object he desires to attain by moving to recommit to this committee?

The SPEAKER. The motion to recommit is not debatable.

Mr. FLORENCE. I am aware of that; but I rose simply to an inquiry. I was desirous of knowing what the gentleman expected to accomplish by his motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not quite.

Mr. JONES. I believe it is in order, however, to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union at any time, and I therefore make that motion now.

The question was taken, and there appeared, upon a division—ayes 79, noes 65; whereupon

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, called for tellers upon the motion; and they were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Before the question is taken upon that motion, I wish to offer another. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole, upon the President's message, be terminated on Thursday next at one o'clock; and upon that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. WALSH. Is that motion in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. WHEELER. I hope the House will not agree to the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. WALSH. It was very magnanimous.

The House was divided, and the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I now move to amend the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee, by inserting the first day of March in place of Thursday next.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded the yeas and nays upon that motion; which were ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. TAYLOR's amendment; and there were—yeas 72, nays 102; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Barry, Benson, Boyce, Bridges, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Chase, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cumming, Cutting, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Edmunds, Etheridge, Evarhart, Farley, Flagler, Franklin, Goodrich, Grey, Grow, Hill, Howe, Johnson, Kerr, Knox, Lindsey, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, John G. Miller, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Westbrock, Wheeler, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, and Yates—72.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bissell, Bliss, Boock, Breckinridge, Brooks, Chandler, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dowdell, Drumm, Eastman, Edgerton, Elliott, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Hamilton, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lilly, Lindsey, Macdonald, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Maxwell, Mayall, Middleswarth, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Olds, Orr, Peck, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Riddle, Robbins, Ruffin, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, Skelton, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Hester L. Stevens, Straton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Walker, Walsh, Wells, John Wentworth, and Tappan Wentworth—102.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Would it be in order for me to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. It would not—as there is a motion pending to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. SMITH. Will the gentleman from New York withdraw his motion, and allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. WHEELER. I cannot.

Mr. JONES. As I suppose it would be in order for me to modify my resolution, I move to amend it by substituting "Thursday week next, the 26th," instead of next Thursday, as the time for closing the debate.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion I made.

Mr. ORR. If the House will indulge me for a moment, I think I can satisfy them that the resolution ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. ORR. The resolution does not restrict the latitude of debate at all.

Mr. CHURCHWELL demanded tellers upon the yeas and nays, which were not ordered.

Mr. DEAN demanded tellers upon Mr. WHEELER's motion to lay the resolution upon the table, which were ordered; and Messrs. Wright and Vail were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 76.

So the House refused to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. TAYLOR. Upon seconding the demand I ask tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Vail and Wright were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 73.

So the previous question received a second.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The question now being upon the adoption of Mr. Jones's resolution,

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Chair be kind enough to have the resolution again read?

The SPEAKER. It will be read if there is no objection.

No objection being made, the Clerk again read the resolution.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 97, nays 82; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Appleton, Ashe, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bissell, Bliss, Boock, Breckinridge, Bridges, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dowdell, Drumm, Dunbar, Eastman, Edgerton, Elliott, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Hamilton, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Lindsey, Macdonald, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Mace, Mayall, Smith Miller, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Orr, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Riddle, Robbins, Ruffin, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Skelton, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Straton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walker, Wells, John Wentworth, and Daniel B. Wright—97.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Benson, Boyce, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cumming, Cutting, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Edmunds, Etheridge, Evarhart, Ewing, Farley, Flagler, Franklin, Goodrich, Harrison, Hill, Howe, Hunt, Johnson, Kerr, Knox, Lilly, Lindsey, Lyon, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Shannon, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Walley, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcofer—82.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put upon the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

The question recurred upon Mr. Jones's motion that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and being put, it was decided in the affirmative.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated that when the committee last rose, it had under consideration the annual message of the President of the United States, and the resolutions submitted by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Housron,] proposing to refer the same; and that upon that subject the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Keitt] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from South Carolina who is entitled to the floor is indisposed to-day, and would prefer that the committee should take up some other bill; and I therefore ask that this bill be laid aside for the present, and that the committee shall take up the invalid pensions appropriation bill. It is a very small bill, and we can soon pass it. There are two or three of these small appropriation bills which can be passed this evening; and when the House goes into committee to-morrow, the President's message can again be taken up, and the gentleman from South Carolina will be able to make his speech.

Mr. DRUM. I would ask what the order is upon the Calendar?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I believe that appropriate tion bills, by an express rule, take precedence of all other bills.

The CHAIRMAN. It is competent for a motion to be made to take up any of the appropriation bills. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the President's message, and the resolutions in reference thereto, offered by himself, be laid aside for the purpose of taking up House bill No. 50, being "A bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States, for the year ending June 30, 1855." The question is first upon laying aside the President's message.

Mr. WALSH. I would ask whether the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. KERR], to whom the floor has been awarded, will be in possession of it when the House next goes into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or does he forfeit his right to it by refusing to speak now?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman from South Carolina will be entitled to the floor when next the House goes into committee, if the motion of the gentleman from Alabama prevails, inasmuch as he yields the floor to the gentleman from Alabama for the purpose of making that motion.

Mr. DRUM. I will state to the committee that I believe the next order on the Calendar is a bill in reference to the payment of the amount authorized to be paid to the gentleman who is codifying the revenue laws. I think that it is the next thing in order. It authorizes the payment of his salary. Now, sir, that gentleman has been engaged for nine months past, and has not yet been compensated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair dislikes to interrupt the gentleman from Pennsylvania; but debate is not in order on a question of priority of business.

Mr. DRUM. I was not aware of that fact.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Houston, and, upon a division, there were—ayes 90—

[Cries of "We give it up!"]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the proposition will be decided to be carried in the affirmative.

There was no objection, and it was so decided.

Mr. WALSH. Those who voted in the affirmative are the ones who cry "We give it up!"

Mr. WHEELER. Is it in order to decide a question without calling for the negative? The Chair called for the affirmative, and decided that the motion was agreed to without calling for the negative.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked whether a further count was insisted upon; and no gentleman did insist.

Mr. WHEELER. I heard no gentleman give up the count. When a gentleman does so, he is required by the rules to rise in his seat.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It is now too late to raise the point.

The CHAIRMAN. So the Chair rules.

Mr. WHEELER. It is always too late to raise a point when a question of right is concerned.

Mr. WALSH. The day of grace has passed. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is the consideration of "A bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855."

It will be read through by sections for amendment.

The bill was read through by sections, but no amendment was proposed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The question was taken, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the committee now take up for consideration House bill No. 47, making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk then read the bill through by sections for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be on laying aside bill No. 47, and reporting it to the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire what latitude of debate is allowed on these bills?

The CHAIRMAN. The widest latitude is allowed to gentlemen—according to the practice of the committee—on any of the general appropriation bills.

Mr. WALSH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I—
Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman from New York yield the floor?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from New York will certainly yield the floor to a gentleman who is always entitled to it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am just going to ask the gentleman from New York to let the committee report that bill to the House, and then take up the deficiency bill, when he will have an opportunity to make a speech.

Mr. WALSH. I shall dispense with making a speech, and yield the floor. I have no particular desire to make a speech.

The question, that House bill 47 should be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass, was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now ask that House bill No. 49, being a bill to supply the deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854, be taken up for consideration.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the first clause of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to detain the House at any length; neither do I propose to make what is called a set speech; but from the evident disposition manifested by this House, no other opportunity will probably occur wherein I shall be enabled to say anything upon the subject of which I now propose to speak.

On a former occasion I felt called upon, in reply to some remarks made by gentlemen upon this floor, to say a few words, which the meanest and dullest understanding, not willfully blinded to the truth, could not fail to apprehend. When I used the word "democracy," I, of course, intended to be understood as alone referring to that chivalrous and self-sacrificing party which—whether in the pride of victory and the plenitude of power, or under the vicissitude of defeat—has ever sustained and preserved the Constitution in its purity, and in the unshaken integrity of its letter and its spirit, against the open assaults of insane, though, perhaps, not dishonest, fanatics, and against the more wily, and dangerous, and dastardly assaults of that mean, despicable, and hollow-hearted set of hungry traitors who, at a pepper-and-salt convention, held in Buffalo, in 1848, fraternized, with pertinacious assumption of well-dissembled sincerity, with disappointed and disloyal Whigs, rampant Abolitionists, and long-heeled Negroes, pampered by the traitorous artifices of demagogues, whose hearts and purposes were blacker than the faces of the poor dupes they were deluding in doing so.

In using the word "democracy," sir, I used it as I do now, and as I have ever done, and as I ever shall do—for whatever the Cabinet may do in this respect—and I apprehend it is not of the slightest possible consequences to any one beyond the vampires and parasites who surround it—the Democracy has ever been, and ever will remain indivisibly united.

The time to which I then alluded, as best befitting the national men of New York to speak, has, in my opinion, more than fully arrived already. Though I have been anxiously desirous that some one among my associates should give utterance to our views upon this subject, I can no longer remain silent, with a due regard to my own self-respect, with a proper appreciation of what is due to me and to that noble and devoted party, whose services, and sacrifices, and undeviating devotion to principle, will live in the hearts of all true and patriotic men long after the corrupt coalition which now surrounds us is resolved back to the conflicting elements of which it is composed, and the official skeletons of their hungry leaders are left dangling upon the gibbets to which public execration and condemnation have consigned them—yes, consigned them as an impressive warning to all political malefactors. [Laughter.] Sir, we have suffered, in the estimation of many, the most ignominious and flagrant wrongs, and the most persevering persecutions, from those who have elevated to power, upon principles which they loudly profess in theory, but which, I regret to say, they have sadly, if not shamelessly, violated in practice. Every opportunity has been afforded to them to retrieve their blunders, and to make reparation, as far as the case will now admit, for the unexampled outrages perpetrated upon us. Instead of accepting the golden opportunity thus generously presented, they have, with a most willful obtuseness, construed our forbearance into cowardice—our magnanimity into slavish acquiescence.

Sir, notwithstanding the bitter lesson administered by the result of our last election in the State of New York—a lesson which, to men not intoxicated with power, unwisely conferred, but still more unwisely, if not ungratefully, exercised, would have been as instructive as it was unexpected—the Administration still seems egregiously to underrate and totally misunderstand the true character of the men with whom they have been so long and stupidly trifling. Sir, the misrepresentations which have been so meanly, so sneakily, and so perseveringly circulated against our motives, our acts, our present position, our purest, brightest, and boldest men, have been so flagrant, so false, and so numerous, that I, for one, can no longer stand passive, and refrain from doing what I can to rescue truth from the polluting and deadly embrace of this miserable sophistry.

For President Pierce I entertain, personally, a very high degree of regard, more particularly if he were simply a citizen, and not a President. He is a very kind, agreeable man; and he is what the ladies would term a very polite, affable, and pleasant gentleman—far more so, I am afraid, than it will ever be my lot to be considered. He has always treated me with marked kindness and seeming confidence; but since I have ascertained that this is generally his disposition to everybody, I must be compelled to take off an extraordinary discount for the compliment to myself. [Laughter.]

He reminds me of that English commander to whom Napoleon surrendered on board of the Bellevue. When he came into England, Napoleon was very anxious to have an interview with the King of Great Britain, and asked permission of the ministers who were sent to see him. They asked the commander who came over with him from France whether such a step would be politic? "By no means," said he. "Why?" "Because, if you allow them to have five minutes' conversation, they will become the best friends in the world. Don't it, sir, it will never do."

Now, sir, it is in consequence of my own quiet, susceptible nature, when I have to do with those of my own sex—and Heaven knows what would be the effect were it with those of the opposite sex, [laughter]—that I have studiously avoided calling upon the President of the United States since the opening of the present session of Congress. From what I have said, I presume every gentleman will infer that I am not going to use any unkind expression towards that high functionary. I am simply going to set forth a few facts before the House, and then allow them to draw their own inferences.

Sir, the position which the New York Democracy have occupied before the country has been grossly and shamelessly misrepresented. This contest, which had its final issue in the last election, commenced in 1844. The men who were instrumental in defeating General Cass, in 1848, had then arrayed themselves against the admission of Texas, or rather against its annexation to the United States. The men who figure as the Softs in New York now, are those who attended and took part in the anti-annexation meeting at the Tabernacle in 1848, and are the men who then got up the secret circular in the State of New York, calling upon their friends, while they voted for Silas Wright for Governor, to vote against James K. Polk for President; the result of which was, that the Democratic vote for President ran far behind that for Governor of the State; and had this organization—this treacherous organization—been made as perfect then as it was in 1848, the result of their reasonable efforts would have been quite as successful.

But their course is known to all. There was never a more sublime spectacle presented to the world than that presented by the National Democracy in 1848, when, casting patronage to the winds, they stood up to defend the integrity of the Constitution against those who, taking advantage of the excitement of a popular election, were endeavoring to create a sectional feeling, to array one portion of our people against the other, to the imminent danger of ultimate ruin to the country itself.

Sir, after the result of that election—for I promised not to detain the House long on this occasion, and I shall not do it—they found that public opinion was coming about—that the action of that which Martin Van Buren called “the sober second thought of the people”—and it is the only sentence that Martin Van Buren ever uttered that will bear repetition—[much laughter]—and that “sober second thought of the people” has consigned him and his associate traitors to an ignominious oblivion, from which even the archangel’s trumpet will never awaken them. [Renewed laughter.] Sir, through that sober second thought the determined sense and patriotism of this people had stricken treason to the dust, and the result was, that any man whose past history showed a fair record—if he had received the nomination at Baltimore—would have been elected just as easily as President Pierce was. These men, finding that the overwhelming tide of popular sentiment was about to sweep them into oblivion; finding that a storm was coming which they had neither the manhood to meet, nor the ability to resist; finding that they stood in the position in which they now stand, like rattlesnakes with their poisonous fangs extracted—with the same disposition to strike, but without the power to harm—they pretended to get upon a platform which the Union says was a delusion and a cheat, but which the Administration, in its practice, says was a wiping out of all past sins.

It is, as we all know, a well-established rule, at least among the truly orthodox and faithful in the church, that whenever a man deserts the church he must, before he can come back into full communion, do penance for his crimes, and show signs of sincere contrition; and I know of no good reason why the same principle should not be applied to political backsliders. [A laugh.]

Now, sir, in 1852, the Democracy of the country met in the Baltimore convention, and a platform was there laid down, upon which General Pierce was nominated. If he received that nomination without a pledge, he did not receive the votes of the people of the United States without a pledge; because, in his letter of acceptance, he said, distinctly and emphatically, that he accepted the nomination with the accompanying resolutions, not because those resolutions were a condition of the nomination, but because they were in strict keeping with every act of his past political life. How has that pledge been carried out in his appointments to office?

And here let me tell gentlemen that if they suppose that the opposition to the Administration comes from men who have been disappointed office-seekers, they sadly underrate the character of the men with whom they have to deal. If they suppose there is any disposition upon the part of the Democracy of the State of New York to make war upon the Administration, they are wrong. But when the Administration undertook to interfere in our local elections—when they sent forth the mandate that Greene C. Bronson must do their dirty work—and if they were deceived in Mr. Bronson’s character it was their own fault—if they expected to find a poor, servile tool in Judge Bronson, and found an honorable, high-minded man, it was their fault, not ours; when they uttered a threat to interfere in our elections, under the miserable expectation that we were weak, and our adversaries were strong—we heard the mandate in sorrow—we hurled back the threat with contemptuous indignation; we defied its power, and ultimately triumphed to our hearts’ content. We triumphed, sir, against all the power, and all the appliances of the Administration.

And let me tell the friends of the Administration in this House now, that when the next election comes they will find that triumph ten times more signal than it was before. Those who were Barnburners in 1848 are now what are called “Softs.” [Laughter.] Well, what is a Soft? We are called “Hards.” The best illustration of anything hard is a diamond. It is a fair representation of our purity and our hardness. [Laughter.] We all know what soft means in morals. A man soft in morals is open to any rascality. [Laughter.] A “Soft” in politics is pretty much the same thing. We all know what is meant by a man with a soft head. Such a one is intellectually soft. A “Soft” is simply an individual whose morals and politics are of the putty character, and who is ready to accommodate himself to any form which promises profit. [Laughter.]

I once told one of our State officers, outside of the capitol in Albany, as follows: Said he, “Mike, what reason have you to question the sincerity of men who were true in 1848?” I asked him, “Were you true in 1848?” “Wasn’t I,” he replied. “I did not hear,” said I, “of your doing anything negatively. I do not know whether you had the power, if you would, to do so.” “What do you mean?” he asked. “Provided you were, as Redfield is said to have been, square in 1848, does that go to show that you are square now?” “Yes,” he said. “Not unless I have read history to but little profit, sir. Benedict Arnold was as sincere and as gallant a patriot before there was a sufficient amount of British gold offered for his treason. Not unless my theological knowledge is equally deficient. Judas Iscariot was an humble and true follower of our Saviour before those thirty pieces of silver were shoved at him.” [Laughter.] I can readily understand, Mr. Chairman, how a corrupt and mercenary man, when he is offered to be helped into position far beyond the measure of his merits, by those who are formally arrayed against him, can play the part of Benedict Arnold or Judas Iscariot. The only difference between a Soft and an actual Abolitionist is, that the one is in the decomposing process. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, I wish, so far as I am concerned, to be distinctly understood in this committee; and I believe what I say will not conflict at all with the opinions of our friends. We do not propose to array ourselves against anything Democratic which may come through the Administration, no more than we would be governed in our action, provided the Administration were opposed to it. The Democratic party, as it formerly existed, was a party of well-defined and universally-understood principles; but the course which has been pursued latterly, of recognizing the claim of factionists to the smiles and favor of the Administration, is a degrading declaration sent forth to the world that hereafter we are to come together, not upon common ground of principle, but that we are to come together like a band of bandits, amalgamated for the sake of common plunder; and then, after we have gained our purpose, like John Van Buren, to stand upon the platform, true to General Pierce’s Administration—or, in other words, as long as we hold office—and afterwards to be at liberty to return to our old sins.

Now, Mr. Chairman, previous to closing, I want to refer to one point, and that is, the various votes which have been taken in this House (and where those who have voted have denied that their votes were to be taken as any test question) have all been claimed as Administration triumphs as soon as they were effected. I have been told by gentlemen upon this floor, and by gentlemen occupying high positions in the Government—and I wish to be distinctly understood on this subject—I have been told, I say, that their sympathies are with us; but that they did not regard the casting of their votes on certain questions as arraying them against the action, or as indorsing the action of the Administration.

Let me repeat here, sir, what I have told those gentlemen, that we are not objects of sympathy—we despise sympathy. Sympathy may be fit for sick cripples or old ladies, but not for men who have gallantly stood up against the power and patronage of State and General Administrations. We are objects of admiration and respect, but we are not objects of sympathy. We despise sympathy.

Mr. SMITH, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I propose to say a very few words. A very important question has arisen in the country which is not understood; and as the ball has been started here to-day, I shall ask the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. WALSH] to give an explanation which may go out to the country with his speech—with either his or my own. The information I wish here, and the question which the people throughout the United States wish to understand is, what is the reason for the political designation—what is the difference between the New York Hards and the New York Softs? I will give way to the honorable gentleman from New York to reply to the question.

Mr. WALSH. The difference is the difference between an honest man and a rogue. [Great laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that the reply of the gentleman from New York is a little equivocal. I do not yet know whether the Soft is the rogue, or whether the Hard is the rogue.

Mr. WALSH. That deficiency of knowledge must be ascribed to the gentleman’s understanding inasmuch as—

Mr. SMITH. Will the gentleman repeat his reply? I have not heard it.

Mr. WALSH did not take the floor.

Mr. SMITH. Well, it is not a matter of very much importance. Mr. Chairman, I think it is time really that the Democracy of the country should understand something about this matter; and I, being a Democrat,—as I claim to be,—desired to be really informed on this distinction between the Hards and Softs. I expected to hear from the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALSH] a serious and sincere answer; but being characteristic of him, of course he is excusable for not explaining further.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know what the gentleman means by the term characteristic, and if he means it to imply any want of sincerity on my part?

Mr. SMITH. I mean that the gentleman is brief, blunt, and not always satisfactory. I meant nothing disrespectful to the gentleman.

Mr. CUTTING. If the gentleman from Alabama will allow me, I will say, that if no other gentleman does it, I will seek the opportunity to explain the difference between the “Hards” and the “Softs” of the State of New York, and in so doing, it will be necessary simply to trace the history of the party in New York. That history will furnish the gentleman with the information he desires.

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the gentleman to do it now.

Mr. CUTTING. Not at this time.

Mr. SMITH. I expected to hear from the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALSH] an explanation of what the difference is.

Mr. WALSH. I will tell the gentleman what it is in a few words. The difference between a Barnburner and an Abolitionist in disguise—that is, a “Soft”—is, that a “Soft” is a man who has never done anything for the Democratic party except for his own personal advancement and aggrandizement; bearing the name of Democrat merely for the purpose of benefiting himself.

Mr. SMITH. In responding to the gentleman from New York, I must confess that, for one, when this controversy first broke out, my sympathies were with the “Hards,” as I understood the subject; but, upon a closer examination of this whole matter, I confess that I do believe that the whole controversy is too sectional—I may say too factional—to disturb the harmony of the Democratic party throughout this country.

Now, sir, to be a little playful, I propose to refer the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. WALSH] to a part of the history of Gulliver’s adventures in Liliput, to show the smallness of the political quarrel—the absurdity of the political quarrel; and to show that, however much it may distract the party within the borders of the State of New York, it ought not to extend beyond it—

Mr. CUTTING, (interrupting.) Even though assailed beyond it?

Mr. SMITH. Many gentlemen will remember that when Gulliver went into Liliput he found that government in a state of great turmoil, and he very naturally inquired into the cause of it. I have the history of the matter here before me, and I propose to read it, in order that we may be enlightened as to the extent of the words “Hard” and “Soft.” The history of the subject, after some preliminary matter, runs thus:

“Which two mighty Powers have, as I was going to tell you, been engaged in a most obstinate war for six-and-thirty moons past. It began upon the following occasion:

It is allowed on all hands, that the primitive way of breaking eggs, before we eat them, was upon the larger end; but his present majesty's grandfather, while he was a boy, going to eat an egg, and breaking it according to the ancient practice, happened to cut one of his fingers. Whereupon the emperor's father published an edict, commanding all his subjects, upon great penalties, to break the smaller ends of their eggs. The people so highly resented this law that, our histories tell us, there have been six rebellions raised on that account; wherein one emperor lost his life, and another his crown. These civil commotions were constantly fomented by the monarchs of Bilefusus; and when they were quelled the exiles always fled for refuge to that empire. It is computed that eleven thousand persons have, at several times, suffered death, rather than submit to break their eggs at the smaller end. Many hundred large volumes have been published upon this controversy: but the books of the Big-Endians have been long forbidden, and the whole party rendered incapable by law of holding employment. During the course of these troubles, the emperors of Bilefusus did frequently expostulate by their ambassadors, accusing us of making a schism in religion by offending against a fundamental doctrine of our great prophet Lustrog, in the fifty-fourth chapter of the Bundebral, (which is their Alcoran.) This, however, is thought to be a mere strain upon the text; for the words are these: that all true believers break their eggs at the convenient end. And which is the convenient end, seems, in my humble opinion, to be left to every man's conscience, or, at least, in the power of the chief magistrate to determine. Now, the Big-Endians exiles have found so much credit in the emperor of Bilefusus's court, and so much private assistance and encouragement from their party here at home, that a bloody war has been carried on between the two empires for six and thirty moons, with various success: during which time we have lost forty capital ships, and a much greater number of smaller vessels, together with thirty thousand of our best seamen and soldiers; and the damage received by the enemy is reckoned to be somewhat greater than ours. However, they have now equipped a numerous fleet, and are just preparing to make a descent upon us; and his imperial majesty, placing great confidence in your valor and strength, has commanded me to lay this account of his affairs before you."

From this history it will be seen that the State was in great turmoil upon this question. One party contended that, according to an old and ancient edict of the government, the people were bound to break their eggs upon the small end. A party, however, rose up on the other side, and declared that, upon a more ancient law still—the law of custom—the people had the right to break their eggs upon the big end. The controversy was called the Big Endian, and the Little-Endian controversy. It is said, in this history, that eleven thousand persons fell, because they would not relinquish the right of breaking the egg upon the small end.

It strikes me that the difference between the "Hards" and the "Softs" is simply this—they want to stone the President to death, and the question is, is he a hard egg or a soft egg?

Mr. WHEELER, (interrupting.) In your opinion.

Mr. SMITH. It is so in my opinion; and I hope that the gentleman who promised to make the distinction between the "Hards" and the "Softs" will take this opportunity to do it. I suppose the people of the country are interested to know the real distinction, and to know who are upon the right side.

Mr. CUTTING rose to answer the question.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. Will the gentleman yield me the floor?

Mr. CUTTING. For what purpose?

Mr. PERKINS. In order to make a motion that the committee rise, and the gentleman can take the floor to-morrow.

Mr. CUTTING. I have now risen, Mr. Chairman, simply for the purpose of responding to the invitation extended to me by the gentleman from Alabama, (Mr. SMITH,) who has just read us a passage from Gulliver's Travels, from which he infers that the "Softs," as well as the "Hards," are now endeavoring to stone the President, and declares that he cannot distinguish between them. There was a period, very recent in the history of this country, when gentlemen from the South did not need to inquire who, at the North, were the "Hards" that stood by them, through good report and through evil report, at a time when the hurricane of Free-Soilism was sweeping over the land, as had never been seen before, or to profess to be ignorant who they were who showed themselves, at that critical period, true to the constitutional rights of the States, true to the South, as the South was true to itself. [Great applause.] I ask was there any gentleman from a southern State who then rose in his place for the purpose of reading Gulliver's Travels as a lecture and sneer at the North, for the purpose of disparaging those true and faithful men who, under circumstances that were enough to quail the stoutest heart, stood by the equal rights of the States, and insisted that the people of each State and each Territory should do what we do at the North—govern themselves, and regulate their own domestic affairs and institutions in their own way, and according to their own best judgment?

In the brief time which has elapsed since then, has the South already forgotten, now that the danger is over, what that party was, and what were the principles of those who stood by them—who nailed their colors to the mast at a time when the ship of State appeared to be upon the point of settling and sinking? Did they then not know who were the Hards? But it seems it has already escaped their attention who and what we were, and are. I regret it, Mr. Chairman, if the fact be so. I would have preferred that this inquiry had come from the Representative of a colder region. A blow from an enemy can be repelled by a blow, but when it is inflicted by what was believed to be a friendly hand, it wounds the heart, and it is difficult to heal an injury to that delicate and sensitive organ. But it is true that what we did in those trying times was not for the purpose of currying favor with the South. We advocated the principles upon which we planted ourselves, not for the purpose of gaining favor anywhere, but simply because those principles were the principles of State rights, upon which we—the Hards—had always stood, which we advocated then, and stand by now. The party of 1848, to whom allusion has been made, is a party well known even in New Hampshire, where, at one period, many of its present so-called "leaders" gave way and joined the Free-Soil standard. Those of the Democrats who have since then made a coalition with the Buffalo leaders—they who now form a part and parcel of the Van Buren party in the State of New York, who left their own standard, abandoned their own friends, and for the sake of office and patronage united with the Free-Soilers—these men, who were in 1848 honestly and truly, if you please, for General Cass, but who since have deserted for the purpose of preferment, have coalesced with the Free-Soilers—they who now sustain the Administration in New York, and the Cabinet of General Pierce—these are the men who are called "Softs." Does the gentleman from Alabama begin to perceive the difference between the Hards and the Softs?

The "Softs" are the men who are led by the somewhat celebrated son of a former President of the United States; they are the men into whose scale the influence of the sword of General Jackson was thrown at the last New-York election by the legatee to whom it was bequeathed, (the proprietor of the Union, and public printer) who threw that sword into the Van Buren scale to make weight against the Hards. It was the first time that good sword was ever employed in a bad cause, and the first time it ever failed to effect its purpose. That gallant sword, ever before in the hands of one of the truest patriots this country has ever seen, was now drawn by its legatee, in order to accomplish the purposes of those who at Buffalo, in 1848, had assailed the Constitution of the United States, and the good blade proved, for the first time, to be utterly powerless. Now, who are the Hards of New York? The men against whom this weapon was used. Is the gentleman from Alabama answered?

Mr. Chairman, in 1844, after Martin Van Buren had been defeated in 1840, and when he yearned again to be a candidate for the Presidency, Texas had applied for admission into the Union. When Mr. Van Buren and Mr. Clay came out against the doctrine of annexation, the pages of that glorious history will show that we—the Hards—were the men who refused to follow Mr. Van Buren, and sacrificed our own political preferences for the purpose of standing with those who were in favor of the admission of Texas into the Union. This difference of sentiment brought about a separation of our party, as is well known to those who have read the political history of our State. From the day when Mr. Van Buren took ground for excluding Texas from the United States, from that day the "Hards" of New York determined to go for a presidential candidate who was in favor of bringing Texas into the Union. The result was, that Mr. Van Buren was defeated at Baltimore, and Mr. Polk was nominated.

We, who are called "the Hards" of New York, are the men who went into that presidential canvass with unflinching hearts, without any mental reservations; who labored together for the success of the Democratic candidates, and gained for them the vote of the State of New York; which vote carried Mr. Polk into the presidential chair.

We, the Hards, are the party which stood up for Mr. Polk during his administration, and whose support of William L. Marcy obtained for him the place of chief of the War Department. Those who were in favor of Martin Van Buren as the Democratic candidate, and who were opposed in heart to Mr. Polk, were dissatisfied; they growled and grumbled, and watched for an opportune chance to overthrow the Democratic party of the country. Does the member from Alabama begin to remember now who the "the Hards" are?

The Hards are they who in 1848, when the elements became convulsed, as far as the opportunity was afforded them, stood by their country. It will be remembered that in the summer of that year, two delegations were sent from the State of New York to represent that State in the Baltimore Convention. One of these, of that party to which I belong, was headed by Daniel S. Dickinson. The other was led by Mr. Cambreleng. Gentlemen are now here who were present on that occasion, and can testify whether I correctly state its history. The Committee on Credentials reported a resolution requiring that each of the delegations should pledge themselves, whatever might be the result, to stand by the decision and the action of the convention. Here you first see this "wriggling in and wriggling out" that has been so frequent since. Mr. Dickinson, in behalf of the "Hards," declared that we would abide by the action of the convention, whatever it might be. But Mr. Cambreleng, representing the Softs, protested that they would agree to no such proposition, and proclaimed that they would remain open to do as they pleased after the action of the convention had been announced.

Under these circumstances the convention determined, or was about to determine, that Mr. Dickinson and "the Hards" should take their seats as the rightful delegates to the convention. The moment it was known that the decision of the convention was, or would be, adverse to the pretensions of the Softs, then they again resorted to the same "wriggling in and wriggling out." They declared they had not meant to decline submitting their claims to the body, and desired to be heard before the convention. The delegates granted their request, and listened to the arguments made on both sides. Then commenced that unfortunate and disastrous process of temporizing; and with probably an honest, but most ill-judged expectation of harmonizing and uniting the action of the Democratic party of the State of New York, the convention undertook to form a coalition—a coalition of opposite principles—which must always fail, always has failed, and will most signally fail now. They resolved to receive into the body the Hards, and the disaffected Van Buren men, as equally entitled to favor, and thus neutralized and took away the vote of New York.

They admitted both of those two sets of delegates—the one representing those who afterwards went to Buffalo, and became the chief priests of Free-Soilism; and the other, the "Hards," who fought them and the Abolitionists to the bitter end. Do you begin to know who the "Hards" are now?

After the convention had proceeded to ballot, and after General Cass had received the nomination, our same Soft friends, who had "wriggled in and wriggled out" so often, took up their hats and walked out of the convention, after having been allowed to neutralize and disfranchise the vote of the State of New York! After this audacious piece of trickery and effrontery, they went home, called a public meeting in the Park of the city of New York, denounced the convention that had received them, and resolved to hold a convention at Utica, in opposition to that held in Baltimore. They accordingly afterwards chose delegates, and met in Utica, and nominated Martin Van Buren for President, and a respected Senator from Wisconsin for Vice President. These straight forward, honest, plain-dealing patriots withheld, however, from their candidate for the Vice Presidency any notification of his nomination, until, finally, after waiting in vain for an official notice, he was compelled to come out in the public papers and repudiate the action of those "Softs?" [To Mr. SMITH.] Do you begin to see now who the "Softs" are?

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 19, 1854.

NEW SERIES.....No. 13.

When, Mr. Chairman, they had nominated Mr. Van Buren, the Abolitionists—and I desire to say nothing disrespectful of them, because much as I differ from them, and totally as I repudiate their principles, I like sincerity, I like open dealing, I like manliness, and I like to see men stand by their principles when they believe them to be right, no matter how erroneous, in my judgment, those principles may be—these Abolitionists from Ohio and elsewhere, seeing the movement that had been commenced by the "Softs," proposed, at meetings held in several of the States, a general convention, to be held at Buffalo in August, 1848. It is now asked by the South who are the "Hards?" I answer, the men who spurned the assemblage at Buffalo, and who denounced and resisted that convention. Who are the "Softs?" The men who have coalesced with, and now support those who went into that convention, and who there acted with colored persons, and with avowed Abolitionists. I repeat, I mean no disrespect to the latter, for they, I believe, were sincere.

I perceive one gentleman who sits near me in this Hall who was an active participant in that convention at Buffalo. I allude to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GIDDINGS.] I mean no slur upon him, because I am sure that, however much the Free Soil leaders may be ashamed of themselves now, he does not in the least degree, as respects his own participation in it, partake of that sentiment. [Laughter.] I see behind him another gentleman who was also a participant in the movement, one of my colleagues, [Mr. GERRIT SMITH]—a gentleman of great and varied ability, and, as I believe, sincere in his views. Of these two gentlemen, the former pledged his political friends to support Mr. Van Buren, if nominated, and the latter recommended to the now allies of the "Softs," that they should nominate the candidate just named. A son of John Quincy Adams was placed upon the ticket as the candidate for Vice President, and amidst the acclamations of the present associates of the "Softs," of the Whigs, and the Abolitionists, that almost raised the roof from the building, that ticket was presented to the country for the purpose of defeating the "Hards," and the regular nomination of General Cass. The plot succeeded. They who now cooperate with these men, who deceived and betrayed the Democratic party, are now "the Softs," the men who stood by that party are the "Hards."

Mr. SMITH, of New York, (interrupting.) My colleague has fallen into a mistake, it he supposes that I attended the Buffalo convention.

Mr. CUTTING. I did not say so.

Mr. SMITH. I think my colleague did say so.

Mr. CUTTING. I said that you were a participant in that convention.

Mr. SMITH. In what way?

Mr. CUTTING. By writing a letter to the convention signed "Gerrit Smith," recommending Mr. Van Buren as a candidate for the Presidency.

Mr. SMITH. I know that was the report. I wrote no such letter.

Mr. CUTTING. The gentleman wrote a letter apologizing for some cause which kept him away, and recommending to that convention the nomination of Martin Van Buren.

Mr. SMITH. Again I say, Mr. Chairman, that I wrote no such letter. I gave no such apology. There is not one word of truth in the statement, though the gentleman believes it to be true.

Mr. CUTTING. My authority is a letter, published in the papers of that day, signed "Gerrit Smith." The original I have not seen; but I pledge myself to the gentleman, if he will accompany me, to point out in a print, as part of the published proceedings of that convention of August 9 or 10, 1848, a letter purporting to have his name added to it. If I do not point it out to him, I shall state to the House that I have been in error. If, on the other hand, I do exhibit it to him, my friend need say nothing about it, and silence will amount to what is now the fashion of the day—not approval, but "acquiescence." [Laughter.] I am anxious, if wrong, to admit my error; but I ask no such concession from the gentleman. I simply desire him to go with the Administration in support of the manly and candid principle of "acquiescence." [Renewed laughter.]

Now a little more about the Hards and Softs.

Mr. CORWIN. I would ask the gentleman from New York where those who stood upon the Buffalo platform now are?

Mr. CUTTING. They are mostly with those who are now called "Softs."

Mr. CORWIN. I protest, then, against the declaration of the Ohio Whigs having anything to do with them.

Mr. CUTTING. The Ohio Whigs need no protest to have it understood they are out of such company, because they stand upon their own platform, and need nothing to prove they are not hunting with the Buffaloes. [Laughter.] I do not care anything in this connection about the Ohio Whigs. It seems to me that the Free-Soilers have succeeded in doing, in Ohio, the very thing that we prevented them from doing, and mean to prevent them from doing in New York, unless prevented by the Administration—abolitionizing the Democratic party.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the gentleman allow me to put a question to him?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. CUTTING. I am now answering an inquiry as to the history of the Hards and the Softs. If the question is in regard to that subject I yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to determine that fact.

Mr. HUGHES. The question is personal to the gentleman. It may be that he will find difficulty in replying to it.

Mr. CUTTING. I desire to proceed with my remarks, and I hope that the committee will bear with me.

[Cries of "Yield to your colleague!" "Let the question be propounded!"]

Mr. CUTTING. I desire to go on with what I have commenced.

Mr. HUGHES, (amid much confusion,) said: I would like to ask the gentleman whether he did not preside, in 1849, over a convention in New York, which nominated the Union ticket between the Hunkers and Barnburners?

Mr. CUTTING. I do not yield to the gentleman to correct him in anything at present personal to myself. I must proceed with the history of these parties. The presidential election of 1848 resulted in this: Mr. Van Buren and the Buffalo platform were driven out of the conflict without a single electoral vote, and the opinion of the people of the United States, as pronounced on that occasion, renders it wholly unnecessary that I should again refer to that gentleman. I leave him, sir, where the votes of every State of this Union left him after that controversy. I observed that one effect of the treachery of the Free-Soilers was to leave Mr. Van Buren at the close of the canvass without a vote; another was to defeat the Democratic party, and to elevate General Taylor to the presidential chair.

After this great national defeat, when there was no hope of reward or of patronage to those who belonged to the Democratic party, or who stood unto our principles, we were left to rally upon principle alone. We proceeded forthwith in New York to organize with good heart, with good cheer, not the least doubting that we would again resuscitate and restore the party to its ancient strength. We fought in the State of New York, as I have before observed, on principle. We went on after 1848 gradually improving; and it was palpable that when the next presidential election should arrive there would be a candidate nominated at Baltimore favorable to those principles in respect to which we had before nailed our flag to the mast. We asked for nothing, and wanted but to wait patiently, hopefully, until that day came round which was to restore us in the State of New York, and elsewhere, to our former supremacy. Our party, when reorganized, was like a feeble sapling, promised soon to be a towering oak, to shadow and protect our land. Unfortunately, however, men who were desirous of office, who were longing for the spoils and could not wait, began to project combinations, to make coalitions, and see whether they could not more promptly accomplish their ends by bringing together those still-professing Democrats who had deserted our party in 1848—the Buffalo Free-Soilers—with those ambitious of power—and induce them to act together in solid column, animated by the hope of spoils held up before their eyes as an inducement to band together. These men thus over-anxious for office, set their wits in motion to make up a sort of patched platform for us in New York; which, like a more recent example, should be an amnesty for the recent past, and which should bring together opposing factions, united by the ignoble hope of place, and in the mere spirit of spoils. This coalition was resisted until the current was overwhelming, by the force and influence of those who wanted to be constables, and clerks, and sheriffs, and Governors, and Senators, and Cabinet officers; thus creeping up from the lowest to the highest offices in the land. They, in our conventions, outnumbered all opposition, and formed what they called a party for the sake of "union and harmony."

When that coalition party way was finally determined upon, I acquiesced, as my other friends did. We were willing to allow a fair trial to the experiment which was then determined on; and if the party could be thereby brought back to its ancient principles, we were content. When the matter was resolved upon, I determined to yield it my support, and to contribute a fair and cordial support to the efforts of the majority, in order that no blame of preventing the reestablishment of the Democratic party might, in that State, be attributed to me. This experiment, sir, went on till the election of General Pierce; and then announcements were heard from New Hampshire, and from those States where Free-Soilism had most prevailed, that there had been a truce with Free-Soilers got up in Baltimore, and an act of amnesty passed, by which yearling Democrats should come in with equal claims with those who had fought the good fight, year after year, under all circumstances of political fortune, to which I have adverted. These men, after the Baltimore convention had nominated General Pierce, rushed in to his support, because they saw the result clearly, and that the spoils were within their reach. They went into the fight for that campaign quite willing to adopt any principles for the occasion.

And we, too, good-natured people of the old guard, shaking our long ears, secure in the belief that the resolutions adopted at Baltimore meant something, and that they distinctly approved the principles of the compromise acts of 1850, and carried out the doctrine which we had been fighting for so long, and for so many weary days—and that they approved of, and not merely acquiesced in, the doctrine of non-intervention with slavery in the Territories—we, too, went into the election with good heart, and President Pierce was whirled into the lofty chair of State that he now fills.

But soon, Mr. Chairman, a dénouement came to satisfy most of my friends in New York that they had been utterly deceived in what was meant at Baltimore by the contrivers of the platform. It began to be whispered by some of the knowing ones, that after all, these Baltimore resolutions did not mean much. For days before the assembling of the convention it was said that some anxious gentlemen had met to frame and nicely form resolutions upon the absorbing question of slavery in the Territories, that would be acceptable to the Free-Soilers of 1848, and that would meet the approbation of all the elements whose votes were needed. It seems that there was some gentleman, whose name is withheld from history, who is said to have been a warm friend of the compromise measures, who took the initiative in preparing the resolutions. Two or three other gentlemen, whose names are equally withheld from general notoriety, who had zealously opposed the great measures of 1850, associated themselves with the one who undertook to originate the resolutions. It is now revealed, as a part of the secret history of that day, that every word of the platform, as respects the slavery questions, was handled and weighed, and such expressions as might shock any nervous brethren were thrown aside, and the resolutions were manipulated until nothing was reported except such as evaded any approbation of the compromise resolutions, and simply acquiesced therein—they were merely submitted to!

The Buffalo Free-Soilers, and all their associates, jumped nimbly upon this platform, and "acquiesced" in, but did not approve of the compromise. The election was scarcely over, when we found one gentleman, who was nominated at Buffalo by the Free-Soilers, and by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] and his friends as the Free-Soil candidate for Governor of New York, in 1848, was currently spoken of for a Cabinet office, and finally was rewarded with the office of Sub-Treasurer in the city of New York. Another conspicuous gentleman was placed in the post office of that city, and another selected for surveyor of the port. When it was found that the post offices in the State of New York were filled by the Free-Soilers of Buffalo, many of the "old guard" stood in amazement and wonder, to know what was the cause and occasion of these remarkable appointments.

It was said that this amnesty of 1852 made Free-Soilers of 1848 as worthy of confidence and reward as the old guard, who had never swerved. It is upon that principle the Administration has been conducted. It is idle to deny that this course of policy disgusted the soundest men of the party. They had never worked quietly in harness with those men, who have since been so busy in crushing out the Democratic party of New York.

A high Cabinet officer, (the Attorney General,) it is said, was found, at the last election in our State, throwing his weight against us. The same learned gentleman has been recently engaged in crushing out in Massachusetts. We were not surprised at that, for we knew that for twenty-five years he had been doing nothing but trying to crush out the Democratic party throughout the country; and when he got an office of influence and power, we were not surprised that he turned his efforts against the "old guard" of New York. We were not amazed that that gentleman, who had been engaged in crushing out the Democratic party all his life, should keep his hand in by attempting to crush out all that was left of the Democracy in New York—the "old guard." The past political history of that gentleman is authentically written upon the Journals of this House; which show that for a long series of years he was in the van of those who made themselves conspicuous by their constant and zealous opposition to all the leading measures of the Democratic party, and to the party itself. He is now carrying on the same war against the Hards of New York, under the auspices of the Administration.

When they found these appointments made, it was discovered that they were upon the point of being eaten up—of being exhausted—of being anti-nationalized—of being abolitionized by this fatal coalition; and they became disheartened. I care not for myself, personally, whether gentlemen from the South now repudiate the rank and file of the North that stood by them during their darkest hours. I do not believe that the South itself, in fact, does repulse us.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. We do not.

Mr. CUTTING. I love the gallant people of the South, and I have every reason to love them. My nearest and closest connections are with them. My children look to their relatives there as being as near and closely allied to them in blood as their relatives by their father's side are in the North; and I therefore love the South too well not to hope that in the main, when they get at the truth, they are and will be with us, and that they will recognize those as their friends who were such when they stood in need of friends. I speak for myself, and those who associate with me, in saying that nothing you can do at the South can alter the settled principles that we entertain in regard to the rights of the States; and when the conflict comes which may put in hazard those rights, you will find that the Hards will be where they have always been. I will venture another prediction, that there will be no questions then asked as to "who the Hards are?" and there will be no reference to works of fiction for the purpose of casting a sarcasm upon the reliable, the sound, steadfast, and honest friends of the equal rights of the States.

In an evil hour, and through the misjudgment of many who were sincere in their expectations, the coalition I have alluded to was formed in New York. What coalition formed like it ever stood? You have many examples in history, and among them you will remember that of Fox and Lord North, the Minister of George III., men of opposite principles—the one the enemy, and the other the friend of this country. These two leaders coalesced in order to obtain power, and brought their party together into a coalition; how long did it stand? Of what good was it capable? and what did it do? Nothing but to destroy the reputation and blemish the character of one of the noblest statesmen that Great Britain ever produced. Coalitions are always corrupt. They stand upon no principle except that which is derogatory to human nature. The principle of coalition is, to take men of opposite principles and views and to band them together—like Swiss hired for the occasion—for the purpose of carrying a given campaign, with the hope of plunder and reward stimulating them to united exertion.

This Administration is conducted upon the principles of a coalition, and you can make nothing else of it. When I see a coalition formed between Buffalo Free-Soilers and men of opposite principles; when I find men who have been the constant enemies of the Democratic party taken and elevated to places in the Government; can I call it anything less than a clear and palpable coalition of opposite extremes, cemented by nothing but the hope of present reward, and the absurd hope that they can form of this coalition an Administration party—a Pierce party—to renominate the present Executive, and to keep him and his friends in office? That seems to be the notion. The tendency of all these acts and appointments points unmistakably in that direction. It seems to be the idea that this coalition, which has thus far succeeded, can succeed in crushing out forever all opposition to their designs; that by getting friends into power they can succeed in creating a party by which they can renominate the present incumbent, carry the next presidential election, and retain in office all the incumbents, high and low. Let me say to them that there never was a time, unless it was the result of an accident, and where some great public exciting question was presented with which the Administration was identified, and upon which the views and feelings of the people were greatly enlisted, when such a scheme succeeded. This occasion will not, in my opinion, be an exception to the rule.

I have been led into these prolonged observations, without having had the least idea of addressing this committee upon the present occasion; and it was only because the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. SMITH], for whom I entertain a sincere regard, who I observed the other day, though standing alone, had the manliness and independence to announce his opinion in reference to the Koszta case—I say it was only when that gentleman, who had thus gained my esteem, asked a question, that I, believing his motives to be good, and that he desired, in good faith, the information for which he asked, have volunteered these observations.

But I believe I have already exhausted the patience of the committee, and I will therefore close with the request that what I have said shall not be considered by the House as a consumption of the time of the gentleman from Alabama, but as a sort of interlocutory proceeding.

Mr. SMITH, of Alabama. The debate which I commenced rather playfully has taken so serious a turn that it becomes me to reply, to some extent, to the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUTTING.] Now, sir, when I asked the gentleman from New York, over the way, [Mr. WALSH,] to tell me the difference between "Hards" and "Softs," I sincerely desired that his reply should go out with his speech, for the information of the country; and I am glad that the honorable gentleman from New York nearest to me [Mr.

CUTTING] has taken so much pains to make this response, because I believe that the country really desires the information. The question is, whether the country will take it as the gentleman has given it.

Now, I understood the gentleman, in the beginning of his remarks, to admit that he entered into the coalition by which General Pierce was elected President of the United States.

Mr. CUTTING, (interrupting.) No, I said no such thing. I was alluding to the coalition in New York, and not to the proceedings at Baltimore in 1852, when I was not present. I did all that any one possibly could do to prevent it. When it was formed, when it was under way, I said, try the experiment fairly; and I gave it support until the party broke at Syracuse in September last; and then, when it broke, I fell back, where I would go naturally, with my old friends. Was it to be supposed that when the party broke I should fall in with those whom I had all along been opposing to the best of my ability? Does the gentleman from Alabama now know the difference between the Hards and the Softs?

Mr. SMITH, (resuming.) The question may arise "Who broke the party?" and it may be a very important question. The gentleman admits that he clung to the coalition which he now denounces; but he says that when the party broke, he deserted that coalition. Now, the question is, who broke the party?

Mr. CUTTING. That is another question which I will answer when I get an opportunity, or to which one of my colleagues, whoever may obtain the floor, will answer.

Mr. SMITH. This brings me seriously to consider the state of New York Democratic politics, so to speak, now, and for the last twenty years. The gentleman dwelt long and seriously upon the question of spoils. Now, you must well know, sir, that when the leaders of the Democratic party in New York go into coalitions, form combinations, and determine to carry the State, they always do it; they have never failed yet to do it.

Mr. CHURCHWELL, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman from Alabama give way for a motion that the committee do now rise?

Mr. SMITH. I will yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. It is getting late, and I therefore move that this committee do now rise. The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman [Mr. ORR] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the following bills, which they had instructed him to report back to the House without amendment, and with a recommendation that they do pass.

House bill (No. 50) "making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the year ending June 30, 1855;" and House bill (No. 47) "making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1855."

And that the committee had also had under consideration, House bill (No. 49) "to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1854;" and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOUSTON. I trust that the gentleman will withdraw his motion until the bills, which have just been reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, are ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and passed. It will take but a few minutes to do so.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon ordering the invalid pension appropriation bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. LILLY. This is an important bill, involving the expenditure of a large amount of money, and ought to be acted upon with a full House. I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which certain propositions in reference to the combination of railroads to the Pacific, were referred to the select committee of thirteen. I do not propose the consideration of the motion at this time; but only that it shall be entered upon the Journal.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from New Jersey insists on his motion, I would request the withdrawal of it until I can submit a motion to recommit the bill from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, so that they may come up first in order for consideration to-morrow.

Mr. LILLY. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States, for the year ending June 30, 1855, was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

Mr. READY. I do not think that the House is now in a condition to consider the proposition, and therefore move that we do now adjourn.

Mr. ORR. If the gentleman will permit me, before he submits his motion to adjourn, I will move a recommitment of the bills to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to keep them from the Speaker's table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that their consideration be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. ORR. I agree to the gentleman's motion. I am for anything to keep them off the table.

The question was taken, and Mr. JONES's motion was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn, and it was agreed to.

Thereupon the House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve, m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 18, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, &c.

Mr. FISH presented the petition of citizens of New York, praying Congress to enter into a contract with Christian Hansen for the transportation of the United States mails in steamers from the United States to certain ports in Europe; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a petition of inspectors of the port of New York, praying for an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, presented the petition of the Mayor and aldermen of the city of Memphis, Tennessee, praying the establishment of a marine hospital in that city; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the petition of W. Claude Jones, praying compensation for services rendered in the Florida war of 1837 and 1838; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PEARCE presented the petition of John McCutchen, praying compensation for performing certain clerical duties in the office of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COOPER presented a report of the proceedings of a public meeting, held in the city of Philadelphia, in favor of a reduction in the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SHIELDS presented the petition of Jean Baptiste Beaubien, of Illinois, praying indemnity for the loss of certain lands in the city of Chicago, in said State; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Also, the petition of M. Lovell, an officer of the Army, praying that the compensation allowed officers of the Army, while attending courts-martial, may be increased; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOUSTON presented the memorial of E. J. McLane, praying compensation for his services in seizing and detaining horses and mules smuggled into the United States from Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. STUART presented the petition of citizens of Muskegon, Michigan, praying the establishment of a mail route from Mill Point, via Muskegon, to Croton, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. ADAMS presented the memorial of Clements, Bryan & Co., praying indemnity for losses sustained by the rescinding of a contract for furnishing supplies; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CHASE presented a petition of the members of the General Assembly of Ohio, praying the division of the State into two judicial districts; which, as a bill upon the subject was pending before the Senate, was ordered to lie on the table.

DETENTION OF NORTHERN MAILES.

On motion by Mr. FOOT, the communication received yesterday from the Postmaster General, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 9th instant, in regard to the repeated detention of the northern mails, particularly between the cities of New York and Washington, was ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Lewis Morris be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. MASON, it was Ordered, That the memorial of John Balestier, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

On motion by Mr. PEARCE, it was Ordered, That the memorial of John Connell, in behalf of sundry claimants in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, for return of duties collected under the tariff of 1828, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

On motion by Mr. STUART, it was Ordered, That the petition of the administrator of John Anderson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. FOOT, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of Ira Day be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the memorial of citizens of Philadelphia against the removal of the United States Mint from that city, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance; which was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT. The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred a resolution of the Senate, directing that committee to inquire whether, consistently with the Constitution, provision can be made for referring causes instituted according to the course of the common-law to referees, and whether such provisions, if they could be constitutionally made, would be expedient, have directed me to make a report; which I ask may be printed. The report is adverse to the power.

It was so ordered.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the petition of Francis Barnes, praying compensation for services as inspector in the custom-house at New Orleans, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the memorial of Benjamin S. Roberts, praying compensation for losses incurred during the Mexican war, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill explanatory of an act for the relief of Benjamin S. Roberts, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, the matters in regard to it having been under the consideration of a former committee, and the principle disallowed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of John G. Camp, praying the settlement of his accounts as marshal of the middle district of Florida, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of Samuel A. Hempstead, praying compensation for services as district attorney in defending claims to lands in Arkansas, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief, which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of James Chapman, administrator of Thomas Chapman, to have paid over to him one fourth part of the proceeds of the cargo of the brig Diana, condemned as violating the revenue laws, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Thomas Chapman, formerly collector of the port of Georgetown, South Carolina; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the documents in support of the claim of Richard Fitzpatrick for compensation for losses sustained in consequence of the occupation of his land as a military station, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of Don B. Juan Domercq, a Spanish subject, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of James W. Low, reported a bill for the compensation of James W. Low and others, for the capture of the British private-armed schooner Ann, during the late war with Great Britain; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Purser T. P. McBlair, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

RAILROADS AND NORMAL SCHOOL.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, in pursuance of notice given some days since, I now ask leave to introduce a bill granting lands to the State of Pennsylvania, in aid of the construction of the Sunbury and Erie Railroad, and to establish and endow a normal school for the gratuitous education of female teachers, and for other purposes. As the grant asked for in it is somewhat different, or for objects differing from those hitherto made, I beg leave to occupy the attention of the Senate for five minutes in explanation of the provisions of the bill, and in giving some brief reasons for presenting it.

Leave was granted to introduce the bill.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, in introducing this bill to the Senate, I desire to make a few remarks explanatory of its objects.

This bill grants to the State of Pennsylvania two millions three hundred and eighty thousand six hundred and eleven acres of the public lands of the United States, one half of which is to be appropriated to aid in the construction of the Sunbury and Erie Railroad, a work designed to connect the Atlantic ocean with the western lakes, by a route shorter by nearly one hundred miles, and with lighter grades, than any other road hitherto constructed between the waters of the lakes and those of the ocean. This road is of as much national importance as any other to which the Government has ever lent its aid—connecting, as I have already stated, Philadelphia with Erie, and the Atlantic with the lakes. The national character of this work has been repeatedly recognized by officers connected with the Topographical Bureau. Colonel Abert, in his report to the Secretary of War, on the 6th of November, 1845, says: "This railroad will furnish a communication between Erie and Philadelphia, and cannot of itself fail to give to the harbor of Erie considerations of great national importance."

The bill next provides, that so much of the remaining half of the lands granted to the State of Pennsylvania as shall be necessary for the purpose, shall be appropriated by the Legislature of the State in establishing and endowing a normal school, at some suitable place, for the gratuitous education of female teachers; and the residue, if any, to be applied in aid of such works of internal improvement as the Legislature may think proper.

Whatever may have been formerly thought of granting lands to aid in the construction of works of internal improvement within the States, the policy of such grants has been recognized by years of practice, and the appropriation of many millions of acres of the public lands. The lands granted for this purpose, it is true, have been generally contiguous to the roads they were intended to aid, and always within the limits of the States through which the roads were located. But although within the States, these lands were as much the property of the United States as if they had been outside of the State boundaries; and the members of the corporations to which they have been granted are frequently the residents of other States than those through which the improvements pass.

I am aware, Mr. President, that a distinction has been attempted to be drawn in favor of the grants to improvements in the new States. But this distinction has no foundation, either in justice or equity. The distinction attempted to be drawn, consists of the alleged fact, that the United States not only lose nothing by granting, as they do, the alternate sections for purposes of improvement within the States, but that, on the contrary, they become gainers by the increased facility of selling the reserved sections, and the appreciation which takes place in their price. This is plausible; but there is something sophistical in the argument. If these improvements, for whose benefit the lands are granted, were constructed by the companies which own them, from their own resources, the lands contiguous to them would rise in price, and trade and commerce receive all the stimulating effects that are erroneously supposed to be the result of the Government grants.

It is sometimes said that works of internal improvement in the new States would stand still for want of means to carry them on unless Government should aid them with grants of land, such as many of them have received. It is, no doubt, in a measure, true, that some of these improvements might not have been constructed but for the aid afforded by Government. But how many works of internal improvement in the old States have been deferred for want of adequate means to carry them on? Government aid is as necessary in the old States as in the new ones; for it is not true, as we are sometimes told, that the new States are too poor to make internal improvements without the aid of Government. Almost all the new States are in the enjoyment of unexampled prosperity, possessing resources in the fertility of their soil which are unequalled in the older States. But this is not all. Even independently of the grants of land which they have received from the Government, the new States have, in most instances, made the capital of the citizens of the old States tributary to their enterprises of internal improvement. Scarcely one of the great improvements in the western States but has enlisted the aid of eastern capitalists in its construction. The effect of these grants is, therefore, to swell the revenues of the stockholders in our eastern cities, who are largely interested in most of these enterprises.

But to return to the argument, that a distinction favorable to the new States exists in the fact that the Government is fully indemnified for the lands granted to them, by the enhanced price of the reserved sections. Let this be conceded, and what does it amount to? The lands granted are for that reason none the less a gift to the companies engaged in making the improvements; and such gift is made at the expense of the purchasers of the lands, who are thereby compelled to pay a double price for them. These improvements, it is true, enhance both the lands and their products, by opening a cheaper road to better markets; but this effect is produced by railroads and canals in the old States as well as the new. What would be the advantages of the railroads and canals of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Missouri, and other new States, in comparison with what they are, were it not for similar improvements in the old States, through which their surplus products are poured into the laps of the cities on the seaboard?

The railroads and canals of New York, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts are scarcely less productive of benefit to the people of the States which I have mentioned, than to the people of the States through which they pass. And will it be pretended that the improvements in the old States do less to promote the prosperity, and increase the wealth, power, and security of the whole country, than similar improvements in the new ones? If they do not, the argument that the United States are more benefited by a grant of lands to the new States than to the old ones, is fallacious.

The truth is, when rightly told, that the doubling of the price of the alternate sections, as is now the practice, is a tax upon the people of the country for the benefit of the railroad corporations, which are the grantees of the lands. It is time that this fallacy should be exploded; and the people made to understand that these grants, which the clever ingenuity of our western friends has made them believe were a benefit to the country, are, when rightly understood, a tax upon themselves.

And, Mr. President, is there not something in this policy inconsistent with the idea now so prevalent in the country, that it is the duty of Congress to provide free farms for the people? There is no sort of harmony between the legislation which increases the price of one portion of the public lands, whilst it proposes to make gratuitous concessions of another.

I have no objection whatever to grant lands to aid in making improvements calculated to increase the wealth, power, and prosperity of the country. But while we give lands to railroads, let us not sell them to the people at a double price. Let us also be just. Concede as much to the new States as you please; but, in doing so, do not refuse to deal with equal liberality to the old ones, at the expense of whose blood and treasure the lands you are giving away were acquired.

The other purpose for which the proposed grant is made is one of such obvious public utility as to need no argument to enforce it. It is, as I have stated already, to establish and endow a school for the gratuitous education of female teachers. The merit of this suggestion belongs to an accomplished lady, Mrs. Sarah J. Hale, and is one which I am sure will commend itself to every liberal and patriotic mind. When the bill comes before the Senate for its action, I will use my privilege as a Senator in pointing out its advantages at length.

One word more, and I have done. My object in fixing upon the number of acres which the bill proposes to grant was, that if other States should at any time think proper to follow the example of Pennsylvania, there might be a criterion for the number of acres found in the number of their population at the time the census of 1850 was taken. The number of acres mentioned in the bill was the number of people in the State in 1850.

The bill was read a first and second time by unanimous consent.

Mr. COOPER. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of opposing the reference of this bill, but I cannot help, at this time, observing that it comes with exceeding bad grace from the State of Pennsylvania to ask for a donation of lands for the purpose of constructing railroads in that State, while it is an open and notorious fact, known I suppose to everybody, that she stands now in open hostility to any communication across her for the purpose of railroad communication. She is entirely opposed to that: her people are in hostility to the General Government, disobeying the decrees of the Federal courts, imprisoning the marshals sent to execute the process of those courts, burning the bridges of the railroad company, tearing up their railroads for some three or four weeks in succession, showing a disposition to interrupt all communication between the east and west across that great thoroughfare. I suppose, sir, that it is a fact that there is obstructed on its way to market there, by reason of that hostility, hundreds of thousands of dollars worth, and I do not know but millions, of perishable property that will probably be lost in consequence of this resistance to the laws of the Government. I say then, sir, that it comes with an ill grace from that State to call on the General Government to grant lands for her benefit, whilst her people stand out in open hostility to all the rest of the States. They ought not to do it; they ought not to ask for the grant until, at all events, they have put down the rioters; and they have not, in my judgment, shown an inclination to do so.

I believe there is power in the State to quell the riots, if it would; but the last information which we have received on the subject, this morning, is that after the road had been rebuilt, it has been destroyed again.

Mr. BUTLER. By the women. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADE. It was by men in women's clothes, sir. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWSON. Last night?

Mr. WADE. Yes, sir, I believe it was last night, or the night before last. Now, Mr. President, I do not know that the General Government can do anything on this subject; but I do know that something ought to be done; and I take this occasion merely to give notice that such is the condition in which we find Pennsylvania with the General Government. We have found her Governor writing to the rioters and saying that he sympathizes very sincerely with them; and we have reason to believe that they are strongly backed by other portions of the State, and by Philadelphia, which is asking, for the benefit of this great road, a grant of land to construct it, while the State itself will not permit a railroad across it to another market. I have no opposition to the reference of the bill; only I wish to connect with the grant a condition that Pennsylvania shall let her railroads be used for the purposes for which they are constructed.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I have one word to say in reply to my honorable friend from Ohio. He is a lawyer, and I believe, indeed I am sure from what I have seen here, a very good one. If, therefore, it were true that a very insignificant portion of our nearly three millions of people have been engaged in violating the law, it would be no reason at all why justice should not be done to the other portion. But, sir, there is an unwritten history in relation to the transactions at Erie; and although I deprecate violence at all times, although I would always have the people of the State which I represent bow submissively to the laws, I will say that there are sometimes provocations that would stir the stagnant blood, even in the hearts of cowards. The gentleman's constituents have used provocations which were well calculated to produce the very scenes of violence which have taken place there; and, sir, when this unwritten history comes to be published, it will be found, in all probability, that the aggressions and wrongs at Erie are not the aggressions and wrongs of the people of Erie.

In saying this, I repeat, that I wish never to encourage a spirit that sets the laws of the country at defiance; but I feel bound to say this much in justice to my constituents; and I shall further take another and more fitting opportunity than the present, to show, at least, where the truth lies, where the aggression came from, and that if there is wrong on the one side, there has been outrage to provoke it.

Mr. WADE. I have only one word to say in reply to the gentleman. He says that the aggressions have been provoked by outrages on the part of the railroad companies. I have only to say on that subject, that the question of these controversies has been adjudicated upon and adjusted by the courts of Pennsylvania, which have found the gentleman at fault; and the rioters were acting in open opposition to the mandates of the Federal courts, and also of the courts of the State; therefore it does not come very well from the Senator to say that the companies were altogether in the wrong. The presumption certainly ought to be the other way, inasmuch as they have the judgments of the courts upon their side.

This has not been a new thing in Pennsylvania. From the time of the whisky insurrection onward, from the western part of the State to the eastern part, insurrections have not been very unusual. But I am not going into that subject now. I only want this thing looked into, so that the grants of land shall contain the condition that there shall be peace towards the rest of the Union in future.

The motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands was agreed to.

VERMONT SENATORSHIP.

Mr. PETTIT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the special order of the day, the report of the Committee on the Judiciary in reference to the right of the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS to a seat in the Senate. I make the motion with the view of getting the subject before the Senate, and then moving its further postponement. I am informed, and such indeed I know to be the case, that Mr. PHELPS, the person most interested in this matter, is confined to his room by indisposition. In view of that, it being just to him that he should be present not only to have the privilege of discussing the subject himself, but of hearing all the debates upon it, I propose to make it the special order for some day hereafter; and I would now state that I have consulted with some of those who desire to debate the question on each side, and they have come to the common understanding, I believe, that this day week will suit better than any other.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. May I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk,] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Toombs] are absent; but they will be here in the course of a fortnight, and we shall then have a full Senate. Would it not be well to postpone the subject until that time?

Mr. GWIN. Say Monday week.

Mr. PETTIT. It is not material, so far as I am concerned; but I am informed that there is one Senator—indeed I know it—who desires to debate the negative of the proposition of the report, and to take ground with the minority. It will not suit his convenience to be here next Monday, or next Tuesday; but next Wednesday it will. I should be quite willing to adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky but for this consideration. A great many Senators have spoken to me about it, and said that this, being a question of privilege, ought to be pressed at as early a day as prudence, and propriety, and justice to the Senator, whose seat is in doubt or solution, would allow. I therefore think, from both views of the subject, we had better postpone it for a week. By that time, I am satisfied, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Phelps] will be in his seat, as well as the other Senator to whom I have alluded, who desires to debate the question.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator from Indiana will say Monday week. The Nebraska bill is to be taken up next Monday, and the week will probably be occupied with it.

Mr. CHASE. We can postpone that.

Mr. GWIN. We can take it up and pass it next week.

Mr. SUMNER. We will not pass it next week.

Mr. BUTLER. One of my colleagues upon the committee, the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. Bayard,] is not likely, according to his arrangements, to be here before Tuesday night; so that if there is a postponement of the question with the view to accommodate any person, it is more particularly to accommodate him, because I think he intends to address the Senate on the question. This being a question of privilege, it ought to be acted upon at as early a day as can be well fixed, because the Senate may be very much embarrassed if the honorable gentleman should be called on to vote upon any measure of importance. Such questions usually have precedence in all parliamentary bodies, but as the gentleman is unwell, we certainly should not force it on in his absence. But Wednesday has been suggested expressly in reference to the accommodation of the honorable Senator from Delaware.

Mr. FOOT. I desire to say, in behalf of my colleague and myself, whose State is most directly and deeply interested in the result of this question, that there is no disposition upon our part to interpose any obstacle, or any cause of delay, beyond what may be due to the justice and importance of the case and the interests of all the parties concerned. It is known personally to me, that my colleague, from indisposition, is unable to appear in his seat this morning with safety to himself, considering the state of his health. He has expressed to me a desire to be heard at length by the Senate upon the question. I cannot doubt that there is an entire disposition on the part of the Senate to accord to him the usual privilege and courtesy which have been extended to others whose right to a seat here has been brought in question.

While I would avoid any appearance of, or any effort to delay the earliest final decision of the question, considering the state of my colleague's health at this time, I regard it but reasonable that some time further should be given, in order that he may have an opportunity to be heard upon a question so important, and so interesting to him and to our State. Whether it be next Monday or next Wednesday, is a matter of indifference to me.

The motion to proceed to the consideration of the special order was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT. I now move that it be postponed to, and made the special order of the day for, Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT ST. MARKS.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill reported from the Committee on Commerce, "to provide for the establishment of a marine hospital at St. Marks, in the State of Florida."

It proposes to appropriate $5,000 for the purpose of establishing a marine hospital at St. Marks, for the accommodation of sick and disabled American seamen.

Mr. MALLORY. I think the reading of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, which accompanies the report of the committee, will be sufficient to satisfy every Senator of the propriety of passing this bill. I ask, therefore, that the letter may be read.

The letter was accordingly read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN OHIO.

On motion by Mr. CHASE, the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill "to divide the State of Ohio into two judicial districts, and to provide for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States therein."

Mr. PEARCE. I should be glad if the Senator from Ohio would consent to let this bill lie over for a few days. My reason for making this request is simply this: I have received a letter from a member of the bar of Ohio, who informs me that he, and some others, are about to proceed to Washington, with the view to make some representation in regard to this subject. I know nothing myself of the facts, but I am informed by him that there is no necessity for the division of the district of Ohio; that the business of the district court there is not such as to occupy more than two weeks in any one term; and that the location of the court is suitable, inasmuch as, although the admiralty business comes from the lakes, in part, and the residue from the Ohio river, there is yet such facility of communication by railroad to Columbus, that parties and witnesses, and all interested, can have no inconvenience in going there when necessary for the purpose of attending court. If these facts be so, it is perhaps worthy of inquiry whether we ought to pass the bill. I should like at any rate, without meaning to express any definite opinion in regard to it, to have it laid over until we can obtain further information from those who, it seems, are coming here for the purpose of giving it to us. It seems to me that this is not an unreasonable request.

Mr. CHASE. I explained yesterday the reasons which induced me to ask the prompt consideration of this bill by the Senate. The communication to which the Senator refers is of the same tenor, I have no doubt, as that which has been addressed to my colleague and to myself. A few gentlemen in the interior of the State, near to the place where the courts are at present held—the city of Columbus—undoubtedly prefer that the courts should remain there. The great public interests involved require that the courts should be held at points indicated by the bill—the two chief cities of the State—one upon Lake Erie, the other upon the Ohio river. My colleague, some ten or fifteen days since, having received a letter or letters from some of those gentlemen, requesting that the bill should lie over for a few days, I consented to it at that time, saying that if they should not be here to make their opposition by Monday last, I would move to take up the bill. They have not come on, and I see no reason why we should wait their further action. Under these circumstances, I trust the Senator from Maryland will offer no opposition to the immediate consideration of the bill. Whatever objections are to be made to it can be made and considered in the other House, where this local interest has a local representative. Here, both the Senators from the State agree that the bill is required by the interests of the State, by the interests of the Government, and by the interests of suitors, and ought not to be delayed.

Mr. GWIN. I know nothing about this matter, but I hope that the Senator from Ohio will agree to the proposition of the Senator from Maryland, for this reason: My colleague, [Mr. Welles,] who is confined to his room by indisposition, and who takes an interest in this bill, cannot come to the Senate, or he would be here for the purpose of paying some attention to the question.

Mr. CHASE. Will he oppose the bill?

Mr. GWIN. He has a right to speak on any question which presents itself here. He is a native of Ohio; and he has a right to speak on this question. He is now confined to his room by sickness; and I think that the courtesy due to a Senator so situated demands that a question in which he takes an interest should not be considered at this time. It is not a local, but a national question, relating as it does to the dividing of what is now one judicial district into two judicial districts.

Mr. CHASE. I am sure the Senator from California could not do a greater disfavor to his colleague than to make him responsible for delay in our action on this bill. When it was first before the Senate, the Senator from California, who is now detained from the Senate by a circumstance which I very much regret, objected, upon the ground that no manifestation of the legislative opinion of Ohio in regard to it had been made. I have since presented the memorial of some fifty of the Senators and Representatives in the Legislature of the State, asking for prompt action upon the bill; and the Senator from California himself, after knowing the opinion of the Legislature in regard to it, came to me and said, that if he had been aware of that state of facts, he should have been solicitous for the prompt action of the Senate. If he were here now, I know he would agree with me.

Mr. GWIN. Then I have no objection at all. I did not know that such was the fact.

Mr. PETTIT. There are three amendments reported to this bill by the Committee on the Judiciary, and only one of them is substantial—the others being merely formal as to verbiage, leaving the bill almost as it was before. It has been well considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, but I say nothing about the necessity or importance of passing such a bill one way or the other. The only material amendment that is proposed is to strike out the last section, which made a local habitation necessary for each judge—which made it obligatory that the judges should reside at the place of holding the courts. The committee thought that that was an improper and unjustifiable restriction. The salaries paid to the judges in the western States would not justify a judge in residing in Cincinnati or in Cleveland, where the two courts are to be held. As there are great railroad facilities in Ohio, the judge may, with great propriety, live upon a farm, large or small, as he may be able, eight, ten, twelve, or twenty miles from the place where the court is held, and be able to go backwards and forwards with great convenience. On that account the committee recommend the amendment to strike out the section requiring the judge to reside in the city where the court is to be held. Otherwise, the committee do not recommend the bill to be materially amended.

The first amendment of the committee was to strike out of the fourth section the words:

Any of the parties in any suit now pending, which, under the provisions of this act, would have been commenced in the northern district, either court for the northern district; and insert in lieu of them, these words:

Any party to any suit now pending, which would have been commenced in the northern district, if this act had been in force before the commencement of said suit, the proper court;

so that the section shall read:

That upon the application of any party to any suit now pending, which would have been commenced in the northern district, if this act had been in force before the commencement of said suit, the proper court may, and, if all the parties consent, shall order that the same be removed, for further proceedings, to the proper court for the northern district, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The second amendment was a verbal one, in the seventh section to strike out "which judge, when appointed," and insert "who."

The amendment was agreed to.

The third amendment was to strike out the last section of the bill, in these words:

Sec. 10. And he it further enacted, That the judges of the districts hereby created shall respectively reside at the place of holding the courts of their respective districts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendments were concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILL.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that the Speaker of that House had signed an enrolled bill, entitled "An act concerning the district courts of the United States in California."

The President signed the above named bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the bill from the Senate concerning the district courts of the United States in California; also, a bill explanatory of an act entitled "An act for the relief of Benjamin S. Roberts."

Also, that the Speaker of the House had signed sundry enrolled bills.

STEAMSHIP SAN FRANCISCO.

The message from the House of Representatives also announced that it had concurred in the resolution of the Senate for the appointment of a committee, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to report some form of acknowledgment to be adopted by Congress to those engaged in the rescue of the passengers and crew of the steamship San Francisco, and that it had appointed Mr. CHANDLER of Pennsylvania; Mr. McMULLIN of Virginia; Mr. CUTTING of New York; Mr. HUNT of Louisiana; Mr. PRATT of Connecticut; Mr. EDDY of Indiana; Mr. VANSANT of Maryland; Mr. CROCKER of Massachusetts, and Mr. SEWARD of Georgia, the committee on its part.

BILLS SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore signed the following enrolled bills, which had received the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

"An act to change the name of the American-built brig John Dutton, and to grant a register in her name;"

"An act to continue in force the act entitled 'An act to ascertain and settle private land claims in the State of California,' and for other purposes;" and

"An act changing the name of the American-built steamer Falcon to that of Queen City."

FEES OF JUDICIAL OFFICERS.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act of Congress approved the 26th of February, 1853, entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed to the clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States," as to increase the compensation of the marshal of the southern and middle division of Alabama, and also the compensation of the clerk of the district court of the United States at the city of Montgomery, Alabama.

As this is a resolution of inquiry, I suppose there will be no objection to its consideration at this time.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. GWIN. I should like to have the resolution amended so as to include officers in California; therefore, I move to amend it by adding to it these words: "and also, of the clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the northern and southern districts of California."

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I think, after having ascertained the views of some Senators around me, that it is proper that the phraseology of the resolution should be so altered as to be general in its terms, instead of being applicable to a few States. I am myself exceedingly desirous that the State of Arkansas, at any rate, should be included in the resolution, if it is to be confined to special cases. I shall, therefore, content myself at present with moving to include the clerks, attorneys, and marshals in the State of Arkansas. At the same time, I must say that I believe the provisions of the resolution ought to be made general in their application to all the States.

Several Senators. Move that amendment.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I will, at the suggestion of some Senators around me, move to amend the resolution so that it shall be general in its terms, instead of being confined to the States specially mentioned.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Although that course may add strength to the inquiry, and although I have heard a great deal of complaint about the inadequacy of the compensation of the officers of the courts of the United States, I should not feel authorized to accept an amendment of this general nature, unless it be the pleasure of the Senate that the inquiry shall be so extended. My object is to obtain some increase of compensation for those gentlemen who are now complaining of the want of a reasonable allowance. I am willing to put the inquiry in any shape which will induce the committee to give it the most favorable consideration. In my own State there is a general complaint that, so far as the subordinate officers are concerned, the compensation allowed them is entirely too low; and therefore it was that I was inclined to confine the resolution simply to an inquiry as to the compensation of the officers there.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, this is not a new subject to the Committee on the Judiciary. At the last session, during the time the fee bill was under consideration, I think there must have been fifty petitions before the committee in regard to this matter. If we adopt a general resolution of inquiry, we shall open the whole of that fee bill. I know, sir, that that law has met with some opposition everywhere; but, on the whole, I think it has rather been received with satisfaction. I now give notice to the gentlemen, that if they make this a general subject of inquiry, the result will be the rejection of all these propositions. If the inquiry be restricted to a particular case, and the information as to that be brought specially before the committee, it will probably receive consideration, and the committee may provide some remedy; but if this inquiry is to assume a general character, it will be impossible for us to review, in so short a time, the whole scale of fees allowed by that bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Do I understand the honorable gentleman from Arkansas as simply moving to amend the resolution so as to include the officers of his own State, or so as to make the inquiry general?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART in the chair.) The pending amendment is that of the honorable Senator from Arkansas, to make the resolution one of inquiry in regard to the compensation of this class of officers throughout the United States.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I trust that, after what has fallen from the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Arkansas will not insist upon his amendment; for, as he must see, it amounts virtually to the denial of any increase of compensation in the particular case in regard to which I propose an inquiry. I insist upon the resolution in the form originally offered, particularly as there is some prospect of getting some increase of compensation in that case where it is eminently due. I trust, therefore, that, after the intimation of the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, my friend from Arkansas will not insist upon burdening this resolution with a general amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. All that I meant to say was, that in some of the districts the compensation of the marshals is abundantly sufficient. The bill has operated unequally, however, by fixing a horizontal scale. We had all the information before us at the last session; but in spite of that, I have no doubt that injustice has been done to many marshals, while others are receiving more, perhaps, than is an adequate compensation.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I can say to the Senator from Alabama that my amendment was to alter the phraseology of the resolution so as to make it general in its application, and not specially confine it to any one of the States or the District of Columbia. I agree with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, that in some States the rates of compensation allowed to marshals and clerks of the district and circuit courts of the United States are ample; but I think, with due deference to the result of the investigations of that committee, that they have carried the principle of reform—if reform it can be called—too far, and in attempting to generalize the system of fees, they have, unavoidably perhaps, inflicted great grievances on the officers in some of the States.

I have suggested the employment of general phraseology in the resolution, because, under that, the committee could make the very discrimination sought for by the Senator from Alabama; and if, on investigation, the committee find that the reasons for discrimination apply to some States and not to others, it will be competent for the committee to single out those States where the compensation should be increased, and to present their claims to the Senate. Hence it was that I suggested the employment of general phraseology as the most direct way of arriving at the end sought for by the Senator from Alabama; but if he considers that the amendment which I have sought to ingraft upon the resolution embarrasses it, I will withdraw this amendment as a measure of accommodation to him, and renew that which I first offered, to embrace the officers of the United States courts in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. MASON. If that course is to be pursued, it will result that other gentlemen will move to include their States, and I, certainly, for one, shall be obliged to ask that the State of Virginia shall be included. Now, I understand the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to say, that if the inquiry be made general, it will result in rejecting the whole measure; but I do not see why it should. I understand that Senator to say, that he has reason to believe that the general fee bill which was passed at the last session of Congress operated judiciously and beneficially, in some sections of the country, and operated injuriously in others, because we adopted a uniform, or horizontal scale. If the general inquiry should be submitted to the committee, I do not see why they might not, in their action upon it, report to the Senate where they think the fees should be enlarged, and where they think they should be allowed to remain as they are. I received a letter no later than to-day from the district attorney for the western district of Virginia, representing that if his fees were allowed to remain as they are he would feel compelled to throw up the office. I know that gentleman; he is an able man, and one who discharges his duty faithfully. And I should have felt it my duty to bring that case to the attention of the committee, if it were not for the motion of the Senator from Alabama, which brings up the whole subject.

I submit that it will be better to make the inquiry general, and then let the committee report to us, as they think proper, those districts where they think the emoluments of these officers should be enlarged, and those where they think they should be allowed to remain as they are. I therefore renew the amendment which the Senator from Arkansas withdrew, to make the inquiry a general one as to the propriety of increasing the fees of these officers throughout the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. The only difficulty upon that subject is this: If you make the inquiry general, we cannot have such general information as will enable the committee to come to an intelligent conclusion. If an application were made from Virginia, I should hold the gentleman from Virginia responsible for the information on which the Committee would frame a bill. If an application came from Alabama, I should hold the gentleman from Alabama responsible for the information on which the bill in that case would be founded. So, too, of the case presented by the gentleman from Arkansas. But if you have one of these general propositions, the effect will be that some will pour in upon us a great deal of information upon which we can rely, while we shall have no information from other parts; and the result will then be that we shall have to form at last a general bill, upon information from some parts of the Union, but without information from others. I prefer that each State shall stand upon its own bottom.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I agree entirely with the honorable Senator from South Carolina. Congress passed a general fee bill within the last year, fixing on a horizontal scale the fees of all the officers connected with the Federal judiciary throughout the United States. Undoubtedly that must operate, in many cases, injuriously and unequally. But still the general principle of equality of compensation for similar services is a sound one; and it is for those who can make out a special case, requiring an increase or alteration of the fees as applied to their particular States, to bring that case before the Senate, and let it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. If so referred, I may say for myself, as one member of the committee, that I should hold that it was incumbent on a Senator, from any State making a proposition, to have the fee bill revised, as regards that State, by clear and undoubted facts, to demonstrate to the committee why that bill is, in its provisions, unequal and unjust as to the compensation of the officers in that State. If such a case can be made out, there will then be a plain reason given why, as to that State, you should depart from the general principle of the fee bill. Then other Senators, if they think the bill inapplicable to their States, can bring forward similar resolutions. By this course each case will be referred separately, and each will be, as it ought to be, considered separately; throwing the onus on those who make the proposition to depart from the general rule which pervades the whole United States, to make out, in the clearest manner, the necessity of the exception as applied to their particular State.

Mr. CASS. I submit whether this discussion is not rather unprofitable? It is very evident to me that we should have one general proposition before us. If the opposite course is to be pursued I shall certainly move to insert Michigan, and I suppose other gentlemen will move to insert other States. I know very well that the fees allowed in Michigan are too low, and, therefore, if the inquiry is to be as to particular cases, I shall move to include the officers in that State. The objection to a general resolution which is urged by the honorable chairman [Mr. BUTLER] I do not think amounts to much, for this simple reason: that any gentleman who feels himself interested will submit the necessary information to the committee to enable them to act. The form of this resolution is perfectly indifferent to me; but if it is to apply to a particular case, I intend, as I said, before, to have Michigan included.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is a great deal of force in what has been said by the honorable Senator from Michigan. From the slight examination which I have been able to bestow on the subject, I am satisfied that in the large cities the marshals are amply compensated; and as the gentleman from Delaware says, it is those cases which are exceptions which should be provided for. Provision should be made for officers who now complain of the want of a sufficient allowance in the discharge of their duty. I see a number of Senators around me who are perfectly quiet in this matter, and who, no doubt, are satisfied as to the operation of the bill in their States; but a moment's reflection will satisfy the Senate that there are exceptions. We have, for instance, in all our legislation connected with California, allowed a larger compensation to officers there than in the other States, and for what reason? Because the cost of living there is more than anywhere else in this country. Everything there is on a higher scale, and charges are more exorbitant. There should be discrimination in this matter. In many localities the compensation allowed to these officers is ample; but in many of the southern States there are gentlemen who occupy these positions, who, I can show to the satisfaction of the committee and the Senate, are not able to make enough, after paying their ordinary expenses, to leave them a sufficient remuneration for their labor. Can we ask gentlemen to discharge these duties, and to labor without compensation?

If the gentleman from Virginia thinks the compensation of these officers in his State is not sufficient, let him introduce a resolution in regard to them, without burdening this resolution with the general subject. I hope to be able to satisfy the committee and the Senate, that the compensation of the marshal in Alabama is entirely insufficient. I intend to show the committee that if he had but one district to attend to, his compensation would not be sufficient; but we have thrown on him twenty-two counties more, and yet he has but the same compensation that the marshal had for one district before.

The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary has intimated that if we send to his committee a sweeping inquiry, he will feel bound, from the general operation of the law, to report against the proposition; and therefore I ask gentlemen to refrain from overburdening my resolution with other matters. Is it liberal or fair, under these circumstances, to give it that general scope which gentlemen now intimate that they desire to do? I trust that the gentlemen who think the compensation of the marshals, clerks, and attorneys in their States should be increased, will offer their propositions, as the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Arkansas have done, as separate resolutions, or as amendments to this, and not burden this resolution with a general inquiry.

Mr. MASON. I renewed the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas, merely because I supposed that was the sense of the Senate. I have no desire to make the resolution general; but I ask, at any rate, that the State of Virginia be included. I withdraw my proposition, and move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas by inserting further:

And also of the attorneys, marshals, and clerks of the United States for the eastern and western districts of Virginia.

Mr. BRIGHT. I dislike to interpose any objection to the proposition offered by the Senator from Alabama. If I understand it, it is an inquiry as to the propriety of increasing the fees of the district attorneys, clerks, and marshals.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not the district attorney—the clerk and marshal in Alabama.

Mr. BRIGHT. The presentation of that question raises the general question as to whether the fees of that class of officers in the different States are now sufficient. No longer ago than this morning I received a letter from the clerk of the district court of the State which I in part represent here, complaining of the inadequacy of his compensation. He shows in detail the inadequacy of the fees paid to him for the labor which he performs. And the same may be said of the marshal. I have no doubt that the fees paid to the marshal and district attorney in Alabama are low, and that they might, with great propriety, be raised, in view of the general increase of compensation that the General Government is making to her officers everywhere. But I cannot sit by and see the honorable Senator from Alabama introduce a special case, when the evil is general, without moving an amendment to his proposition to include the State that I represent.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am very willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. BRIGHT. I think the proper direction to give to the subject would be to refer it to the Judiciary Committee, that they may perfect and report a general bill. I know that the amount of compensation paid in New York and some of the leading cities of the Union would be more than would be expected in the western States. The proper method to adopt, in my judgment, in reference to this matter, would be to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report a bill graduating the fees in the different districts, governed by the circumstances that surround each case.

As I remarked before, there is no reason why this class of officers in Alabama should receive more than they do in the State of Indiana. The same reason would not apply in the State of California. There this class of officers should receive more; there is no doubt about that. These are matters which could all be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Each gentleman feeling aggrieved could go before that committee, and give his reason for the scale of fees he presents for his State; and I think the honorable Senator from Alabama would arrive at his object more readily by consenting to the reference of the general subject to the Committee on the Judiciary, that the matter may be fully considered by them.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, I regret this debate, and I regret that the proposition of the Senator from Alabama was not adopted without discussion; for it places Senators to whom representations of a similar nature have been made in the unpleasant predicament, either of voting for a general amendment, an amendment making this inquiry general in reference to the officers of the circuit and district courts in all the States, or else of moving to amend this proposition by adding their particular States.

I am in the same predicament with the Senator from Virginia. I have received a letter from the district attorney of my own State, making complaint that his fees are too low; and I doubt whether there are many Senators on this floor who have not received letters from one or the other of the officers of these courts making the same complaints. Now, I would suggest that all these amendments be withdrawn, that the proposition of the Senator from Alabama may be allowed to be considered separately, and the question taken upon it. I hope the reference will be made as is usual with resolutions of inquiry; and then let all of us who wish to bring questions of this character before the committee, either bring forward our own resolutions, or frame a general resolution, without interfering with the proposition of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I am decidedly in favor of the inquiry which my friend from Alabama has proposed by his resolution, and I am in favor of extending it also, with his permission, to the officers in other States who are in like condition under the operation of this law, and who are suffering from the most preposterous and absurd interpretation put upon it in the Comptroller's office. If there is no amendment pending now, which renders it improper for me to make the motion, I will move—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STUART.) The Chair will suggest that there is an amendment to an amendment already pending.

Mr. BADGER. Then I will refrain from suggesting the amendment which I propose to offer presently, to include the marshal of my own State.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If the gentleman will allow me, I will alter the resolution so as to answer his purpose better.

Mr. BADGER. I hope so.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When I offered this resolution I was not aware that there was such general dissatisfaction with the fee bill. I felt so perfectly assured that I could demonstrate to the committee and to this body, that those gentlemen, whose compensation I am seeking to increase, ought to have increased emoluments, that I was unwilling to burden the matter with any other proposition. Since the discussion has arisen, I have become satisfied that there is a general dissatisfaction and discontent; and from the indications which I see in this body, I am willing that the inquiry shall have a more general range; and I therefore accept the proposition of the gentleman to give it a general direction, instead of restricting the inquiry to my State. I am therefore content myself to accept that amendment, and to make the inquiry general. I modify my resolution, by adding to it, as originally offered, the following:

And also so as to increase the compensation of the clerks, marshals, and attorneys in the several judicial districts of the United States.

MESSRS. GWIN, MASON, and SEBASTIAN withdrew the amendments suggested by them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the resolution as modified.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to say, before the question is taken upon this resolution, that the interest I feel in it springs not only from the fact that I know the officers referred to in my own State—particularly the marshal—are most inadequately compensated, but from another reason. Sir, I had the honor to be a member of the Committee on the Judiciary at the last session of Congress, when we took up and passed a bill from the House of Representatives upon the general subject of these compensations and allowances.

We were then misled into leaving an amount of control over this subject in the Comptroller's office, which is utterly inconsistent with any just, reasonable, or fair interpretation of the law which we have passed. In that office, the usages of the courts, the continued and unbroken practice of the several judicial districts of the United States, are considered as nothing, and a system of interpretation is introduced and put upon that law, which renders it uncertain and injurious, and the whole transactions of these fiscal officers of the Government entirely vexatious and injurious in that Department. For instance, sir, that law gives to a marshal, for the execution of process, a certain mileage compensation for the distance of the place at which the process has to be served from the seat of the court to which it is to be returned. Well, sir, as I understand, the Comptroller, preparing a system of regulations and of rules, as he calls them, requires that the officer shall make an oath that he has actually made the travel for the purpose of serving the process in question. The law requires no such thing; the law intended no such thing. The law provided a system by which the officer should be compensated, upon the whole, for his trouble and service upon the whole.

Now, for instance, take my own State. The present marshal lives in the vicinity of Raleigh, the seat of government of the State, and has a process to execute three hundred miles from Raleigh, in the mountains of North Carolina. Was it ever the expectation or the intention of the framers of that law that he should get upon his horse, with saddle-bags under him, or sit in his buggy, with his pony before him, and drive three hundred miles for the purpose of executing that process? Surely not. He has a deputy there for the purpose of executing the process. The law does not require actual travel to give him the compensation. It would be absurd if it did. But, yet, if I understand, according to the regulations issued from the comptroller's office, he is required to make an affidavit that he has actually performed the travel, or he is not entitled to the compensation which the law gives him. He is entitled to what? Why, a dollar—for executing a writ three hundred miles from the place where the return is to be made—or two dollars—or whatever the legal fee may be.

Mr. President, it is just exactly a reproduction of the system of action which took place in that office, some years ago, with regard to the compensation of the members of the Senate—that compensation which has always been called their "constructive mileage," though that is a very false and mistaken term by which to designate it. We all recollect that, though the act of Congress upon the subject requires that the amount of compensation to which the members and officers of this body are entitled shall be certified by the Presiding Officer, and when so certified, shall be allowed and passed at the Treasury, the First Comptroller refused to pass the accounts of the Secretary of this body, though thus certified; and we were under the necessity, before those accounts could be passed, of putting a declaratory clause, which I had the honor of moving in this body, upon an appropriation bill, to the effect that the certificates were conclusive upon the officers of the Treasury Department of the Government. Now, sir, we have got back exactly to the same situation with regard to allowances to be made to marshals of the United States, and a set of "regulations," as they are called, prescribing affidavits, is put forth by the First Comptroller of the Treasury, who has no more right to require an affidavit to be taken than he has to require that a custom-house shall be built. The affidavit, if made, is a voluntary affidavit. The affidavit, if made, is one which incurs not the legal penalties of perjury. He might just as well require that the judge who holds his court shall make affidavit that he has discharged his duty before he shall be entitled to compensation.

Allowances of judges pass for nothing with this officer; the decisions of the courts pass for nothing with him; the long-continued practice of the Government passes for nothing with him; and I say that the sole question raised, on the motion of the Senator from Alabama, is, whether the amount of compensation to be paid to these various officers is to depend upon law or the will of the First Comptroller. I do hope that the committee to which this resolution is to be referred will endeavor, if possible, to frame a bill—I say, if possible; for God only knows whether it will be possible for Congress to express its meaning and sense in such a way as will not be set at defiance openly or covertly—that the compensation of the officers of the Government is to depend upon the laws of the United States, and not upon the will of a subordinate in one of the executive departments. Sir, I hope such a clause may be framed. I feel myself under especial responsibility in this matter. I acknowledge my fault. I ought to have known, when that bill was before the Committee on the Judiciary, that every mischief and every evil which special pleading could introduce into the interpretation and application of the law would arise, unless we specially provided against it by the positive enactments of statute.

A SENATOR. Who is he?

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Mr. Whittlesey.

Mr. BADGER. Whoever he is, it is the same thing to me. It is all wrong; and I hope this committee will report something that will enable us to get on with decency and order in the judicial branch of the Government.

Mr. ADAMS. It is not my purpose to object to the passage of the resolution as modified. It seems to me, however, that some Senators are laboring under a slight mistake in relation to the operation of the law to which they have taken exception. They seem to treat it as prescribing a right and privilege, or as conferring a benefit upon these highly respectable officers. That much is true; but the fees of the officers do not come out of the Treasury. The effect is, that one of our constituents is benefited at the expense of the pockets of the others. I have no objection to any Senator bringing forward a scale of compensation for the marshals and clerks in his State which will be satisfactory to his constituents. They may do as they please in regard to that matter. The question is one for their own constituency to determine; and I think myself that it should be regulated by the views of the Representatives of the different States.

I may state here that I do not see that there is any very great advantage in suing in the Federal courts, in ordinary cases, in the interior. Take the case of a man who happens to make a contract with a citizen out of his State to the amount of more than five hundred dollars. The attorney gets a tax-fee of twenty dollars to bring the suit in the Federal courts, whereas the State courts in some of the States, allow no tax-fee in such a case. This is given as a bonus to the collecting attorney. The parties go from one to two hundred miles, with their witnesses, and the costs will, in the end, amount to ten times as much as if the suit had been brought in the State courts, and the man gets his money no more speedily. I therefore offer this amendment, which I hope will also be adopted:

And that the committee inquire into the expediency of abolishing the tax fee to attorneys in States where no tax-fee is allowed by law in the State courts.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

CHARLES COOPER AND CO.

The bill for the relief of Charles Cooper & Co. was read a second time, and—

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers to pay to Charles Cooper & Co., of Bangor, Maine, the sum of $300 for interest due to them on a liquidated amount of $30,989, payable, by contract, on the 13th of August, 1850, and then duly required, but withheld until the 12th of October following, for want of an appropriation.

Mr. HAMLIN. The report of the Committee on Claims perfectly explains the matter. Let it be read.

The report was accordingly read.

It appears from it that there was due to the claimants $30,989 on the 13th of August, 1850, under a contract with the Quartermaster's Department; but as the appropriations for the fiscal year 1850-'51 were not made until September 28, 1850, there were no funds in the hands of the disbursing officer to pay the amount until October 12. The committee think that, under these circumstances, the claimants are entitled to interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum for the detention of the money.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

JAMES DUNNING.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next bill on the Calendar is to provide for the payment of a claim growing out of the same transaction, and resting on precisely the same ground. I therefore move that the Senate now take up the next bill on the Calendar, which is one for the relief of James Dunning.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers to pay to James Dunning $255 98 for interest due him on a liquidated amount of $13,472 62, payable by contract June 18, 1850, and then duly required, but withheld until October 12 for want of an appropriation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

CHARLES A. KELLETT.

Mr. EVERETT, in accordance with previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Charles A. Kellett; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. EVERETT. This is a bill which has passed the Senate once without opposition, on the unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce, and it is a very small matter. I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to have it read a second time now, with the view of having it put upon its passage. I am sure there will be no objection to it.

By unanimous consent the bill was read a second time and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to Charles A. Kellett, or his legal representative, such sum as has been paid to the collector of the port of New York for tonnage duties and light money on the entry of the Chinese junk Keying; provided the same shall not exceed five hundred dollars.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read the report of the Committee on Commerce of the last Congress. It is only eight lines long. I desire it to be read to satisfy the Senate of the propriety of the passage of the bill.

The report was read, from which it appears that the junk was brought to this country not for the purpose of commerce, but as an object of curiosity; that the expenses far exceeded any receipts from its exhibition; that the proprietor is a young man without property, and that his object was to benefit science, by producing to the western world a curiosity from the eastern. Upon those grounds the committee unanimously reported the bill for his relief.

Mr. EVERETT. The bill passed the Senate on that report, but failed in the other House, as I am well informed, merely for the want of time. For that reason I hope the Senate will pass it now.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CALEB GREEN.

Mr. BUTLER. The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the petition of Caleb Green, late clerk of the court of the United States of Louisiana, asking remuneration for office rent, has directed me to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition, and to say that it ought not to have been taken from the files of the Senate, three adverse reports having already been made upon it.

Mr. SLIDELL. Will the honorable Senator permit me to remark, that I addressed a letter to the committee a few days since, requesting the papers to be referred to the Treasury Department, expecting some additional information to be received.

Mr. BUTLER. There has been no new information received, as far as I know. I believe the papers were sent to the Department; and it would be the proper course there to transfer the case.

Mr. SLIDELL. I would suggest that that course should be pursued.

Mr. BUTLER. It will, perhaps, be better to have it transferred to the Department. I so, the Senator can make the motion to have it done, after the Committee has been discharged from its consideration.

Mr. BUTLER subsequently said: I ask that the papers in the case of Caleb Green, upon which I reported adversely this morning, on the ground that there were three adverse reports upon them, be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Senator from Louisiana informs me that there is a communication from the Department, which will alter the character of the case. I therefore make the motion to recommit the papers.

The motion was agreed to.

AMOS AND J. E. KENDALL.

Mr. PETTIT. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the petition of A. and J. E. Kendall, praying compensation as counsel and agents for the Cherokee Indians, known as the Western Cherokees, or Old Settlers, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and to move its reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WALKER. If there be any question involved in the case, it is a legal one, for the facts, I believe, are undisputed. It was to settle that legal point that the subject was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I should regret to see that committee discharged from its consideration, and the case again referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, for that committee has already done what it can do in the matter. It made a report at the last session in favor of the claim, and the case, when brought before the Senate, was made to turn upon the legal question involved. What the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs desire, and what I presume the Senate desire, is the legal opinion of the Committee on the Judiciary in regard to the question of law involved in the case.

Mr. PETTIT. I will say that I know nothing of the contents of these papers myself, but I was instructed to present them, as I have done, by the members of the committee, who have examined them. I have only obeyed the order of the committee.

Mr. WALKER. If the Judiciary Committee desire to be discharged from the further consideration of the case, be it so; but I can see no utility in sending it again to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I therefore ask a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT. The question is first on discharging the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the petition.

The committee was discharged.

The PRESIDENT. The question is now on the motion to refer the memorial to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was not agreed to.

REBECCA FREEMAN.

Mr. FOOT. I ask the Senate to take up and consider, at this time, the bill for the relief of Rebecca Freeman, to which I am sure there can be no objection. The bill has, during three successive Congresses, received the favorable consideration of the Committee on Pensions of the House of Representatives, and once passed that House unanimously, and only failed in consequence of its not being reached upon the Calendar in this body. The lady for whose relief it is intended, is now ninety years of age, the widow of a revolutionary soldier.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered by the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Rebecca Freeman upon the list of pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month during her natural life, commencing the 27th January, 1847.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

LEWIS B. WILLIS.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred House bill for the relief of Lewis B. Willis, has directed me to report it back without amendment, and ask that it be considered at this time.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Lewis B. Willis, late a paymaster in the Army of the United States, $593 50, a balance ascertained to be due him from the United States by a verdict and judgment rendered in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be read a third time, and was read a third time, and passed.

NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask the Senate to take up and consider now, "the bill to reimburse the common council of New York city, for expenditures made for the first regiment of New York volunteers." It has passed the Senate, I think, two or three times, and has been lost in the other House merely for the want of time to consider it. I wish to have it sent to the House as early as possible at this session, so that it may become a law, if practicable, before the adjournment of Congress. It was one of the first bills which was reported at this session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of War, in the settlement and adjustment of the claims of the common council of New York city, under the act of Congress of June 2, 1848, for expenditures in organizing, transporting, clothing, and subsisting the first regiment of New York volunteers, commanded by Colonel Ward B. Burnett, prior to the mustering of that regiment into the service, to allow such of those claims as may be supported by satisfactory vouchers, although those vouchers may be informal and defective for want of particularity, with a proviso that the amount allowed shall not exceed $3,672 40.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 18, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. COBB obtained the floor.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order for consideration is the motion to reconsider the vote on the adoption of the resolution for the appointment of a committee of thirteen on the Pacific railroad question.

Mr. DEAN. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. COBB. I also rise to a question of privilege. Yesterday evening, just previous to the adjournment of the House, I obtained the floor, and moved to reconsider the vote by which the Pacific railroad question was referred to a special committee of thirteen. I had listened to a great many speeches, and felt much like speaking myself. I thought that the opportunity I seized was the only one upon which I could get the floor. I was under the impression, at the time of submitting my motion to reconsider, that when it came up for consideration, I should be able to hang a speech upon it; but, on examining the Journal this morning, I have ascertained that the subject alluded to was referred under the operation of the previous question.

To get at the motion to reconsider, therefore, the vote by which the call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put, would have to be reconsidered. I am not very sorry, for I confess that this morning I am somewhat calmed down; I do not feel so much like making a speech. Not wishing to trammel the action of the House, I now withdraw my motion to reconsider.

Another reason for making the motion was, that I thought thirteen was not a sufficient number to compose the committee. I was of the opinion that there should be at least one Representative of every State of this Union upon that committee. If any of the States which now desire the Pacific railroad to pass through their limits should not succeed in satisfying that desire, they would be content with the decision, from the fact of their interests having been represented by their own Representatives. If it be the pleasure of the House, I withdraw my motion to reconsider.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The gentleman can only withdraw the motion to reconsider by unanimous consent.

Mr. COBB. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to do so.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If nobody else renews the motion, I shall interpose no objection to its withdrawal. If it be renewed, I shall move to lay it upon the table, to get rid of it.

The SPEAKER. If the motion to reconsider be withdrawn, it will not be in order to renew it, the time in which it is in order to submit the motion having expired.

There was no objection, and the motion was withdrawn.

BALANCES DUE AT THE TREASURY.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting, in conformity with the provisions of the act of Congress approved 3d of March, 1809, entitled "An act further to amend the several acts for the establishment and regulation of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments," and the act passed 3d of March, 1817, entitled "An act to provide for the prompt settlement of public accounts," a statement of the accounts which remain due more than three years prior to the last day of July, 1853, on the books of the Register of the Treasury, and on the books of the First, Second, and Third Auditors of the Treasury, respectively, &c.

Mr. HOUSTON. My impression is, that the communication which has just been read, ought to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a statement of balances remaining due to the Treasury, and it may be that some legislation is required on the subject. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

The question was then taken; and the motion was agreed to.

NAVAL REVOLUTIONARY PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, furnished in compliance with a joint resolution of Congress of 29th May, 1830, transmitting a list of such persons as have made application for pensions, and who ought, in the opinion of the Department, to be placed on the pension roll, but for doing which there was no provision of law; and recommending that the act of February 3, 1853, be so extended as to embrace the widows of officers, non-commissioned officers, mariners, and marines, who served in the Navy of the United States during the war of the Revolution in the same manner, and to the same extent, as provided for the widows of officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of the Army.

Mr. MACE. I move that that communication be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and be printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. Oh, no! I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the communication recommends the giving of pensions to persons who have not got them before. It therefore ought to go to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Mr. MACE. The matter affects our land system very much, and should go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DEAN. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

The question was first put on its reference to the Committee on Public Lands, and it was disagreed to.

The question was then put on its reference to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and it was agreed to.

THE PRINTING OF ESTIMATES, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Superintendent of Printing, transmitting estimates of the amount which will be required to meet the deficiency in the appropriation for the contingent and other expenses of his office, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854, for the printing and paper of estimates of the appropriations of 1853.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will not insist on having the whole of those estimates read. Let the communication and estimates be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, as they relate to deficiencies in the appropriation, and that they be printed.

It was so ordered.

Mr. FLORENCE. Mr. Speaker, I was going to object to the suspension of the reading of that paper, but I am afraid I am not in time to do so. It strikes me that there is a principle involved in papers of this kind which deserves the special consideration of this House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a question of order. My point of order is, that this is not a question which is debatable.

The SPEAKER. There is no question before the House which the gentleman can debate. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. FLORENCE. Then I move to reconsider the vote just made, and then I shall be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can make that motion, and will be in order in debating it.

Mr. FLORENCE. I say, sir, that the proposition which is involved in this communication, is so important that the paper ought to be read to the House.

Mr. WHEELER. Let it be read.

Mr. FLORENCE. When the question of the printing of documents is before the House I hear gentlemen complaining of extravagance.

Mr. PHELPS. I withdraw my suggestion, and hope the communication will be read. I am satisfied it will be disposed of sooner in that way than any other.

Mr. FLORENCE. I think I have the right to the floor upon my motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FLORENCE. I am entitled to the floor, and I intend to occupy the time of the House, if in order; and I will not permit gentlemen here to interfere with the rights which belong to me as a member of this House, representing a part of the independent constituency of this Union. I come here to perform the duties to my people and to myself which devolve upon me; and as I stand here on this eighteenth day of January, representing a constituency such as I represent, actuated by the best impulses of my nature, so far as my humble abilities will permit, I intend to be the representative of that constituency. I will not permit gentlemen to interfere with my rights and privileges upon this floor, and I give notice to that effect now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania shall certainly be protected in his rights, so far as the Chair is concerned.

Mr. FLORENCE. I have no doubt of it; and I return my thanks for the kindness of the Chair. I have been the recipient of that uniform kindness heretofore, and I take this occasion to acknowledge the same.

I say that a communication of this kind requires consideration at the hands of the House, and should be read, as well as every other communication which involves a large expenditure of the public money; for the reason that when a proposition is made upon this floor, involving the expenditure of money, such as I conceive it my duty to vote for, I may not be charged with a desire to promote extravagant expenditures of that money.

I desire to hear what the Superintendent of the Public Printing has to say. I believe this communication will convey to the House a difference of opinion, which I understand to exist between the Public Printer and the Superintendent of the Public Printing in relation to the construction of a law. As I had the honor to participate in a debate upon this floor, and advocated an amendment to the act providing for the election of a Public Printer, I thought this would be a proper time to consider a suggestion of the kind contained in that communication. This is the reason why I desire to have the communication read, in addition to the fact that it communicated to this House a knowledge of the amount of money required for the public printing for the next year.

I have no other object in view. I desire, as I said before, to vote understandingly upon all subjects that may be presented here. I do not occupy a very eligible seat in the House to hear, and other gentlemen are better situated, as far as the position of a seat is concerned. I desire to have communicated to me such information as I can get; and I can get it better from the Clerk's desk, when the Clerks are reading communications, than I can get in any other way. In conclusion, in making the remarks I have, I disclaim any personal reference to my friend from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] or any other gentleman. I only desire to present myself fairly before the House and the country; and as, under the rules, I have to give notice when I have bills to present, I give that notice in regard to this matter, that I intend to occupy the position that my constituents, when they sent me here, intended that I should occupy—and they are a very generous people, too.

Mr. PHELPS. One word of explanation. The gentleman expressed his desire to have the communication read at the Clerk's desk, in order that he might understand its subject matter. The reading of that communication was commenced, and it shows that instead of covering estimates for the expense of printing for the ensuing fiscal year, it covers estimates for the deficiencies of printing of the fiscal year which expires on the 1st of June next. Some two or three thousand dollars only are to be expended, and the communication covers some three or four pages, which I supposed nobody wanted to hear read when I made the motion to print. I therefore move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

Mr. FLORENCE. I withdraw the motion to reconsider which I made, because the explanation of the gentleman is perfectly satisfactory. It is because I hold so ineligible a seat in the Hall, that I did not hear quite as distinctly as I should like.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn. The question now is upon recommitting the following resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That a Select Committee, composed of nine members on the part of the House of Representatives, be appointed by the Speaker, to join such committee as may be appointed by the Senate, to whom shall be referred said resolutions proposing to amend the Constitution in the mode of electing a President and Vice President of the United States, with instructions to take that matter and the subject generally into consideration, and to report upon the same in such manner as to them may seem most expedient.

Mr. McMULLIN. I withdraw the motion I submitted yesterday to recommit this report to the committee, with a view to enable its friends to amend it. It is due to the House, and also to the committee, to state that I was laboring under a mistake as to the character of that report. I have no objection to the adoption of the resolution. I withdraw the demand for the previous question, and I also withdraw the motion to recommit. I move the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. Would it be in order now to move an amendment to the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Not until the demand for the previous question is disposed of.

Upon seconding the demand for the previous question, 60 rose in the affirmative.

Mr. DEAN. I demand tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DEAN and WHEELER were appointed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It seems to me that this resolution is not sufficiently understood. I call for its reading.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, unless objection be made.

Objection was made, and it was not read.

The question was then put upon seconding the demand for the previous question, and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes not counted.

So the previous question received a second.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

Mr. DEAN. I am opposed to this resolution in its present form, and therefore move to lay it upon the table; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only eleven voting therefor.

The question was then put, and the Speaker decided it to be carried in the negative.

Mr. DEAN. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The call comes too late.

So the House refused to lay the resolution upon the table.

The question now recurring upon the passage of the resolution,

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, demanded the yeas and nays.

Upon seconding the demand for the yeas and nays, only 25 rose in the affirmative.

Mr. DEAN. I demand tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, only 12 voting therefor.

The question was then put; and the resolution was adopted.

ELECTION OF POSTMASTERS, ETC.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make an addition to the resolution which has just been adopted, directing the select committee to inquire into the expediency of providing for the election by the people of postmasters and collectors of the revenue.

The SPEAKER. To what does the gentleman from New York propose it as an amendment?

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I will offer it as a resolution to be referred to the select committee, which has just been raised by the adoption of that resolution.

Mr. PARKER. I object; and I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put on the latter motion; and it was agreed to.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I give notice that, as soon as a proper opportunity presents itself, I shall offer the resolution which I have indicated.

Mr. PARKER. I desire to say that it is my own wish, and that of the Judiciary Committee, that the Chair, in appointing the select committee provided for in the resolution just passed, will have no reference to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. Reports are in order from the Committee on the Judiciary.

FEDERAL COURTS IN EASTERN VIRGINIA.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to enable me to introduce a resolution of a local character.

Several MEMBERS. Read it for information.

The Clerk read the resolution; as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the propriety of providing by law for the holding of semi-annual terms of the federal courts for the eastern district of Virginia, and for the city of Alexandria hereafter; and that the committee report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I object to the introduction of that resolution. If this irregular system is adopted, we shall never transact the public business.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I insist upon the regular order of business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to know if the appropriation bills reported yesterday from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union are not, as unfinished business, the regular order now?

Mr. CLINGMAN. Not during the morning hour.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call the attention of the Chair to that point.

The SPEAKER. It has been customary heretofore to take up such bills after the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will not consume the time of the House further than to say that, according to my recollection, the practice has been, without any variation, that a motion to recommit bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union keeps them before the House as unfinished business, and bills in such a position have always been taken up as unfinished business.

Under the decision of the Speaker, they would go to the Speaker's table, and there is no telling when they would be reached. The motion to recommit was made for the express purpose of keeping the bills from the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. They will come up after the morning hour.

Mr. HOUSTON. Bills in such a position have always been taken up heretofore during the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, reports from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union are first in order after the morning hour. That, according to the recollection of the Chair, is in accordance with the practice of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, I submit to the Chair that the practice has been just the reverse.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Those appropriation bills were made the special order for to-day, on motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.]

REPORT FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. Reports are in order from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SEYMOUR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of the executors of the late Lieutenant John E. Bisphan."

Mr. SEYMOUR, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"A bill, in addition to an act, to establish the judicial courts of the United States."

Mr. BISSELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported "A bill to promote the efficiency of the Army by retiring disabled officers;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BISSELL, from the same committee, reported "A bill for the relief of the United States troops who were sufferers by the recent disaster to the steamship San Francisco;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

The bill was then read through. It provides that there shall be paid, under the direction of the President of the United States, to each of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, who, on the 21st day of December, 1853, embarked at New York under orders for California, on the steamship San Francisco, and who was on board that vessel on the occasion of her recent disaster at sea, a sum equal in amount to his pay and allowances for four months; and also, that if either of the above shall have died before receiving such payment, from any cause consequent upon said disaster, his widow, if any survive him, or, if not, then his minor children, if any there be, shall be paid a sum equal in amount to six months' pay and allowances of the deceased.

Mr. BISSELL. Silence, such as shall allow members of the House one moment's time for reflection, will be, I am sure, the most effective speech that could be made upon this subject. It is the only one that I propose to make. I move that the bill be now put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being read a third time, it was passed.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and the bill and report ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Mrs. Helen McKay, widow of the late Colonel K. McKay, Deputy Quartermaster General of the United States Army."

Mr. HOWE, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of D. C. Cash and Giles U. Ellis; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

Mr. FAULKNER, from the same committee, reported back without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass, the bill authorizing the payment of the balance of property accounts between the United States and the State of New York, for military stores in the war of 1812; which was read, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the same committee, presented a report adverse to the petition of Captain H. B. Fields; which was ordered to be laid on the table, and printed.

On motion by Mr. ETHERIDGE, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of James Sweet, and that the same be laid on the table.

On motion by Mr. BOCOCK, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Joseph Ayres, and that the same be laid on the table, and printed.

On motion by Mr. BOCOCK, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill for the relief of Major Caleb Swan, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MACDONALD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of John O. Mears; which was read, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. CRAIGE, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the chairman and board of supervisors of Cook county, Illinois; and that the same be laid upon the table.

On motion by Mr. CRAIGE, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be discharged from the further consideration of the petition and papers of John Skirving, praying remuneration for drawing plans for, and superintendence of the alterations at the old jail, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on Territories, reported back a "Joint resolution authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the expense of a board of commissioners, appointed by the Territorial Assembly of Oregon, to prepare a code of laws; also, to adjust the expense of collecting and printing certain laws and archives of the Territory of Oregon;" which was read by its title.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This joint resolution directs the application of money already appropriated, and it is not necessary that it should be sent to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

The bill having been engrossed, it was subsequently read a third time, and passed.

On motion by Mr. HENDRICKS, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of James Paynter, praying relief on account of his two sons being killed in battle in the Mexican war; and also from the petition of C. H. Smith, Seth Hunt, and twenty-nine others, citizens of Albany, to enable pensioners to receive bounties from the passage of the act of April 24, 1816, and that the same be laid upon the table, and printed.

Mr. HENDRICKS also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Pamela Brown, widow of Major General Jacob Brown, deceased, reported a bill for her relief; which was read by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TWEED, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported the following bills; which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

- A bill for the relief of Lyman M. Cook;
- A bill for the relief of Benjamin Rowe;
- A bill for the relief of Emily Hooe; and
- A bill for the relief of William B. Edwards.

On motion by Mr. TWEED, it was

Ordered, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition and accompanying papers of James Robinson, of the State of Maine, and that the same be laid upon the table.

On motion by Mr. TWEED, it was

Ordered, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition and papers of James Capen, asking a pension for services rendered during the war of the Revolution, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

On motion by Mr. STRAUB, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Charles Simmons, of Madison, New Jersey, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and printed.

On motion by Mr. SAGE, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Elias Carpenter, and that the same be laid upon the table.

Mr. STRAUB, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an adverse report on the petition of Uriah Hanscom, asking for increase of pension; which was ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

Mr. STRAUB, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an adverse report on the petition of John Thompson, praying for increase of pension; which was ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

Mr. VAIL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an adverse report on the petition of Jonathan Stuart, praying for compensation for services rendered in the war of 1812; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. VAIL. I ask that the papers of James Putnam, upon which a report has been once made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, be again referred to the committee. Since the former report was made, further evidence in regard to the case has been presented.

The SPEAKER. It will be so ordered, unless objection be made.

Mr. CHRISMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made adverse reports upon the petitions of Edward Tracy, Catharine Jacob, and Thomas Russell; which were ordered to lie upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is the morning hour out?

The SPEAKER. It has not quite expired.

Mr. MACE, from the Committee on Claims, reported bills; which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

- A bill for the relief of John Hamilton;
- A bill for the relief of Daniel Steenrod;
- A bill for the relief of the Utica Steam Woolen Company;

Also, a bill for the relief of Gray, McMerdo & Company.

On motion by Mr. EDGERTON, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the memorial of the State of Wisconsin, asking for the payment of a certain claim for arresting and keeping a United States prisoner, and the accompanying paper containing an extract from the report of the United States court in the case; and they were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion by Mr. EDGERTON, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of sundry citizens of Livingston county, asking that surviving soldiers of the war of 1812 be placed upon the pension list of the United States; and it was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. E., also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made adverse reports in the following petitions; which were ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed:

The petition of Thomas Copeland, for remuneration for improvements in the Gosport navy-yard;

The petition of Eunice Gilbert, for compensation for property destroyed in the war of 1812;

The petition of William B. Cozzens, asking pay for store-house taken from him at Point Isabel, by order of the Quartermaster General; and

The petition of James M. Duckett, asking compensation for property taken by the British in the war of 1812.

QUINCY, ILLINOIS, A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back "A bill to constitute Quincy, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery," and moved that the same be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This bill was read twice before it was referred to the Committee on Commerce. It makes no appropriation, and there is no necessity for sending it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It simply makes a port of delivery at a point where it is necessary that it should be made at once, if it is made at all.

I will state to the House that there is now upon the road to Quincy a large amount of railroad iron, to be laid down upon a railroad from that point to Chicago. It would be a very great convenience to the railroad company, and to those who are interested in the road, if they could have this iron delivered at that point. If the bill has to go through the routine of a reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union it will be of no great importance to them; and really there is no necessity for such a reference. The bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and I apprehend that there can be no objection to its passage now in any quarter.

Mr. WHEELER. Let the bill be read.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would ask the gentleman from Illinois what is the object of having the bill passed? What good is to come of it? What will be the advantage of it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why I should not have introduced the bill unless there was some object in passing it. I have already stated to the House that the object is to enable a company who have now under contract, and are ready, as soon as navigation opens, to lay down a railroad for two hundred and forty miles, to have the iron for that road delivered at Quincy.

I repeat, that there is no reason whatever why the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It makes no appropriation, and there can be no objection to it, nor any reason why its passage should be delayed.

Mr. HOUSTON. Where would this iron have to be entered if this bill is not passed?

Mr. RICHARDSON. At New Orleans.

Mr. FULLER. I withdraw the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WHEELER. I call for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill. It provides that Quincy, in the State of Illinois, shall be, and is hereby, constituted a port of delivery, subject to the same regulations and restrictions as other ports of delivery in the United States; that there shall be appointed a surveyor of customs to reside at said port, who shall, in addition to his own duties, perform the duties and receive the salary and emoluments of a surveyor prescribed by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1831, providing for the payment of duties at certain points therein mentioned; and that said port of delivery shall be, and is hereby, annexed to and made part of the collection district of New Orleans, &c.

Mr. WENTWORTH. There is nothing in this bill but what is of common occurrence at every session of Congress. These matters are referred to the Committee on Commerce, and by them to the Secretary of the Treasury. If he recommends them we report bills to the House, with recommendations that they do pass. If he does not recommend them we do not report bills. I presume that this House, during the present session, will be called upon to pass twenty or thirty bills of a like character with the one under consideration. It has not been customary to object to their passage immediately subsequent to their introduction. There is nothing novel proposed, and I trust that it will be immediately passed.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker—Mr. WENTWORTH. I am not yet through; but if the gentleman desires any information I shall be glad to give it to him. I am perfectly familiar with the whole subject. I call for the previous question.

Mr. SMITH. I asked for information from the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.] I did not see what was the purpose in view to have the bill passed. The gentleman replied, tartly, that he never offered a bill unless he had some object in view. I did not mean to offend his intelligence by making any such proposition.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I take back anything that I may have said objectionable to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH. I am not asking the gentleman to take back anything. When I propounded the interrogatory to the gentleman, I thought that he would have frankly given me the information I desired. I understood from him that the purpose was to afford facilities for the reception of a certain amount of railroad iron which was expected daily in New Orleans. I hear, from the reading of the bill, that the real purpose is to get the whole custom-house machinery established at Quincy, in the State of Illinois. Well, we are told by the gentleman who spoke last on this subject, that this is a matter of course; that there probably will be some twenty or thirty bills of the same character passed during the present session. That presents to the consideration of the House a very grave question. Do we mean to scatter these establishments all over the country? Do we mean to increase the patronage of the Federal Government, which we have been told years ago was increasing and must be diminished? It is obvious that if this bill passes there will be a large addition to the public expenditures, as well as a large addition to the number of the public officials; and I confess, without some very strong reason for it, that that would be with me sufficient objection.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly, sir.

Mr. WENTWORTH. What can we do to stop the growth of the West which requires these facilities?

Mr. SMITH. I can only say to the gentleman that I would not have the growth of the West stopped; but I have such respect for it, that I would not extend needlessly the Federal patronage within its limits. I would have it always sturdy, independent, honest, and free from the influence of the Federal power.

Mr. WENTWORTH. With the gentleman's permission, I will say, that rather than increase the Executive patronage there, I would be willing to take up some of the nominal custom-houses in the eastern States.

Mr. SMITH. I dare say that the gentleman would be willing to take anything which was to benefit himself.

Mr. WENTWORTH. To be sure I would, if my constituents so desired.

Mr. SMITH. I know, from my knowledge of the gentleman, that he is ready to do anything for himself; but I wish him to understand that I am not willing to carry on this Government with an increased and continually increasing amount of public patronage. I am open to conviction. I wish to be informed. I put it to this House whether the policy involved in the bill is a sound one; whether it means to make ports of delivery at every town on the huge rivers of the West? I want to know whether there are not one hundred places in the western country entitled as much as the one referred to to such an establishment?

The House will readily see that there is a very important principle involved. I do not know that I shall seriously oppose this thing; I may be misinformed upon the subject; but I desire to know why it is that this bill ought to be taken out of its ordinary course. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] tells us that it is necessary to have it passed now in order that benefit may be had from the railroad iron which is now expected at New Orleans. Why cannot it be delivered at that city as well as at Quincy? Will there be any incumbrance, any difficulty, any obstacle, any expense, unreasonable and extraordinary, to follow the delivery of it at New Orleans? I cannot see that there is to be any such result; and while I am not disposed to obstruct the growth of the West—for no man would be bold enough to make such an attempt, as history shows that the efforts, such as have been made elsewhere, have proved useless—yet I cannot see the necessity of this thing; and I move that the matter be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Besides, Mr. Speaker, I understand that this bill gives salaries, and that, in itself, compels it to take that destination. It provides salaries for a number of officers.

Mr. FULLER. I desire to answer the last objection of the gentleman from Virginia. The bill does give a salary—a salary of $350 a year, with the emoluments, not to exceed a certain sum. It does not make any appropriations. The committee had that matter under consideration. They inquired into it; they consulted the head of the Treasury Department in reference to the measure before they reported it. It is a matter of importance. Under our warehousing system—I would suggest to the gentleman—where iron is imported and examined at New Orleans, and is sent up to the country, it must, under the existing laws, be delivered at some other port of delivery—at St. Louis, for instance—which makes great expense of transhipment and storage, and which, as he must be aware, is a very expensive and onerous system to the company, by reexportation and re-shipment. And, further, the bill secures advantages to this railroad company, in importing this iron, and carrying it, and putting it in bond at Quincy, to be taken out and consumed as it may be wanted from time to time; and enables them to enjoy the whole of the benefits of the warehousing system as they do at other places.

Mr. SMITH. I ask the gentleman from Maine if that difficulty on his part would not be obviated at once if those duties were paid at New Orleans?

Mr. FULLER. That is very true.

Mr. SMITH. Well, I would ask the gentleman for further information, as I am really seeking for information. He says that the bill provides for a salary of $350 a year. Does it not also provide that that officer shall have the appointment of inferior officers?

Mr. FULLER. He has only the appointment to one solitary office.

Mr. SMITH. However, we know how these offices multiply.

Mr. FULLER. I would say, in this connection, to the gentleman, that under the existing law it may be very desirable for these railroad companies not to advance the duties on iron, or to pay for it at New Orleans, when they may import it into the interior. Therefore I believe it is but dealing out equal justice to all that this matter should be considered, and that the bill should be passed, and Quincy made a port of delivery, as various other places are.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] propounded to me the interrogatory, why I demanded the passage of this bill now? I will explain why. He assumes that this matter of railroad iron is the only reason for making Quincy a port of delivery. I did not mean to be so understood, and I do not mean so to be understood now. I mean to say here, that there is a necessity for making the city of Quincy a port of delivery, independent of this transaction in relation to railroad iron. That I only alluded to for the purpose of showing the necessity of the immediate passage of the bill.

I will state, for the information of the gentleman from Virginia, that the city of Quincy is the largest town upon the Mississippi river above St. Louis; that she does more business, and has around her a better settled and more fertile country than any other city above St. Louis. There are at her port, during each year, over a thousand steamboats. There is an immense amount of business transacted there, the details of which I have—not here, but at my room—and to which I could refer him, showing the necessity of making that place a port of delivery, independent of this matter of railroad iron.

I deem it due that I should make this statement, in order that the assumption made by the gentleman from Virginia may be understood by the members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman seems to think that it is a terrible thing to have an increase in officers. What is this to which he is making this suggestion? It is, that you are to have an officer there to whom you are to pay three hundred and fifty dollars a year. What amount, let me ask, are you receiving from the commerce which departs from, and goes to, that point each year? The gentleman will find, if he will make the calculation for himself, that the Government is a gainer by the operation.

If it is his intention to vote against all propositions for the increase of officers in the western country, he will find ample opportunity during this session, and during all subsequent sessions, when he may be here to give his vote. There is no reason why the decision of this question should be delayed. It is demanded by the public necessity. It has been reported by a committee of this House, and recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, who is supposed to understand these matters. I demand the previous question.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the call for the previous question. I will renew it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly; I do not desire to gag any gentleman.

Mr. SMITH. I conceive that what has now occurred is a good illustration of the impolicy of ever taking business out of its regular and usual course. When the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON]—towards whom, of course, I entertain all proper respect—asked that this bill be put upon its passage, he stated that it was the arrival of railroad iron which required the passage of this bill, and without which it would be of no avail. That was one reason why—

Mr. RICHARDSON, (interrupting.). I will explain to the gentleman. The immediate passage of the bill was demanded particularly on that account.

Mr. SMITH. That was the reason assigned, and, as I understood it, the only reason; and a very good reason, too, it may be, if there are no other objections. Well, it was deemed important at once to have it passed, in consequence of railroad iron having arrived, which was required for immediate use.

The gentleman suggests that it would be important, perhaps, to that company to have time for the payment of duties that would be assessed upon this importation, which might lie in the country for a year or more before it could be called for use. One gentleman wants the bill passed because there is an immediate necessity for it in consequence of the urgent demand for the use of this iron. The other gentleman wants it passed in order to get rid of the interest upon the payment of duties in New Orleans, in consequence of the company not needing it for some time—perhaps for a year or two to come. These are the antagonistic reasons assigned. Let us look at them for a moment. Is there any necessity for paying duties if the iron remains in New Orleans? None at all. Iron may be imported, put into store there, and it will remain there until it is wanted for use. Then it is obvious that there is no necessity for paying interest; none at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman permit me to say that, if we make Quincy a port of delivery, we can have railroad iron there, and take it from time to time, as we want to use it. If it remains in New Orleans, we cannot get it as we may want it.

Mr. SMITH. I am not as well acquainted with the navigation interests of Quincy as the gentleman himself; but he told us a while ago that there was an immense trade at Quincy, and that it was the largest port on the Mississippi above St. Louis. If there be such a heavy trade between New Orleans and Quincy, I ask why they cannot get into New Orleans, from time to time, as occasion may demand? I ask the gentleman, in all candor, what motive there can be for drawing the distinction he does?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will tell you. If they wanted to use a small quantity of iron, and it should not be convenient to pay the duty upon the entire importation, they could go to Quincy, which is in the immediate neighborhood, and the terminus of the road upon one side, take it, and lay it upon the road. But it would not be convenient to bring it up from New Orleans, a distance of one thousand five hundred miles, in small quantities, as the river very often becomes too low. Thus they might not have the facility of getting it when they wanted it.

Mr. SMITH. I have certainly every disposition to be convinced, but I do not think that the argument presented for my consideration by the gentleman will answer that object. I really see nothing in the reasons assigned for the passage of this bill. There is a custom-house, I believe, at St. Louis. Pass this bill, and what next? My friend from Illinois will, after a while, want a custom-house at Quincy. Upon the passage of this bill you will have all the machinery of a custom-house established there. And thus we go. Concede one thing—grant that—and another thing follows, until finally a large appropriation will be asked for constructing a custom-house at this growing town of Quincy.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will agree that this is all I shall ever ask for Quincy.

Mr. SMITH. No one can tell what a day may bring forth. The gentleman may never ask anything for Quincy hereafter; but he will have successors, and others may do what he may not. I ask what reason has been assigned by the gentleman why this bill should be taken out of its order? What good, valid, and substantial reason has been presented by the gentleman for the passage of this bill. If you take this bill out of its regular order of business, why, manifestly, you can take every bill out of its order with the same propriety. I cannot see why the customary course should be departed from in the present case. I must insist upon the motion I have submitted to send this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. In obedience, however, to the promise I made to the gentleman from Illinois, I now call the previous question.

Mr. DISNEY. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the call for the previous question for a moment.

Mr. SMITH. I have made the call in obedience to a promise made to the gentleman from Illinois. I will withdraw it with his permission.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not object.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to know if the morning hour has not expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

[Mr. DE WITT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the bill entitled "An act concerning the district courts of California."]

Mr. DISNEY proceeded: It occurred to me that it might not be amiss to explain to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] some of the reasons which induced some of the gentlemen from the West to ask for the passage of bills similar to the one now before the House.

Mr. SMITH. The objection I made was to departing from the regular order of business to take up this bill upon the present occasion.

Mr. DISNEY. I am aware that the gentleman made but that objection, but still I am warranted in the course of remark I had commenced, from the fact that the gentleman did not confine his objections to that question. Now the necessity there is for the passage of bills of this character arises from the following considerations: The people of the West, for purposes of general commerce, are compelled to make their purchases in the eastern markets. Under the present circumstances this is an absolute necessity.

Now it must be perfectly apparent to any one, upon the slightest examination of the subject, that if the western importer is permitted to import his goods directly from Europe, he will get them delivered at his own door at the same cost at which they are delivered to the eastern importers.

The effect of the bill now before the House will be, as I understand it, to permit the people of Quincy to import railroad iron directly from Europe, and thus avoid reshipment from New Orleans, or some other port of delivery in the West.

[A message was here received from the Senate, announcing the passage, by that body, of certain bills which originated there:

A bill (No. 49) to incorporate the Pioneer Manufacturing Company of Georgetown, District of Columbia;

A bill (No. 131) for the relief of the heirs of Judith Worthen, deceased;

A bill (No. 127) for the relief of John Phagan;

A bill (No. 126) to relinquish to the State of Wisconsin the land reserved for salt springs therein;

A bill (No. 125) for the relief of Ezra Williams;

A bill (No. 124) for the extension of the pre-emption privilege to the State of California;

A bill (No. 117) for the relief of Moses Olmstead;

A bill (No. 35) for the relief of M. K. Warrington and C. St. J. Chubb, executors of Captain Lewis Warrington and others;

A bill (No. 32) for the relief of Joseph Gideon;

A bill (No. 23) confirming certain land claims in Louisiana, in the Bastrop grant;

A resolution (No. 7) authorizing an increase of the force in the office of the Superintendent of the Public Printing; and

Also, House resolution (No. 6) "for the relief of Lewis B. Willis, late a paymaster in the Army of the United States."]

Mr. DISNEY, (resuming.) Take the case of railroad iron, the very article that has been mentioned in this debate. The importers of this railroad iron, unless Quincy be made a port of entry, will have to go to New Orleans, and there give bond with sureties residing in the city of New Orleans. The parties in this case importing the railroad iron are residents of the town of Quincy, and it may be that they have no particular personal intercourse or business relations with merchants in New Orleans. How then are they to get sureties there? By negotiation, which must of itself necessarily involve costs. There must be a percentage paid to parties to become sureties for the importers. That cost is added to the original cost of the article itself, together with other attendant charges, independent of the difficulty of hunting up sureties. In this way the article, in this particular case, would come to Quincy charged with a list of costs, from which they, the said company, say they ought to be exempted.

The people of the western portion of this Union have a right to demand at the hands of the Government the same facilities for commercial purposes that the people of the eastern portion of the Union enjoy, and they have a right to indulge a reasonable expectation that the Government will afford them those facilities. They simply ask the passage of this and kindred bills that will enable their commercial intercourse with Europe to be exempted from taxes which a refusal would necessarily impose on them, by limiting their transactions to the eastern portion of the Union, or by subjecting them to charges necessarily imposed on them by having their transactions with Europe pass through the hands of merchants in the eastern portion of the Union.

Well, this being the effect on the commerce of the West generally, not only with regard to railroad iron, but to every other article of importation, why should gentlemen object to it because it may, perchance, involve the payment of additional officers, at an expense of some three or four hundred dollars per annum? Is that an objection of sufficient importance to justify a refusal of these privileges to the people of the western portion of the country? In my judgment it is not.

In regard to the question propounded to me by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH] I am free to say, in reply, that I presume the only necessity for the immediate passage of this bill is found in these two considerations, that heretofore other bills have passed—as in the case of Alton, and various other places—and that there is no new principle involved in the bill which requires consideration at the hands of Congress. Then why delay action upon it merely for the sake of form? That is all I desire to say upon the subject.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move the previous question.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. COBB. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Discussion is not in order. I object to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is not in order.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, was subsequently read the third time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was then taken; and the bill was passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The question was taken, and the latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now call up the bills which were reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with a recommendation that they do pass, and which were under consideration when the House adjourned last evening.

The House then took up "the bill making appropriation for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1855."

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I propose, Mr. Speaker, to make some remarks on this bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think that the previous question was called on the bill last evening.

Mr. SMITH. I think not.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If the previous question was called, I object to the gentleman's proceeding to make any remarks.

Mr. SMITH. I believe in the progress of the human race—

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the previous question was not called last evening.

Mr. JONES. It was my impression that it was called.

Mr. SMITH said he believed in the progress of the human race, and rejoiced in the era of ever-growing civilization. Therefore it was that his heart was always afflicted when he saw any manifestation of the war spirit, for he believed the spirit of war to be the spirit of barbarism; and notwithstanding the popular idea to the contrary, he believed there was no more mighty hindrance to the progress of civilization than war.

He regarded the spirit of this bill as the dark and barbarous and baleful spirit of war; and therefore it was, he would use all honorable means to defeat it. It is strange and sad, that in a nation professing faith in the Prince of Peace, the war spirit should be so rampant. It was a gross inconsistency in such a nation that there should be any manifestation of war.

Mr. ORR raised a question of order, and insisted that the gentleman should confine himself strictly to the subject.

The SPEAKER said that the gentleman from New York was in order.

Mr. SMITH then continued his theme, showing the immense loss of life and property, and the injury to morals occasioned by war, but advocated an armed police to punish pirates on land and sea. [See Appendix for the speech of Mr. SMITH.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the previous question upon this bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

INVALID AND OTHER PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon ordering the bill "making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the year ending June 30, 1855," to be engrossed and read the third time.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee last rose, they had under consideration House bill No. 49, being a bill to supply the deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854, upon which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SMITH] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would ask my colleague if he would not be willing to have the President's message taken up instead of the deficiency bill, as a resolution has been passed to close debate upon it at a certain time. My colleague could just as well make his speech upon the resolutions to refer the President's message, and he would have the advantage also of a full hour.

Mr. SMITH declined to yield the floor, and proceeded to address the committee in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CURTIS], upon the subject of the differences between the two branches of the Democratic party in New York. Having concluded his remarks, (which will be found in the Appendix,)

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana, obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH, of Alabama. I ask the gentleman from Louisiana to yield me five or ten minutes of his time to enable me to finish my speech.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Can that be done?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that if any gentleman objects, the gentleman from Alabama cannot proceed.

Mr. SMITH. With the permission of the gentleman from Louisiana I wish to make a few further remarks.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I think the gentleman from Alabama, considering the time he had yesterday and to-day, has been already favored. I therefore object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the gentleman from Alabama cannot proceed.

Mr. DISNEY. I move that the committee rise.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. ORR) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly House bill (No. 49) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the services of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1854, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

[A message was here received from the President of the United States, by the hands of SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary, informing the House that he had signed a bill "to change the name of the American brig John Dutton, and to grant a register in her name."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move the usual resolution is such cases, that all debate be terminated in Committee of the Whole on the deficiency bill in one hour after the committee shall have resumed the consideration thereof.

Tellers were demanded and ordered; and Messrs. CORWIN, and JONES of Tennessee, were appointed.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move that the House adjourn.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the House adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 19, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved. Hon. ISAAC TOUCEY, of Connecticut, appeared in his seat this morning.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SLIDELL presented the petition of Samuel C. Reid, jun., on behalf of the claimants of the private armed brig General Armstrong. He said that the heroic defense of that vessel, made by Captain Reid and his gallant crew, against the attack of an overwhelming British force in the neutral harbor of Fayal, was one of the most brilliant achievements recorded in the annals of naval warfare, and was doubtless known to every member of the Senate. This vessel was destroyed in September, 1814. A more flagrant violation of the law of nations was never committed, as the British Government admitted the wrong, and apologized for it to Portugal. It justified a claim on the latter power for indemnity. This claim was constantly urged by different Administrations, as one, the justice of which could not admit of dispute, but was always evaded or denied by Portugal. It was at last agreed to submit the question to the umpirage of Louis Napoleon, then President of the French Republic, without the assent and against the wishes of the claimants. In November, 1852, Louis Napoleon, who had then been made Emperor, gave his decision in favor of the Portuguese Government. The claimants consider that, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, the United States have assumed the place of Portugal. As all the facts were fully but succinctly set forth in the petition, and were of more than ordinary interest, involving delicate naval questions, he hoped that no objection would be made to the printing of the petition.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I present ten memorials, numerously signed by citizens of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the removal of the United States Mint from that city, and they give unanswerable reasons for the position which they assume. I move their reference to the Committee on Finance.

They were so referred.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Blair county, Pennsylvania, praying that one hundred and sixty acres of land be granted to the soldiers of the last war with Great Britain, and all subsequent wars; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EVERETT. I beg leave to present the petition of Cyrus Chase and others, inspectors of the customs at the port of Boston. They represent the arduous and responsible nature of their duties, the present low rate of compensation, which has not been increased since the year 1832, although in the interval the salaries of almost all other public officers have been increased, and the value of money greatly diminished. They therefore ask for an increase of compensation. I move the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FISH presented a petition of merchants and others, citizens of New York, praying Congress to grant some proper testimonial to the officers and crews of the ship Three Bells, the ship Antarctic, and the bark Kilby, for their humane, self-sacrificing, and heroic conduct in rescuing the passengers, officers, and crew of the steamer San Francisco; which was referred to the joint committee on the subject.

Mr. SHIELDS presented the petition of Jane A. Wright, widow of Calmes L. Wright, praying an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLEN presented the memorial of the State Agricultural Society of Maryland, praying the establishment of a national agricultural school in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of inhabitants of Nahant, Massachusetts, praying the establishment of a daily mail between that town and Lynn; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BELL presented the memorial of Patrick C. Sharmon, asking to have the amount refunded to him which was illegally exacted for the privilege of occupying and using his own ferry across the Rio Grande river; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the petition of the heirs of William Van

Wart be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. DAWSON, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Harriet A. Read, executrix of Lieutenant Colonel A. C. Fanning, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. COOPER, it was Ordered, That the memorial of the heirs of Stephen Moylan be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, it was Ordered, That the memorial of John B. Walbach be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. FITZPATRICK, it was Ordered, That the documents on the files of the Senate, relating to the claim of Charles G. Gunter, be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion by Mr. ADAMS, it was Ordered, That S. Calvert Ford have leave to withdraw his memorial and papers.

On motion by Mr. SUMNER, it was Ordered, That the petition of Asa Andrews be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. SUMNER, it was Ordered, That the memorials and petitions on the files of the Senate, in favor of cheap ocean postage, be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the petition of the heirs-at-law of Godfrey Rinehart be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. BRODHEAD, it was Ordered, That the petition of George P. Welsh and Clark H. Wells be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

LOWER CALIFORNIA EXPEDITION.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to offer a resolution personal in its bearing upon the State which I in part represent here. I desire it to be considered now, and wish to give the reasons why it should be adopted. I will detain the Senate but a few minutes. When honorable Senators hear the resolution read, they will see the reason why I should be granted the courtesy:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate the number of ships-of-war on the coast of California, Oregon, and Washington, whether in active service, or lying in port unemployed; also, the number on the whole Pacific coast of North and South America, and their cruising grounds; also, whether, in his opinion, the naval force of the United States on the Pacific coast, in the year 1853, was sufficient to prevent the departure from ours to foreign territory of any unlawful expedition that might be hastily formed from the adventurous persons usually to be found at all points of great commercial activity and enterprise, whether in the United States or Europe; also, the number of ships-of-war on the Atlantic coast, and other cruising grounds, whether in active service, or lying in port unemployed; also, the number of troops in California, Oregon, and Washington.

Mr. President, I am induced to offer the resolution from seeing in the morning papers a proclamation which I wish the Secretary to read.

The SECRETARY read it, as follows:

A PROCLAMATION,

By the President of the United States:

Whereas, information has been received by me that an unlawful expedition has been fitted out in the State of California with a view to invade Mexico—a nation maintaining friendly relations with the United States—and that other expeditions are organizing within the United States for the same unlawful purpose: And whereas, certain citizens and inhabitants of this country, unmindful of their obligations and duties, and of the rights of a friendly Power, have participated, and are about to participate, in these enterprises, so derogatory to our national character, and so threatening to our tranquility, and are thereby incurring the severe penalties imposed by law against such offenders:

Now, therefore, I, Franklin Pierce, President of the United States, have issued this, my proclamation, warning all persons who shall connect themselves with any such enterprise or expedition that the penalties of the law denounced against such criminal conduct will be rigidly enforced; and I exhort all good citizens, as they regard our national character, as they respect our laws or the law of nations, as they value the blessings of peace and the welfare of their country, to discountenance, and by all lawful means prevent, such criminal enterprises; and I call upon all officers of this Government, civil and military, to use any efforts which may be in their power to arrest for trial and punishment every such offender.

Given under my hand and the seal of the United States, at Washington, this eighteenth day of January, [U. S.] in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four, and the seventy-eighth of the independence of the United States.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

By the President:

W. L. MARCY, Secretary of State.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, this proclamation was issued against persons who are said to be citizens of the State of California. I wish to bring to the notice of the Senate a fact which I think it is proper should go out to the country with that proclamation, and it is this: That at the time this expedition is said to have been gotten up in the State of California, the United States had no force there to prevent the sailing of such expeditions. I wish to bring it to the notice of the Senate and the country that at the very time the first expedition went from California, a single steamship-of-war, with one gun, could have prevented it. And, sir, is there no allowance to be made for the state of the country which was its destination—Lower California and Sonora?

Sir, here was an expedition of forty-five men that passed out without obstruction from the Golden Gate, less than a mile wide, and which any one gun can command, as against a ship without cannon; and they went to a country as large as half a dozen States of this Confederacy, took possession of it, and issued a proclamation claiming it a Republic.

If the President of the United States intends to put down such expeditions there or elsewhere, he should have a force of the United States to prevent their departure from our ports. At the time this vessel left the harbor of San Francisco, there were but two ships-of-war in active service on the whole Pacific coast of South and North America—one at the Sandwich Islands, having been ordered there for the purpose of preventing the consummation of one of the expeditions referred to in the proclamation; the other, as we all supposed, was cruising at the mouth of the Gulf of California, but subsequent information informs us that it had sailed for the coast of Peru, to look after some difficulties which our Government has had with that Republic.

Now, on a coast of over five thousand miles, we had but two ships-of-war to protect our commerce and maintain our neutrality obligations. Is it not a farce to say that such a force can accomplish these objects?

There was also a second expedition reported to have sailed from San Francisco, in a vessel with two hundred and fifty men on board, which was towed out of the harbor by a steamship without the slightest obstacle on the part of the Government of the United States, and why? Because it had no force there. When we ask for a steamship in the revenue service to prevent smuggling on that coast, we are told it costs too much; and when I ask that appropriations shall be made to put that coast in a state of defense, I am almost scouted at, because it costs so much money. This miserable system of economy has left us without Government power, either to defend us from an enemy or prevent the sailing of unlawful expeditions from our ports.

Here, now, we are proclaimed to the world as going to and disturbing the peace of other nations, by expeditions got up on that coast, when we are given a carte blanche to go where we please, and violate any law we please, so far as the power of the Government is concerned; for the only law rigidly executed there is the law of taxing us, and collecting the revenue from us.

Now, Mr. President, I am opposed to all unlawful expeditions of this sort; but it must be known that in a new country like California, where there are so many adventurous spirits, and where the countries adjoining us are offered to us simply for the going and taking them, the power of the United States must be vigilantly and properly executed, if such expeditions are not to be carried out.

Mr. President, it must be known to the people of this country that when there are some of the richest mineral countries in the world adjoining the State of California, with a population utterly unable to defend them against the Indian tribes in their neighborhood, expeditions of this kind will proceed from California, unless the force of the United States there is sufficient to prevent them. Wherever our people go they carry wealth, power, and prosperity with them, and never forget the principles of liberty they have inherited from our forefathers; and although such expeditions should not be encouraged or allowed, if they succeed, the present inhabitants will be more powerful and prosperous through the change of government than they ever were or can expect to be without a change.

What is the condition of our army on the Pacific coast? It is not, and never has been, efficient, from local causes that we have failed to remedy by legislation, although urged to do so. These expeditions can go by land to Sonora, and, in my opinion, have gone, or will go; and this paper proclamation of the President will have no effect in stopping any such expedition, because we have no force there to enforce it.

It is useless for the Chief Magistrate of these United States to attempt, by proclamation, to stop any such expedition. As long as the principle of territorial expansion is recognized, and such countries lay on our border as Lower California, Sonora, and the Sandwich Islands, inviting us to take possession of them, and the Government of the United States opposes no effective preventive force, you will find citizens of the United States engaged in such enterprises; and they will be successful. Proclamations without efficient force will not stop them.

Why have we not had a steamship-of-war on the Pacific coast? Because it is said to be too expensive on a sea-coast of sixteen hundred miles, as coal there costs thirty or forty dollars per ton. Here we see again that miserable system of economy, pennywise and pound foolish, that destroys all of the efficiency of Government, and my constituents are to be branded with infamy for violating laws that there is no power to enforce.

I warn the country that unless the power of the Government is exercised efficiently on that coast, they cannot expect us to stand still when we are invited into these magnificent countries which lie around us, and see the Indians take possession of them, when we can get them with the good-will of the inhabitants.

I am very much surprised at the issuing of this proclamation at this time, because it comes too late. I am anxious to aid the President of the United States in observing our neutrality laws; and if it is true that a treaty has been lately negotiated, by which a large portion of Mexico is to come into our possession, it shows indisputably that the public sentiment of the people of the United States, as reflected by the Executive, desires possession of the territory negotiated for, whether in the way of purchase or otherwise.

I hope that treaty embraces all of the territory on our border which Mexico is not able to protect from such incursions and Indian depredations, and that we shall have a mountain or desert boundary between the two Governments that can be defended by each. If it does not embrace such an extent of country, I shall favor such a modification of it as will accomplish this desirable object.

Mr. PETTIT. I do not know that I have any objection to the proposition which has been offered by the Senator from California; nor am I disposed to cast any reflections upon his constituents, whom he defends so ably. But I must be allowed to say that I think it is the strangest defense that I ever heard given of any man's constituents. He, in effect, says that if you will surround his constituents with bolts and bars, with war steamers, with soldiers with arms in their hands, they will cease stealing and marauding; that they will be honest, forsooth, if you will compel them to be honest. Who would not be honest under such circumstances? Why, sir, he says there are inviting fields of gold, rich mineral wealth, and broad acres, that are desirable to the eye there. Where are such not to be found? And he says that his constituents, intelligent, and worthy, and peaceable as they are, or as he would make us believe they are, cannot restrain their own greedy, grasping appetites to appropriate that which belongs to their neighbors, unless you surround them with a wall. They are constituents that no man ought to be proud of, however proud he may be.

Sir, I regretted to hear, and I am sorry to have it alleged on the floor of the Senate of the United States, that any portion of our fellow-citizens, in order to keep them within the bounds of duty as individuals and citizens of this Republic, towards all other countries and all other men, must be constrained by force in a body. I know that in all communities there are law-breakers—those who will not abide the law—those who must be restrained; but I did not suppose that it pertained to whole bodies of men, whole communities, and whole localities.

Why, sir, it is in effect saying, in neighborhood transactions—for nations are but individuals in a situation of neighborhood towards each other, and should act in like manner—that the rights of neighborhood cannot be maintained.

The peaceable citizen, who is a member of a local society, and observes his own rights and those of his neighbors—who neither suffers his own to be trampled upon, nor wantonly tramples upon those of his neighbor—who neither allows his own property to be appropriated lawlessly for the benefit of another, nor wantonly, with rapine, lays his hands upon the property of others—will conduct himself in like manner as a member of society and a portion of a Government.

Sir, the Senator has said neither more nor less than that these men, his constituents, whom he calls such, if their neighbors' houses lay open, and treasures of gold and valuable commodities were to be found in them, and there was not a watchdog or sentinel at the door, would for all morals, all law, and all right, and wantonly possess themselves of their neighbors' goods.

Sir, I am sorry to hear it said that any portion of our people, in great masses at any rate, are so disposed. I did not believe, I could not believe it was so. I am sorry to hear any Senator upon the floor of the Senate of the United States announce that his constituents are so disposed, that nothing but bars and bolts—not laws, not statutes, not moral strength or moral suasion, nor any regard to duty, public or private—will restrain them from this rapacity; but the force and power of the Government must be applied to prevent it. Sir, it may be possible, and I cordially agree with that Senator in saying that I do not think there is a sufficient force upon the Pacific coast. It ought to be there, but for other and different purposes. The Golden Gate should be fortified and defended; there should be more men-of-war steamers belonging to the military marine upon that coast or in that ocean. But I protest that it ought not to be there for the purpose of preventing the citizens from stealing and robbing. It should not be necessary to have such a force there to prevent these things, but the moral force and intelligence which should govern all portions of the constituents of all of us should be sufficient for that purpose. Your guns should be there to guard and protect the integrity and security of your own territory.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana states that I got up here to defend my constituents for committing acts of lawless robbery, because the United States did not put bolts and bars around them to prevent them from doing it.

Mr. PETTIT. If the Senator will allow me, I will correct him. I did not say that he had got up to defend them, but that he had got up, undertaking to defend his constituents, not for that act, but admitting that they were of that class who would rob and steal, if not prohibited or prevented by bolts and bars.

Mr. GWIN. That is not true. I made no such statement, and no such legitimate inference can be drawn from what I did state. I said that the President had issued a proclamation against certain expeditions which had sailed from California for the purpose of invading a foreign territory; and I gave as a reason why these expeditions had passed from our territory, that the Government of the United States had failed to put such a force there as would prevent their sailing. He says this is defending stealing, and that I am in favor of having bolts and bars put around my constituents. Why, sir, what do his constituents have at home to prevent lawless acts, perhaps as frequent there as in any State in the Union?

Mr. PETTIT. Their Senators do not talk about it on the floor here.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator shall not interrupt me.

The PRESIDENT. Order!

Mr. GWIN. There are jails and penitentiaries for culprits in Indiana. The State authorities protect the citizens against acts of depredation. But who but the Government of the United States has control of the foreign police of the country? How is the President to enforce his proclamation unless by using the arm of the United States?

Sir, I was not defending these expeditions, but I was saying that the President of the United States could not have prevented them with the effective force of the United States now on that coast. I do not charge the President with neglect, nor his predecessor; but I say if the Government of the United States had but a sufficient force there, and had used it efficiently, such expeditions could not have sailed from our ports. Is this defending them? I do not say that there are not lawless men in California; but not more than in other sections of the country who cannot resist that important precept of the Holy book, "Lead us not into temptation."

Why, Mr. President, I have a distinct recollection when the drum and the life summoned volunteers to go to Texas from the various portions of the Atlantic coast, and that the Government was censured for not preventing such movements. Nor am I defending them. No, sir; but I say, when the President issues such a proclamation, it is the duty of this Government to provide means for its enforcement, and to have that kind of force on the spot which is necessary to prevent the organization of such expeditions. That is the ground which I take. With what justice and truth can any Senator charge me with defending any lawless acts?

My constituents pay taxes to keep up an army and navy, and we are entitled to the benefit of them, either for protection against a foreign enemy, or to enforce our neutrality laws, if that be necessary. As to surrounding the country with bolts and bars, or an army or navy, I asked for no such thing.

There is at present but one point on the Pacific coast where such an expedition could be fitted out—the harbor of San Francisco—and there, as I stated before, a single steamship with one gun could effectually arrest it. I am not interfering at all in regard to these expeditions, nor defending them, but I say that such a proclamation, backed by no force, will have no other effect but to irritate the people of that State.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that there is not a gun mounted on the Pacific coast—that there was not a ship-of-war, when these expeditions sailed, within thousands of miles of our coast. I wish to get this information before the American people, to show the necessity of having some means of defense there, against foreign enemies as well as lawless expeditions.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I agree with the honorable Senator from California, that there ought to have been a force on the Pacific coast sufficient to enable the officers of the United States to prevent the setting out of this lawless expedition—an expedition, the successful prosecution of which, from one of the ports of the United States, is calculated to inflict a deep reproach upon our national character. But I must be permitted to say, that I think the honorable Senator from California is mistaken in attributing blame on account of the omission to have such a force there, either to the present or the late Administration. That Senator and myself well know that the system of cutting down the estimates which obtained during the last Congress, and the Congress before, left both the late and the present Administration without the pecuniary means of maintaining such a force there as should make the Government at all times prepared to execute its laws, and vindicate the character of the country against these lawless depredators upon peaceable States adjoining to us.

Now, sir, it is possible, nay, it is probable, that it might have been in the power of the present Secretary of the Navy, or of the late Secretary, or of his immediate predecessor in office, to have placed a sufficient force on the Pacific coast; but my friend from California knows that in order to do that, with the existing means of the Government, and the amount of naval force at his command, he would have been necessarily obliged to weaken the naval power which the interests of the country require should be maintained in other parts of the world. I think, therefore, that so far as any blame can be laid to the Government on this subject, we, of the two Houses of Congress, must assume to foot the bill.

The Administration present, and the Administration past, so far as I see, are both blameless upon that subject. They have stated to us in their estimates what the necessities of the country require. They have asked that the necessary amount should be voted. Congress has refused. There are no means by which a President of the United States can raise money but through the instrumentality of an act of Congress. He cannot levy

"ship money," as the Kings of England once did. He cannot make involuntary contributions, under the denomination of "benevolences." He can only apply what you place at his disposal to maintain the honor and enforce the laws of the United States. I feel persuaded, strongly persuaded, that if the Senator from California, and myself, who always resisted in the Committee on Naval Affairs, and on this floor, this system of capriciously and arbitrarily striking down the appropriations, could have been successful in our views, this late transaction would not have happened—which we all deplore, and which will be considered abroad as a reproach upon our national character, as if we were disposed to look with toleration, if not with favor, upon such lawless adventures upon the dominions of peaceful Powers in our neighborhood.

I thought it right to say thus much because I think that while we are speaking in just terms of indignation of such a proceeding, it is right not to inflict blame where the blame does not properly lie.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I will not protract this debate; for what has been said by my honorable friend from Indiana, [Mr. PERRY], and my distinguished friend from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER], makes it unnecessary for me to say a word. Sir, I regretted to see the Senator from California rise in his place and charge the President of the United States with a neglect of duty—for it amounts to that—in that he had not furnished sufficient force to prevent these depredations.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is mistaken. I have made no such charge.

Mr. SHIELDS. What the honorable Senator said surely amounts to that.

Mr. GWIN. It does not; and I did not intend any such thing.

Mr. SHIELDS. He charges the Government of the United States, as I understand, with blame and censure for not having a naval force on the Pacific coast to prevent these unlawful expeditions; and yet he is the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, whose especial duty it is to furnish that force; and he has neglected, or has been unable to furnish, a sufficient force to the President to prevent these unlawful expeditions.

So, sir, with regard to the military force on that coast; that is also insufficient; but we cannot blame the President, because he has not furnished a force which does not exist. Our Navy is insufficient to protect our coast, and our Army is also insufficient.

The Senator from California, if I understand him, also blames the President for issuing this proclamation. Sir, I think the President would not be worthy of the position that he holds if he did not issue such a proclamation. He must, so far as he can do it, as the Executive head of this nation, absolve the nation from the disgrace of these lawless, unprincipled, vagabond expeditions. The honorable Senator seems to justify this pitiful expedition of forty-five men, as I understand him—

Mr. GWIN. I do not wish the Senator to misunderstand or misrepresent me. I did not justify it; and I have not done so; but I stated that it went out because there was no force to arrest it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am glad to find that the Senator does not justify it. I am glad to find that there is not one Senator on this floor who will justify such an expedition. Before the Senator charges the President of the United States with neglect of duty, or reproaches him, he should rise in his place and tell us where the President was to find the vessels to go there to protect that coast.

Mr. GWIN. I will do it when the Senator is through.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like to hear the Senator do it, and to show that fact. Sir, I have more than contempt for such expeditions as this Walker expedition upon that poor, helpless, defenseless, and unsuspecting population. My opinion is, that the men who could go there, who could go down upon the poor defenseless inhabitants of the frontier of Mexico and surprise them, as it were, would do what they have done when they meet with resistance—fly back to their vessels again.

I repeat what was said by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, that such expeditions are bringing reproach upon the country; and the President would share in that reproach if he did not pursue some course to arrest it.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois might have withheld his reproaches and attacks upon these men who are now in their graves. The last intelligence informs us that they have all been put to death. It was uncalled-for and very wrong to reproach men who have suffered for the crimes which he alleges they have committed. Sir, it is one of the charges which I bring against the efficiency of this Government, that it has not been able to stop such expeditions and prevent such catastrophes.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the honorable Senator tell us wherein the dereliction of the Government consists?

Mr. GWIN. If the gentleman had listened to the resolution, he would have seen that it asked the President of the United States to inform us where the naval forces of the country are. I can tell him where some of our ships-of-war are.

I do not pretend to say that the expedition to Japan has not had beneficent, useful, and important purposes to accomplish. I do not pretend to say that the naval force in that expedition is not properly and usefully employed; but, sir, if the President of the United States cannot maintain our neutrality, and keep so large a squadron in that service, the question presents itself whether it would not be better to order one of the steamships-of-war accompanying and composing part of that squadron to the coast of California.

Sir, I was in favor of the Japan expedition; but I wish to know whether it is not the duty of the Chief Magistrate of this nation to place the naval force of the United States—inefficient as I acknowledge it to be—so as to see that the laws are faithfully executed, and that our commerce and our honor, as a nation, are not infringed upon; and if he has done so, I do not, and have no cause to complain.

Again, sir, we have a surveying expedition to Behring's Straits, in which five vessels-of-war are employed. I was in favor of that expedition, and it was upon my motion that it was organized; but it is of more importance to survey unknown seas, than to so place our naval force as to do away with the necessity of such proclamations? My inquiry is whether the Navy of the United States is properly distributed to protect our neutrality, our commerce, and national honor? That is the inquiry which I propose by this resolution, and if it is, then it will be more imperatively our duty to increase the Navy, and thus enable the Executive to execute his whole duty to the people of the United States as well as to foreign nations. I have attached no blame to the President. I have simply stated a fact, which should be recorded in the history of this country—that inefficient as our Navy is, we have great and grand expeditions in remote portions of the globe, away from our territory, within which such expeditions as are referred to in the proclamation are being fitted out, and there is not a ship of war to prevent their sailing. The object of my resolution is to get information as to where our ship-of-war were stationed when these expeditions sailed from California; and I wish to know what power the President has at his command to execute with effect the proclamation which he has issued? He threatens punishment against the persons engaged in such expeditions. What power has he to bring those thus engaged before the courts—for you cannot punish except where the crime is committed—and what forces, military or naval, is there on the Pacific to execute that proclamation? For what practical purposes is the proclamation issued, when there is no power within the control of the Executive on that coast to have it respected?

It is well known to the Senator from Illinois, and to every member of this body, that ever since I have been at the head of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I have been in favor of increasing the Navy. It is known that I have, in my place, time and again, brought forward and urged upon the Senate the necessity of appropriating the amount asked for in the estimates of the Navy Department for that object. Here, in my place, as the organ of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I asked last session for the building of five or six additional steamships-of-war; and during this session, by the unanimous approval of the committee, brought forward a report indorsing the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy to add six additional ships-of-war to our Navy. I have at all times, and on all occasions, advocated the increase of the Navy, and why should the Senator refer to me, as chairman of the Naval Committee, implying a censure, when he says Congress is to blame for our inefficient Navy, and he knows the fault does not lie with me, but with the other House of Congress?

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, JANUARY 23, 1854.

I censure no one, nor any branch of the Government; but state a fact, which cannot be controverted, that so long as that coast of one thousand six hundred miles in extent is filled up with an adventurous people, who have the privilege of gathering the rich fruits which lie along side them, you cannot keep down these expeditions without an efficient naval force. And I say, further, that when the President issues a proclamation of this nature, he should ask Congress for power to enable him to see that proclamation executed. It is our duty to prevent such terrible catastrophes as took place at Havana, where fifty American citizens were shot down like dogs; and as has recently occurred in Mexico, where, according to the last information we have received, these forty-five individuals who invaded Lower California were put to death.

I know perfectly well that these expeditions are calculated to cast a stain upon the country; and the Executive will, when called upon, do me the justice to state that ever since I have been here, I have been urging him to exercise the whole of his power in supplying the deficiency of the Navy on the Pacific coast, by chartering vessels to prevent the sailing of such expeditions, and protect those engaged in them from being put to death on a foreign soil without trial. The people of California are no more in favor of lawless expeditions than citizens of other States with the same temptation.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President, it seems to me that we have already all the information which is called for by this resolution. The honorable Senator from California informs us that he desires to know how our naval force and ships-of-war have been employed. Why, the Secretary of the Navy has informed us in the report which was communicated to us by the President of the United States at the opening of the session. I have no objection, sir, that the Senator from California shall make the statement which he has given to the Senate. It may all be right. It may be necessary that he should call to it the attention of the Senate; but it is quite unnecessary for us to pass this resolution; for we shall receive no further information from the President of the United States when he answers the call, than we possess already.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, it is very certain that the honor of the country, as well as its safety, is deeply interested in preventing these marauding expeditions from leaving our shores with a view to commit depredations upon foreign Powers; but I am not prepared to say at present, at least, that this Government is to change its policy in the use of the military force which is placed at its disposal, either by sea or land, for the purpose of preventing our people from violating the laws. I had not the pleasure of hearing all that fell from the Senator from California, but I think I heard enough from him to understand his position to be this: That our Navy is to be increased, for the purpose of requiring the laws to be executed against our own citizens.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator will permit me to state that what I said was this: If there had been a single ship-of-war in the harbor of San Francisco when these expeditions were fitted out, it would have been impossible for them to have sailed; and the Government of the United States should execute the neutrality laws, by preventing the fitting out of such expeditions within our own harbors, and within a marine league of the coast of the United States. I did not to say that the Navy of the United States could be used out upon the sea in pursuing expeditions fitted out in the United States.

Mr. MASON. I did not ascribe any such statement to the honorable Senator at all; but I understood the drift of his remarks to be, that we ought to increase the Navy for some purpose, and, among other reasons, because it is shown that a navy is required to prevent the citizens of the country from violating the laws of the country. Now, sir, I deny that absolutely and positively. I am no enemy to an increase of the Navy, provided the Navy is increased for the legitimate purposes of the Navy. I understand the legitimate purposes of our Navy, in time of peace, to be simply to protect our commerce; and I agree in the policy of the late Administration, and of the present Administration, that when they can safely and prudently employ a portion of the Navy in the navigation of foreign seas and the explorations of foreign waters, for the purpose of increasing our commerce, it is a legitimate use of it; because nothing gives a greater stimulant to the products of the country than the means of commercial exchange abroad.

Now, I understood the Senator from California further to say, or at least I gathered from what fell from him after I came into the Senate Chamber, that he thought it was not the part of the Executive to have issued this proclamation until he first provided there a competent force.

Mr. GWIN. No, sir; I stated the fact that the cause of this proclamation originated from the want of a proper naval and military force to see that the laws of the United States were executed; and I wish the Senator to understand that I am entirely in favor of using the Navy in the way he mentioned to promote our commerce.

Mr. MASON. I have no doubt the Senator from California has well said, that, from the adventurous character of the population who have gone to our Pacific border, these expeditions are more likely to be fitted out from that quarter than from any part of the Atlantic coast; but I understood him to say, further, and, doubtless to say correctly, that there was no point upon that extended sea-coast where such an expedition could have been fitted out but at San Francisco.

Mr. GWIN. My reason for that remark was this: San Francisco is a city of large population. In other portions—in the sparsely-settled parts of the country—an expedition of this sort could not have been gotten up without such notoriety as would have defeated its object.

Mr. MASON. I understood it so; and it is certainly no reflection on the people of the city of San Francisco to say, that because from the number of the population and the facilities given there, it is the only point where such an expedition could have embarked.

Now, sir, I have understood the policy of this country to be, to rely upon the people of the country to protect each other by seeing to the due execution of the laws. Our Federal Government has no police distributed throughout the country for the purpose of seeing that the laws are executed; and I will say to the Senator and to the Senate, that when the day comes that we must have an armed police, by land or water, to see to the execution of the laws of the United States, the days of the liberties of the country are numbered. I protest against any such policy being avowed in the Senate or adopted by the country.

Sir, I read the proclamation of the President this morning, and he has done only what his predecessors have done from the days of General Washington down, whenever they have had reason to believe that there were existing lawless combinations for the purpose of violating the laws, or that any such would be formed. In such a case it is the duty of the President to issue a proclamation, advising his countrymen of the consequences of such violation of the laws. And why is it issued? It is issued for the very purpose of giving notice to the people of the country that such combinations are likely to arise, in order that the people may put them down.

Who ever heard of stationing a ship in any one of our ports for the purpose of preventing expeditions from going abroad? Sir, if a ship were stationed in the Chesapeake Bay, or in Hampton Roads, within the limits of the State which I have the honor to represent here, for the purpose of teaching her people their duty, I apprehend they would be false to the reputation which they have acquired from their fathers, if they did not demand that that ship should be removed; and if it were not removed, they would remove it themselves. What, sir! is the policy of this Government to be to station ships in our ports for the purpose of preventing the people there from violating the laws of the country, and implicating us with foreign nations? Never! For one, I should be disposed to hold any President to account who did it. I mean, of course, as a general policy—as a general measure of safety. Doubtless, when the occasion arises, when there is a proper and substantial reason to believe that such an expedition is about to be fitted out, it is the duty of the President, if he believes it necessary, upon his high responsibility, to use the forces of the country to prevent it; but I say that the idea of keeping ships in our ports, or anywhere upon our waters, lest such a thing should occur, is a policy new and unheard of.

Now, sir, a few words in reference to this particular matter. The city of San Francisco has a population of some sixty or eighty thousand inhabitants as well armed, and perhaps better armed, than any population that you can find on any other part of your coast border. If that population has neither the ability nor the means of preventing these expeditions from being fitted out, it will be useless for the Federal Government to attempt it, unless it employs a large portion of the Navy for that purpose. I am against using the Navy for any such purpose as a preventive measure. I am against its going out to the country, that there is any necessity for such a use of the Navy. And if the purpose of the resolution be to serve as an admonition to the President, as the sense of the Senate, that the Navy must be so used, I, for one, must vote against it. Sir, I am not personally informed as to the facts, but I have no doubt, from what we see in the newspapers, that the President has taken measures, and efficient measures, to prevent the recurrence of these transactions, without the use of armed ships stationed at the ports of California to prevent them. All I wish to do, is to protest against any such policy as that the Navy is to be enlarged, or is to be used for the purpose of preventing our own people from violating their own laws.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. President, the turn which this debate has taken makes it a very important matter for the country to understand really the grounds which give origin to it. I did not understand the Senator from California to make any charge against the late Administration or the present Administration for a want of discharge of duty. The question which now arises is this: Has the President of the United States sufficient means of defense subject to his government to meet all the incidents which may occur in this large and extended country? Have we an army sufficient? Have we a navy sufficient? These are the questions which naturally propound themselves on an occasion of this sort. Have we forgotten that, under the treaty with Mexico, we are bound to protect the line of frontier between the United States and Mexico from Indian depredations? Is it not now well understood that already claims against this Government, arising out of that treaty, amount to something in the neighborhood of $20,000,000? and will it be forgotten that the late Administration called upon the Congress of the United States to give it the means of carrying out the treaty, and protecting the Mexicans and the Americans on either side of the line? Were the means granted? Were the two mounted regiments which were asked for by the late President of the United States and his Secretary of War allowed? No, sir; but the appropriations necessary to carry out that request were denied; and denied by whom? Not by the Executive, but by the legislative department of this Government; and if any deleterious consequences have arisen the fault is here, with us.

Have we forgotten what transpired only twelve months since, when the very idea suggested by my friend from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, as to the sufficiency of the civil power of the country to protect this Government, and to put down all attempts at filibustering, was brought forward? Was it not then thought that the courts alone were to attend to these matters? Then, I know, some members here regarded the effort of the last Administration to stop the Cuban expedition as a wrong interference, and it was said that the civil authority alone should interfere in these matters.

Now, sir, I did not understand the Senator from California as making any charge against the Government on any of these accounts. All that he desires is to know whether the Government is in an attitude sufficient to protect its honor, and to maintain its standing, and its obligations towards foreign nations? I say it is not. Our military force is not sufficient, and our Army must be increased; not with the idea of having a standing army thrown upon the country for no necessary purpose, but for a far different reason. From the extension of our country, our sea-coast, within the last four years, has been doubled, and it requires a much larger force to protect it than was formerly required.

The divisions which have, at previous times, existed between parties in this country relative to a standing army or a large navy cease to exist, because the present condition of the Army and Navy does not come up to the requisitions of either of the great parties of the country. Protection is the only object of this proposed increase. The object is not to place an incubus upon the country by an overwhelming army for needless purposes, or by a navy to rot in your docks; not so. Our character as a nation has grown; our importance as a nation has grown; and our dignity now can alone be maintained, with that respect due to it from foreign nations, by the power to enforce any obligation that may exist upon us as a nation, and any duty that may exist on the part of the citizens towards the Government.

Now, sir, what I wish to say is this: We have gradually gone on disappointing the hopes and expectations of the various Administrations in this regard. President Fillmore foreseeing, like a judicious man, what was the growing condition of this country, and what would be its necessities, called upon us years ago to increase the Navy, and to increase the Army, to give to the Executive Departments of the Government the power to enforce all the duties which are required of them. Have you done it, gentleman? Who cut down the appropriations for military purposes, and for naval purposes during the last year? The reports of our proceedings in the Senate and the House of Representatives will tell. Is the failure of the representatives of the people to provide for these things to be charged upon this Administration, or upon the late Administration? Certainly not. The fault is here, sir—not with the Executive.

I am no friend to a large standing army. I have never given a vote with that object in view; but I am prepared, as one of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs, to which I have belonged since my first entry into this body, to say that the military force of the country should be increased. That committee has, from time to time, in accordance with the recommendations of the President of the United States, asked you to increase the Army. It was not done. They asked you to provide for raising two mounted regiments to enforce your treaties, and carry out honestly and honorably your obligations. That was not done. Look at the extent of frontier line between us and Mexico, and then let the future tell this country what millions will have to be paid, under that treaty, by this Government to the Mexicans, on account of our failure to carry out its obligations. Then, when we ask you for the power to do so, and it is not done, who is to blame? Do not charge it upon the President of the United States, or upon the Executive Department of the Government, but upon yourselves—the representatives of the people, who, for the purpose of keeping down the appropriations, have voted against them to gratify the people at home, who are unacquainted with these facts; and you have thus brought our present unfortunate condition upon us.

A word now in relation to the Navy. I have voted for every increase of the Navy which has been presented since I have been here, for it has been presented in detail. The Committee on Naval Affairs, headed by my honorable friend from California, has reported, for the last three or four years, in favor of an enlargement of the Navy; and for what reason? To protect our sea-ports, to protect our commerce, and to interdict these filibustering expeditions, which are so well calculated to dishonor this Union abroad. Who failed to carry out these propositions which were thus presented? The representatives of the people.

Why, then, will any man insinuate upon this floor, or anywhere else, that the late or the present President of the United States, and their various heads of Departments, have failed to do their duty? They have uniformly, boldly, and strenuously recommended to us to do what they thought we ought to do; but we, in our wisdom, turned a deaf ear to their suggestions, and pronounced that the people would not like to see our appropriations so large. When we stopped the appropriations for a few millions, by the simple striking out of a line, we opened a flood-gate of claims against this country amounting to three or four times the sum by which we diminished the appropriations. When those claims shall be presented, if I shall be honored with a seat on this floor, I shall attempt to give a historical sketch of the action of this Government in relation to these appropriations, from the time of the ratification of the treaty with Mexico down to the present day; to show who it has been that failed to strengthen the arm of the Executive Department in order to carry out the obligations which were incurred under that treaty.

Now, sir, a few words as to the expedition of which my friend from California has been speaking. That is one of the incidents belonging to a republican form of government. It is one of the incidents belonging to the peculiar character of that section of the country, where the lands, as the honorable Senator observes, are thrown open, and we are asked to go in and protect the people by giving them a better government than they now have. Men can be found everywhere, not only in California, but in every State of this Union, whose better feelings, not whose disposition to rob and to steal, would prompt them to go and take the control of the Government, in order to mitigate the despotism inflicted upon those people, and give to them a prosperity which they never had before. Because they have gone there they are said to be censurable. How? As citizens, I am not disposed to degrade them, because they were operated upon by high and magnanimous feelings. I am as much opposed to filibustering as any man upon this floor; but I tell you, sir, that it will arise, and it will continue to arise, until you skirt the whole of your Pacific coast with a naval power sufficient to intercept all of these expeditions; and are we not bound to do it? A great and powerful nation like the United States should stand upon its honor, and discharge every obligation due to other nations. We never can do it, sir, until both the great parties in this country concur in giving strength to the Executive arm of the Government sufficient to carry out our treaty obligations.

Mr. GWIN. I have no desire to further occupy the attention of the Senate. All I have to say in reply to the Senator from Virginia is, that if this proclamation means anything, it means that the President of the United States has power to execute it. If it is not a mere paper proclamation, he intends to use that power which the laws and the Constitution have placed in his hands for its execution. And I undertake to say, without any special authority on the subject, that the President has issued orders to the naval and military commanders on the Pacific coast to do everything which the Senator from Virginia says it would be a great outrage to authorize.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment? Do I understand him to say that the President of the United States, by virtue of any power in himself, has authorized any portion of the Army or Navy to proceed in the execution of the laws at all, except as auxiliary to the civil power, to execute the process of the courts?

Mr. GWIN. I understand the power of the President of the United States to be, to see that the laws are faithfully executed, and the treaties made with foreign Governments enforced; and therefore I think that if, in his opinion, at any point of the United States there is an expedition fitted out, by citizens of the United States, to invade the territory of another Government, in violation of the treaties of the United States, he has the right to stop that expedition until it is ascertained by the courts of the country whether it is illegal or not. But how can you stop an expedition until this investigation takes place in the courts?

I did not intend to provoke a discussion; but when such a proclamation on this subject is issued against citizens of my State, I intend to state the acknowledged fact, that there was an invitation, if I may so say, from the people of the country invaded, to engage in such expeditions; for they have no government, no protection, and the citizens of the United States, wherever they go, afford that protection which those people do not get from their nominal Government.

Mr. BADGER. I would very respectfully suggest to the Senator from California, that I doubt very much whether we ought to adopt this resolution. I hope, at all events, the Senate will allow it to remain until another day. It seems to me, sir, that the resolution, so far as any specific information is desired which the President may be supposed to have at his command, is already answered. The Secretaries of War and of the Navy, in their annual reports communicated with the President's message, have stated the disposition made of the military and naval forces of the United States. And I think, as to the question of opinion for which it is proposed to ask the President by the resolution, whether the naval force of the United States was sufficient to have prevented the act being done, that it is one which we ought not properly to put to the President of the United States; because, so far as I am able to see, without any reasonable foundation in any facts known to us, it implies that he might have prevented what he nevertheless has not prevented, and asks him to answer the question whether he could have done better with the naval force than he actually has done.

Then, after we have got the correct information, it will be nothing but what we have now. It seems to me that the Senator from California had no idea of presenting the matter in that shape. It is slightly deficient in respect towards the President, in asking him whether the force was sufficient to have enabled him to prevent the occurrence of these transactions. We must take it for granted that it was not, or he would have prevented them. What I mean is this, that if the President had anticipated this event, and had a disposable naval force at his command, he undoubtedly would have prevented it. To imply that he would not, as the inquiry seems to do, or that he might have been reluctant or negligent in doing it, is, in some degree, casting an implied censure upon him for the transaction. I know the Senator does not mean to do that; and I very respectfully suggest that the resolution had better not be adopted.

Mr. GWIN. The resolution was drawn up hastily; with no intention to reflect upon the President of the United States. I simply wished to show to the Senate and the country that there was no force to be employed there to prevent the expedition. I only wanted the facts properly presented to the country, and am willing to let the resolution pass over; and if there is anything to be corrected in its phraseology, I shall not be opposed to its being done.

So the resolution was passed over.

EXTENSION OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. PETTIT. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to present, and have considered at this time, a resolution of inquiry. I beg leave to state that I have drawn up this resolution in consequence of a letter which I have just received from an old and esteemed friend. The resolution is upon the subject of extending the pension laws, or rather as to the construction of the laws granting pensions to the widows of the officers and soldiers of the late war with Great Britain. The writer offers, I think, two good reasons why those laws should be amended or extended. The first is, that if a woman was worthy to be the wife of a soldier who sacrificed his life in the cause of his country she would be likely to marry a second time. The second, is that the wants of a widow who has buried two husbands are not less than the wants of those who have buried one. The resolution is one of inquiry only, and I hope it will be adopted. It is:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions inquire whether the laws need any amendment to give full effect to the design of Congress to give pensions to the widows of officers and soldiers of the war of 1812.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the following bills:

A bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1855;

A bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensioners of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1855;

A bill for the relief of the United States troops who were sufferers by the recent disaster to the steamship San Francisco;

A bill to constitute Quincy, in the State of Illinois, a port of entry; and

A joint resolution authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the expenses of a board of commissioners appointed by the Territorial Assembly of Oregon to prepare a code of laws; and also to adjust the expenses of collecting and printing certain laws and archives of the Territory of Oregon.

Also, that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. EWING of Kentucky, Mr. MAY of Maryland, Mr. PARKER of Indiana, Mr. HUGHES of New York, Mr. KERR of North Carolina, Mr. BARKSDALE of Mississippi, Mr. BROOKS of South Carolina, Mr. BANKS of Massachusetts, and Mr. WILLIS ALLEN of Illinois, a committee on the part of that body, to join such committee as may be appointed by the Senate, for the purpose of taking into consideration the subject of amending the Constitution in the mode of electing the President and Vice President of the United States.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of John A. Ragan, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. BELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of the Mayor and Aldermen of the city of Memphis, praying the erection of a marine hospital at that place, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce; which was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Isaac Varn, Sr., praying indemnity for losses incurred in the military occupation of his property, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred certain petitions praying grants of land in aid of the construction of railroads in the State of Wisconsin, reported the following bills; which were read, and passed to a second reading:

Bill granting a portion of the public lands to the State of Wisconsin, to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State.

Bill granting a portion of the public lands to the State of Wisconsin, to aid in the construction of a railroad and branches in said State.

Mr. EVANS, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to which was referred the memorial of the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased, praying an extension of their patent, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of George C. Bishop, and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased. The bill was read, and ordered to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

ZACHARIAH LAWRENCE.

Mr. WADE. The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Zachariah Lawrence, of Morgan county, Ohio, praying compensation as prize money for the capture of a British sloop during the last war with Great Britain, has instructed me to report a bill for his relief. I ask the Senate to consider it at this time. It has heretofore passed both branches of the National Legislature, but at different Congresses. I believe there will be no objection to it.

The bill was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct that $2,645 40 be paid to the memorialist, as his portion of the prize money for capturing and taking into the port of Passamaquoddy, in 1813, the British sloop Venture.

No amendment being proposed, the bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was read a third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. FITZPATRICK asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill to relinquish the reversionary interest of the United States to a certain reservation therein mentioned, and to confirm the title of Charles G. Gunter thereto; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

ADMISSION ON THE SENATE FLOOR.

On motion by Mr. BADGER, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by him on the 12th instant, to amend the 48th rule of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. The resolution has been printed as I originally introduced it. I have this morning made some modifications in it which I will explain to the Senate. The first is, that among the persons who are to be entitled to admission upon the floor there shall be added, at the suggestion of a friend, "the clerk of the Supreme Court." That is only one person, and will not enlarge the list very much. The next is for the purpose of amending so much of the rule, adopted at the last session, as is embraced in these words:

"No person, except members and officers of the Senate, shall be admitted at either of the side doors of the Senate Chamber."

The effect of that amendment to the rule, as adopted at the last special session, is to exclude members of the House of Representatives from coming into our Chamber, except through the main entrance. The impression, I understand, has gone abroad—how, I know not—that the proposed amendments, submitted by me the other day, were intended to embrace the exclusion of members of the House of Representatives from a privilege which they had heretofore enjoyed. My resolution, as originally offered, simply did not touch the matter at all, but left it where it stood at the last session of the Senate. At the same time, I never favored a proposition for putting any restraint upon the members of the other House as to the door of entrance at which they should seek to give us their company, being myself always extremely glad to see them here, and to welcome them, in whatever direction they come, and to show them every civility in my power in return for the manifold civilities I have received in my visits which I make from time to time to the House of Representatives.

I propose, therefore, to insert these words: "and members of the House of Representatives;" so that it will read:

"No person, except members and officers of the Senate, and members of the House of Representatives, shall be admitted at either of the side doors of the Senate Chamber."

At the suggestion of a Senator, I will explain who, by the resolution, are to be allowed admission on the floor in addition to those allowed at the last session. As the rule stood before, Ministers from foreign Governments to the Government of the United States, and their secretaries, were admitted to the floor of the Senate; but, by some strange oversight—I know not how it originated—Ministers of the United States to foreign Governments, and their secretaries, were not admitted. I thought that was a very unnecessary and invidious distinction. The first amendment, therefore, proposed by the resolution is, to admit Ministers of the United States to foreign Governments, and their secretaries, and persons who have held such offices.

The next amendment is this: By the rule, as it originally stood, members of the Legislatures of the several States were permitted to come upon the floor of the Senate, but the judges of the several States were not, which I thought an invidious distinction. I therefore propose to admit judges of the courts of record of the United States, and persons who have held those offices. Again, the rule, as it stood, authorized the secretaries and clerks of either House of Congress, and persons who have held such offices, to come on the floor of the Senate, but did not admit the Sergeant-at-

Arms of the House of Representatives, which I thought was an unnecessary exclusion; and therefore I propose to insert "Sergeant-at-Arms."

A friend has just suggested to me that if the proposition to admit all those who have been judges in the different States is adopted, it may admit too many on the floor. The substantial good of, and decent respect for, the State authorities, is what I go for; but as it may be preferred that this alteration should be made, I will strike out the words "and persons who have held those offices," so as to make it apply to the existing judges of the States.

Mr. STUART. I wish the Senator would retain that.

Mr. BADGER. There is the difficulty. What am I to do?

Mr. CHASE. That had better be left in.

Mr. BADGER. I do not want to appear to oppose the desire of Senators.

Mr. HAMLIN. Put in the Superintendent of the Public Printing. All will be in favor of that.

Mr. BADGER. Here I am again. I wish I knew what the Senate wished. [Laughter.] My friend from Maine suggests to me to put in the Superintendent of Public Printing. I am in favor of that. He says it will meet general approbation. Let the Secretary put in "the Superintendent of Public Printing" at the proper place.

Another friend suggests that the clerks to committees should be allowed to come on the floor. I agree with that.

A SENATOR. Why should they come here?

Mr. BADGER. We want to see them very often.

Mr. SLIDELL. They are officers of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly; we will so consider them. They will therefore be included in the word "officers."

Mr. SUMNER. I move to add as an amendment, after the words "officers of the Senate," the words "the editors of the daily papers in the city of Washington."

Mr. BADGER. I hope not.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senator will accept the amendment.

Mr. BADGER. No, sir; I protest against that. If the editor of a paper has a right to come in by virtue of any other office or claim, let him come; but I do not wish to admit editors as editors.

A SENATOR. We do not want the "press-gang."

Mr. CASS. Why confine it to editors in the city of Washington? What reason is there for that?

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WALKER. I desire to move to insert, after the words "Superintendent of the Public Printing," the words "the Marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia."

Mr. BADGER. That is right.

Mr. WALKER. And "the Deputy Postmaster of the city of Washington." I believe he is so termed in law.

Mr. BADGER. Why the Deputy Postmaster? The Marshal is right, but why the other?

Mr. WALKER. I know no other reason than this: I have myself had official business with him here, and, as he was not admissible, I had to go outside of the Chamber to see him.

Mr. BADGER. I will accept that as a modification of my resolution.

The resolution, as modified, reads as follows:

Resolved, That the 48th rule of the Senate be amended to read as follows:

48. The following persons, and none others, shall be admitted on the floor of the Senate: Members of the House of Representatives, and their Clerks; the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Navy, the Attorney General, the Postmaster General; the Private Secretary of the President; Chaplains to Congress; the Superintendent of the Public Printing; the Marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia; the Deputy Postmaster of the city of Washington; Judges of the United States; Clerk of the Supreme Court; Foreign Ministers and their secretaries; Ministers of the United States to foreign Governments, and their secretaries, and persons who have been such Ministers or secretaries; officers who, by name, have received, or shall hereafter receive the thanks of Congress for their gallantry and good conduct in the service of their country; or who have received medals by a vote of Congress; the Governor, for the time being, of any State or Territory of the Union; the ex-Governors of the several States; Judges of the courts of record of the several States; the ex-officers of the Senate; such gentlemen as have been heads of Departments, secretaries, clerks, Sergeants-at-Arms, or members of either branch of Congress; persons who, for the time being, belong to the respective State and Territorial Legislatures; and persons belonging to such Legislatures of foreign Governments as are in amity with the United States.

No person, except members and officers of the Senate, and members of the House of Representatives, shall be admitted at either of the side doors of the Senate Chamber; and all persons claiming admission on the floor, excepting members and the Clerk and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, for the time being, the heads of the several Departments, the Private Secretary of the President, the Chaplains to Congress, Judges of the United States, and of the several States, Foreign Ministers and their secretaries, Ministers and ex-Ministers of the United States, their secretaries and ex-secretaries, and officers who, by name, shall have received the thanks of Congress, or medals by a vote of Congress, shall (each time before being admitted upon the floor) enter their names, together with the official position in right of which they claim admission, in a book to be provided and kept at the main entrance to the Senate Chamber; and no person except members of the Senate shall be allowed within the bar of the Senate, or to occupy the seat of any Senator.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, I would submit to the Senator from North Carolina, whether it would not be better to retain the language as he originally proposed it, so that gentlemen who have been judges in the several States may be admitted. I trust he will retain the original phraseology in that respect, as it was introduced. We know perfectly well there are gentlemen of high standing who have been judges in the several States; and I know no reason why they should not be admitted here as well as those who are now judges.

Mr. BADGER. I have personally no objection; but I did not desire to oppose the wish of the Senate, and thus raise a question on the point. A number of Senators say it would not be convenient. Some say there would be a hundred thousand of them coming here—[Laughter]—and that, therefore, we shall be unable to admit them. When we get into our new Hall, so that we can admit three or four regiments, we shall accommodate them with pleasure.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask my friend from North Carolina whether, under the terms of his resolution, the clerks of committees will be allowed to come here?

Mr. BADGER. We have agreed, commonly in the Senate, that clerks of committees shall be understood to be embraced in the term "officers of the Senate."

Mr. BUTLER. Very well, sir. It is very convenient sometimes to see them here.

Mr. CHASE. I would also inquire of the Senator from North Carolina whether it would not be well to add to the rule the clause of which so much has been said in reference to certain treaties, "and the same shall be religiously observed?" Such rules have not been, heretofore, very much observed. [Laughter.]

Mr. BADGER. I should dislike very much to have any such clause there, because we have recently had an explanation of what the religious sense of the observance of treaties means. I hope the Senate will observe the rule faithfully, and not in the way which certain treaties are religiously observed. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on the resolution, and it was unanimously agreed to.

COMPENSATION TO CLERKS.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to offer a resolution for the purpose of removing a small case of hardship, which I know the Senate will approve. It is known to you, sir, and to all the Senate, that certain committees of this body have been in the habit of having clerks allowed them, and that some of our committees had employed clerks before the resolution was passed authorizing their appointment at this session, during which time the clerks were diligently engaged in the discharge of their duties. I offer this resolution now, so that the little pay may not be lost. I hope it may be considered immediately:

Resolved, That such of the clerks to standing committees as have been on duty since the first day of this session be paid therefrom.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MARY C. HAMILTON.

Mr. FOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Mary C. Hamilton. It was reported upon favorably by the Committee on Pensions at the last session of Congress, and passed the Senate; but was not acted upon in the House. It has been again reported at this session. It is a very meritorious case. If necessary, I will ask that the report of the committee be read, to satisfy Senators of the justice of the claim.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill.

It provides that Mary C. Hamilton, widow of the late Captain P. Hamilton, of the second regiment of dragoons, be entitled to receive such pension, commencing from and after the day of the death of her husband, as she would have been entitled to had he died in consequence of wounds received in battle.

Mr. FOOT. I will state the facts in order to save time, unless some Senator desires to hear the report read. It appears from the evidence, and was so reported, that the husband of this petitioner died in consequence of a severe wound received by the kick of a horse while in the service in the Mexican war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

J. BOYD.

On motion by Mr. SLIDELL, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill for the relief of J. Boyd, of Louisiana. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to pay him $275 for the expenses incurred by him in taking the census of the parish of Iberville, Louisiana.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN S. ROBERTS.

The bill from the House of Representatives explanatory of an act entitled "An act for the relief of Benjamin S. Roberts," was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. FOOT. I ask that that bill may be read a second time now, for the purpose of being considered and put upon its passage. A word of explanation will satisfy every Senator that it ought to pass.

It was fully considered by the Committee on the Judiciary in the House of Representatives, recommended unanimously by the committee, and unanimously passed by the House. It is explanatory of a bill which passed at the last session for the relief of Benjamin S. Roberts, and its object is to substitute in place of the words in that bill "full amount of his pay and subsistence," which the officers of the Department construe to mean part of his pay, the words "pay for emoluments and allowances, in conformity with the recommendation of Senate Report 225, on which said act passed both Houses of Congress without amendment." It having been decided by the accounting officers of the Department that the terms "full pay and subsistence" do not mean full pay, the object of the bill is to put in other terms, which cannot be mistaken.

The bill was read a second time by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to suggest, while the subject is before the Senate, that if the words "full pay" mean, in the Executive Departments, half pay, it might be well if the Judiciary Committee would endeavor to get a glossary of words arranged, together with the meaning which they sustain in the Executive Departments.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be read a third time, read a third time, and passed.

TROOPS ON THE SAN FRANCISCO.

The bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of the United States troops who were sufferers by the recent disaster to the steamship San Francisco, was read a first and second time by unanimous consent.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the bill will now be considered, and put upon its passage.

Mr. DAWSON. I think it had better be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It can be reported back by Monday.

It was so referred.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill from the House of Representatives making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensioners of the United States, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill from the House of Representatives making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution from the House of Representatives, authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the expenses of the board of commissioners, appointed by the Territorial Assembly of Oregon, to prepare a code of laws; also, to adjust the expenses of collecting and printing certain laws and archives of the Territory of Oregon, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The bill from the House of Representatives to constitute Quincy, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. BRIGHT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to amend an act to explain an act entitled "An act to establish certain post roads, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1853.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion by Mr. BADGER, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. STUART, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time devoted thereto, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 19, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Clerk of the House, transmitting estimates for an appropriation to supply deficiencies in the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1854, which are necessary to the execution of existing orders of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HIBBARD. I wish to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of Salisbury Wheeler, for the purpose of reference to the Commissioner of Pensions.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of Harriet Baker, with a view to having one or two of the papers translated, as they are in the Portuguese language. They will be immediately returned to the House.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to call up a resolution which lies upon the Speaker's table. It is a mere matter of inquiry.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to this House the progress that has been made in the improvement of the Rock Island and Des Moines Rapids under the appropriation of $100,000 made by the last Congress, what plan of improvement has been adopted, how much work has been accomplished, the character of such work, and what amount of such appropriation has been expended."

The question was then taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BERNHISEL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House, to introduce the following resolution.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of constructing a road from Great Salt Lake City, via Provo, Fillmore City, and Parowan, to Harmony, in the Territory of Utah, and thence to the eastern boundary of California, for military and other purposes, and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

The resolution was, by unanimous consent, considered and adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to know if the morning hour has yet commenced?

The SPEAKER. It has not yet commenced.

Mr. HOUSTON. I insist, then, that we proceed at once to the business of the morning hour.

CLOSING DEBATE.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of the resolution offered yesterday by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] to close debate on the bill of the House (No. 49) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1854, in one hour after the committee shall next resume its consideration.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the vote last taken, by which the resolution was adopted, be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider do lie upon the table.

The question was put; and the latter motion agreed to.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Some few days ago, under the rules of the House, I filed with the Clerk a withdrawal of papers from the files of the House, with a direction for their reference to the Committee on Military Affairs. By a mistake of the Clerk, the papers were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House that the Committee on Invalid Pensions may be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that reference be made to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There was no objection, and the order was accordingly made.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The House then proceeded to call the committees, in their regular order, for reports, commencing with the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CARUTHERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

"A bill granting the right of way to the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad through the Arsenal, Magazine, and Jefferson Barracks tracks."

The bill was read through by the Clerk.

It provides that the right of way, sixty feet in width, be granted to the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad Company through the Marine Asylum and Magazine grounds and the Jefferson Barracks tracks; and for the grant of the same to said company, for the purpose of constructing a railroad from Iron Mountain, in the State of Missouri, to the city of St. Louis: Provided, That the railroad shall be constructed upon the line upon which it is now located: Provided, further, That the said company shall construct a substantial wire fence on each side of the road through the said grounds, with such gates as may be designated by the proper authorities: Provided, further, That the said company shall be liable for all losses sustained to the public property in consequence of said railroad.

Mr. CARUTHERS. I move that the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. MACE. I hope that course will not be taken in reference to any bill reported by any committee of this House. Unless we go on and refer bills of this character to the appropriate committee in the order in which they are presented, we shall have the same scenes in this Congress that we had in the last. I shall, therefore, object to any bill being put upon its passage as soon as it is reported from a committee.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The belief has pretty generally prevailed, not only in this House, but out of it, that it is the destruction, or loss of a bill, to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. One great reason for that belief is the practice which has grown up of late of putting bills upon their passage when they are reported here from committees.

Now, sir, it is for the House to consider whether it is better that bills shall be sent to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and there discussed, matured, and disposed of, according to their merits, or whether it is best that such bills as it may be thought necessary to pass shall be put immediately on their passage when they are reported. By pursuing the latter course the entire time of the House is taken up, and other gentlemen who have bills ready to report are prevented, as was the case during the last Congress, from reporting them at all. That is the way in which the business of the House was conducted during the last long session. Many bills were put upon their passage as soon as they were reported from committees, and thus other gentlemen who had hundreds of bills prepared and ready to report could obtain no opportunity of reporting them, and hence there was nothing upon the record to show that other committees had worked at all.

I think it is best, except in some extreme or extraordinary case of pressing and urgent necessity, where there may be unanimous consent that bills shall be put upon their passage, that they should all share the same fate, and go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The rules provide that the Calendar in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall be taken up and called in its order, and when any bill is called, if the House desires to pass it at once, they can do it; if not, a majority can pass it by and go on to other bills. The only exception to that rule is that a motion may be made, without calling the Calendar, to take up any of the general appropriation bills, or, in time of war, any proposition relating to the raising or subsistence of troops.

It does seem to me that it would be best for the House to come at once to the conclusion that they will refer all bills to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and take their places on the Calendar, and be disposed of accordingly. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and printed.

[Here a message was received from the Senate of the United States, by the hands of Mr. MACHEN, its Assistant Secretary, announcing the passage by that body of sundry bills, in which he was requested to ask the concurrence of the House.]

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I do not know what may be the particular character of the bill now before the House, but I cannot concur in the sentiments expressed this morning by my honorable colleague, [Mr. JONES.] I believe that the House has done more business, and has performed it better, by acting upon bills as they have been presented by committees, than in any other way; and I believe that in many cases, if bills were permitted to be put upon their passage at once, when they are not of a very highly important character, it would contribute much to the speedy transaction of the business of the House. I believe that much difficulty and embarrassment arises from the motions to refer which are frequently made; and that much time is lost and less business done on account of them. I can see no reason why bills involving no important principle should not be put directly on their passage. It is a saving of time, because much loss of time is occasioned when motions are made to refer, by calls for the yeas and nays, and the variety of motions which are resorted to under the parliamentary law to defeat propositions.

In that way I have frequently seen a whole day spent, when really there was no objection to the principle of the bill. Everybody knows that if these bills are sent to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the appropriation bills having precedence, and being always taken up and occupying a large portion of the session, the whole Calendar is crowded to the last of the session; and then in the few days when it is in order to move to suspend the rules to take up those bills, there is a rush, and one hundred men are upon the floor calling out to the Speaker to get the floor to move a suspension of the rules, in order to get up some favorite bill.

Now, if we were to spend an hour or two every day in disposing of those matters, which could be well disposed of in a few minutes, without a great deal of argument, if gentlemen would be willing to take hold of bills of that character—bills of an importance not sufficient to require their reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—a large amount of business could be done with very little trouble. I therefore dissent entirely from the position of my colleague.

Mr. MILLSON. Mr. Speaker, I differ very widely from the gentleman who has just taken his seat. If there be anything which has caused our Congressional legislation to become a by-word and reproach among the nations, it is this practice of considering bills immediately on their report from the committee to which they were originally referred. At the very commencement of this Congress, on the third day of the session, in as strong a case as could well be conceived, the House deliberately determined to refer a bill to a Committee of the Whole, which the gentleman who reported it desired to put immediately on its passage. I say that it was as strong a case as could well be conceived of; for it was the case in which a bill had passed both Houses of Congress at the last session, and had simply, by some clerical misprision, or some other accident, failed to receive the signature of the President. Even in that case, on my motion, this House, by a very large majority, determined to refer that bill to the Committee of the Whole. And, sir, from subsequent information, I have just reason to believe that it was fortunate that it was so referred.

I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] in the opinion that it is altogether an error to suppose that if bills be referred to the Committee of the Whole, they can never be reached afterwards. They are at all times within the control of a majority of the House. That majority can at all times, by postponing the consideration of the previous bills, take up any bill out of its order, if it think proper to do so.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I think that the gentleman is mistaken. I am of opinion that, by the rules, the appropriation bills have precedence, and that it is not in order to move to take up any other bills. I may be mistaken in that, but I think I am right.

Mr. MILLSON. I think that the gentleman is even mistaken in that. The committee may, by a majority, postpone the appropriation bills. It requires, however, to do so, a special vote. Even the appropriation bills may be postponed by a vote of the House, and any other bill may, by postponing those which stand higher upon the Calendar, be taken up and considered by the committee. But suppose that it were not so? What propriety is there in giving a bill which has been just reported precedence of bills which have received the consideration of committees earlier in the session, and, therefore, entitled to consideration by the House before those which come in at a later period?

I have scarcely ever seen an instance in which the House has refused to refer a bill and determined to pass it on the report of the committee, that it has not had just reason afterwards to repent its precipitation.

I will refer to one or two acts which occurred recently. A few days ago a bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by the honorable gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUNNING,] which seemed designed to correct a mischief that many of us were aware of, and all of us desired to remedy. I refer to the bill relating to the rights of citizenship of those born out of the country—children of citizens of the United States. But for the fact that I had on many occasions been—as I fear I may be considered to have been—obtrusive in insisting on the reference of all bills, I should, perhaps, out of abundant precaution, have urged the reference of that bill, also, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. But it seemed to be a just bill. It was a subject to which I had given some examination before I came to Washington this session. It seemed only to cover the particular point which was the subject of discussion; and yet the moment I saw that bill in print I thought I discovered serious objections to it.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. What are those objections?

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, which reported that bill, asks me what those objections are. I will tell him one of the objections which I refer to, and I will briefly advert to another.

One of my objections is this: Under the operation of this bill, a subject of the British Queen, a member of the British Parliament, a minister of the Crown, an admiral of the Navy, or a lieutenant general of the Army, may be a citizen of the United States. Yes, sir, that bill, in its present form, confers citizenship on men who may be in the active service of Great Britain, owning and acknowledging allegiance to the British Crown. For it provides that the children born of those who may at the time be citizens of the United States—naturalized as well as native-born citizens—shall, though born in a foreign country, be citizens of the United States. It does not restrict this privilege of involuntary citizenship to those who are brought within the jurisdiction of the United States, or who come to reside in any of the States before they shall attain their majority. If the fathers become naturalized here, their children, born afterwards in England, though they may choose to remain always the subjects of the British Crown, are, by this act of Congress, admitted to the rights of citizenship.

Mr. CUTTING. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MILLSON yielded the floor.

Mr. CUTTING. Will the gentleman from Virginia—though in this informal way this bill is now being debated—oblige me so far as to refer to that part, or to any part of the bill which authorizes the inference which he deduces?

Mr. MILLSON. If the gentleman from New York has the bill or proposition, I will read it.

Mr. CUTTING. And point out that expression, or those expressions, from which, legitimately, the inference which he alludes to can be drawn?

Mr. MILLSON. I think I can do so; and I will do so—for the requirement of the gentleman from New York is a reasonable one—if the gentleman will favor me with a copy of the bill.

Mr. CUTTING. I am sorry to say that I have not the means of accommodating the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MILLSON. Then I think I know the provisions of this bill sufficiently well to dispense with a copy of it. And I call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUTTING]—for I have no idea that he designed it should bear any such construction, or that the committee were aware it would have any such operation—to the observations which I am about to make from my recollection of the provisions of that bill, and I invite him to state whether I am correct or not.

The bill provides that all persons heretofore born, or who may hereafter be born, of fathers who were, at the time of their birth, citizens of the United States, shall be themselves citizens of the United States. Am I not right? The only restriction is that no man shall claim the right of citizenship under one who was never a resident of the United States. Sir, but for that restriction it might happen that some two hundred years hence a subject of the British Crown would claim to be a citizen of the United States by reason alone of the right of citizenship of a remote ancestor two hundred years before. The restriction is well, but it did not go far enough, for it confirmed to such person so born without the United States the right of citizenship as long as he may live, and wherever he may choose to reside.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know what the subject of discussion is before the House. I think the gentleman is not in order in his remarks.

Mr. MILLSON. I am illustrating the evils and mischiefs of hasty legislation by reference to instances in which bills have been hurriedly and inconsiderately passed, and which contained principles, or omissions, which those who voted for them were not themselves aware of. I am now answering the inquiry of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUTTING,] in order to justify my objection to putting this bill upon its passage now, and to the passage of any other bills at the time they are first reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that an elaborate discussion of the bill which was passed a few days ago is not in order, and cannot be allowed, if there is any objection.

Mr. CUTTING. Will the gentleman from Virginia answer me a question?

Mr. MILLSON. I have no objection to answer any inquiry of the gentleman, if it shall be decided by the Chair to be in order.

The SPEAKER. The question and answer must be confined to the matter under consideration.

Mr. MILLSON. The passage of that bill is a fair illustration of the evils and mischiefs of passing bills without reference; evils which we shall hardly avoid in future if we allow bills to be passed under similar circumstances.

I now leave this part of the subject, and refer to the other objection which the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. STANTON] desired me to specify. It is this: that that bill, by a simple act of legislation, confers citizenship upon those who are now aliens. That part of the bill is not the enactment of a uniform rule of naturalization, but, by a simple statute, a mere act of Congress, it confers citizenship upon those who are aliens. I refer to that clause of the bill which is designed to have a retrospective operation. Apart from the other objections, that alone, is, in my judgment, an unconstitutional feature of the bill, and one which ought to be stricken out, and one which I hope and believe will be stricken out in the Senate.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] that this act was designed to put a construction upon the act of 1802. It was designed to remedy a defect in the phraseology of the act of 1802, which was, undoubtedly, by its framers, designed to have the effect of that bill.

Mr. MILLSON. I will say that such was not the view taken of the matter by the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. CUTTING] who introduced the bill. The House will recollect that he distinctly stated—and I was myself disposed to concur with him in that statement—that these men were now aliens.

Mr. STANTON. That is true, and it arises from the defects of the bill of 1802.

Mr. MILLSON. But the object of the bill was not to give such a construction to the act of 1802, and to ascertain rights already existing, but to confer upon various persons rights of citizenship, which, it was declared, they did not now possess.

Mr. PARKER. I rise to a question of order. If this is a legitimate discussion, it is legitimate to reply to it. I imagine it would not be in order to reply, and therefore the remarks of the gentleman are out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken, and that the gentleman's remarks take too wide a range.

Mr. MILLSON. I will now refer to another case illustrating the evils of this practice. It is one which, so far as I know, is without precedent, even in the proceedings of this House.

Day before yesterday, upon the introduction of a bill from the same Committee on the Judiciary, after a speech in favor of the bill, and after the reading of the report intended to recommend the passage of the bill, the House sustained the demand for the previous question, and passed, not only without reference but without discussion, a bill, which I undertake to say, unless I am grossly deceived in my estimate of the character of the bill, could have scarcely passed this House if it had been the subject even of a brief discussion. The effort now made is not so bad as that. There has been as yet no demand for the previous question. But may I not well warn the House against the evils of this hasty and mischievous legislation, when I remind them, that if they yield to such applications as this they may do a second time what I trust has been done only once before, and that is, to introduce and pass, without reference or debate, a private bill of questionable character; a bill designed, as it was said, to correct errors in a law passed at the last session of Congress, which law was itself passed without debate or reference, and against the protest of gentlemen who desired an opportunity of examining into the merits of the bill, if it had any.

A MEMBER. What bill was it?

Mr. MILLSON. A bill for the relief of Benjamin S. Roberts. We may, if we are not cautious, do the same thing again. I trust, then, that the House will retrace its steps, and go back to the precedent they themselves established at the commencement of the session. I have no object or interest in opposing any of these bills. I do not know that I have any objection to the bill now under consideration, but I think that we all have a common interest in protecting the credit of Congressional legislation, and that we should in no instance, except in a matter of extreme necessity, or a matter of humanity, such as that brought to the notice of the House yesterday by the report of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, ever depart from the good, wholesome, and salutary rule of taking time to deliberate upon all questions that require our attention.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. If the gentleman will allow me, I desire to ask him if this bill should be referred to a committee, and should be postponed, as in all probability it would be, until next July, August, or September, if he would ever read the bill at all?

Mr. MILLSON. The inquiry involves the necessity for an egotistical observation; but I can assure the gentleman that I am not unmindful, I trust, of the obligations devolving upon me in that respect, and I generally take such opportunities as I can to become in some degree informed of the character of the measures upon which I am required to vote.

Mr. ORR. I concur with the gentleman from Virginia, and I desire to call his attention to an act passed at the last session of Congress, granting to this same company "the right of way, and a sufficiency of lands to construct a road," provided that the location of said road through the lands should be made subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and provided the said location could be made without injury to the public interests.

I would like to understand why there is any necessity for repealing this law. I see that the bill reported by the committee propose that the location should be left to the discretion of the commanding officer at Jefferson barracks, and not to that of the Secretary of War, as the act of the last session of Congress provides.

Mr. MILLSON. It was no part of my purpose to enter into a discussion of the merits of this bill; but being, as I was, a member of the last Congress, and knowing that nearly all the obstructions to the dispatch of business in that Congress proceeded from this very practice of forcing the consideration of bills upon the mere presentation of reports of committees, without further examination and deliberation, I am the more opposed to it now, and more desirous now to place an adequate check upon it. Why, the gentleman from Tennessee recollects that during the last Congress the Committee on Public Lands were before the House making reports for some three or four months.

A MEMBER. Six months.

Mr. MILLSON. A gentleman says six months. Now, why did that committee occupy the attention of the House for six months?

Mr. STANTON. I will tell the gentleman, if he will allow me to answer the question.

Not now. I will first answer it myself. Why was it, I say, that no other committee of this House was called for reports during a period of four, five, or six months—three or four months according to my recollection—but, as other gentlemen tell me, six months? Why was it that it was not in order even to call the Committee on Ways and Means during that whole period to report important bills necessary to carry on the Government?

The reason was, that there had been a large number of bills and petitions referred to that committee; and whenever a report was made by them, anxious as they were to secure an early consideration for the business under their charge, the motion was invariably made to put the bill upon its passage.

Mr. HENN, (interrupting.) If the gentleman will look at the Calendar of the last Congress, he will find that the first ten or twelve bills reported by the Committee on Public Lands were referred to the Committee of the Whole without any attempt upon the part of that committee to put them upon their passage. I make this statement for the purpose of setting the gentleman right.

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman surely did not understand me as saying that every individual bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands was put upon its passage as soon as reported.

Mr. HENN. The gentleman said they invariably made that motion.

Mr. MILLSON. My object was to show that the reason why the Committee on Public Lands kept the attention of the House for some six months was, that the general course, perhaps not the invariable one, taken by them when they reported bills to the House, was to put them on their passage at once, instead of having them referred to the Committee of the Whole to take their regular places upon the Calendar.

A MEMBER. Several of them were referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLSON. That is true; but many of them were referred against the remonstrances of the committee. In some instances, four, five, or six days were spent in discussing the question of reference. If the reference was made, then the discussion would have all to be gone over again when the bill came up in its order; and thus the time of the House was wasted.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him for a single moment, I will call the attention of the House to a cause for the delay in the transaction of its business, behind the one to which he has made reference.

Nobody regretted more than I did the obstructions in the transaction of the business of the House during the last Congress. Nobody regretted more than I did the inability of other committees to report to the House; but I would suggest that the original cause which led to the practice of putting bills upon their passage as soon as reported was, that if bills were referred to the Committee of the Whole to take their regular place upon the Calendar, it was well known that they would slumber there forever. Whatever may be the rules of the House upon the subject, every one knows that in practice it has been found utterly impossible to get up bills upon the Calendar there, unless it be those of overshadowing importance—something like the homestead bill.

In my opinion, in reference to bills involving no great important principle, that when they have been referred to standing committees of the House, fairly examined and considered by them, and reported to the House, it is, perhaps, the best way to put them upon their passage without referring them to the Committee of the Whole. If the committee reporting them have fairly examined them, and are able fully to explain them, the House may very safely trust itself to pass bills thus reported.

Mr. MILLSON. I understand the gentleman to ask why it was that bills upon the Calendar in Committee of the Whole were not taken up? It was because the time of the House was wasted in the discussion of bills which the Committee on Public Lands were endeavoring to put upon their passage. The time of the House was occupied in this manner, and there was no opportunity to consider bills which had already been referred to the Committee of the Whole. An interest had grown up in the House in the consideration of bills subsequently reported; and those desiring the passage of such bills were themselves unwilling to go into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of taking up bills sent there at an early period of the session.

Let us see what is the operation of this thing. A meritorious bill, one that requires but slight discussion before the committee, the friends of which invite investigation, is committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for those interested in the passage of the bill court inquiry; they do not wish to stifle discussion; they know the bill has merits, and they themselves ask that it shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Some six, eight, ten, or twelve months afterward, other bills are presented to Congress, later in time and less in merit. It is felt that they will not so well stand the test of investigation. Efforts are made to put them on their passage before there can have been opportunity afforded for discussing their merits; and the result is, that these bills are either passed or rejected; and those meritorious bills, the friends of which have referred them to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union at the commencement of the session, because they challenged investigation, are not reached at all.

Let all bills, without distinction, be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or to a Committee of the Whole House, as was suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Mace] at the commencement of the session. I trust that provision will be embodied in the rules of the House, and it certainly will be in the report of the Select Committee on Rules, if a sufficient number of the other members of that committee will sustain me in doing so. If that were done, then it would be the interest of every member to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up the bills in their order, and consider them freely and fully as they may be considered in that committee.

Mr. HENN, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Virginia has made a charge against the Committee on Public Lands of the last Congress.

Mr. MILLSON. I have made no charge against that committee.

Mr. HENN. The charge has been made here several times, and I desire now to correct it by historical facts. I will, therefore, ask the gentleman, in order to correct him, whether a majority of the bills reported during the last Congress by the Committee on Public Lands were not put upon their passage by members not on the Committee on Public Lands, but by the friends or introducers of the bills? I wish, also, to ask the gentleman if a majority of the time consumed by that committee in reporting bills was not occupied by a factious minority in calling the yeas and nays upon those bills?

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman has mistaken me in one or two respects.

Mr. HENN. I wish it to be understood that I am not against the proposition which the gentleman lays down. I am myself in favor of bills taking their regular course.

Mr. MILLSON. I wish the gentleman from Iowa, who was, perhaps, a member of the Committee on Public Lands of the last Congress, to understand that I am not making charges, but pointing out evils and their remedies, and referring to this subject historically.

Mr. HENN. I wished merely to correct the gentleman about the course of that committee.

Mr. MILLSON. I never meant to impute blame to the Committee on Public Lands, who were naturally anxious that their bills should be considered. I did not impute blame to anybody. I was tracing results from their legitimate causes, and stating that by whomsoever the motions were submitted, by whomsoever the attempts were made, certain it is that the effect was not less injurious; and that was, that the Committee on Public Lands held possession of this House for some six months, to the obstruction of all other business, and that other committees who had reports to make, could at no time, without a violation of the rules of order, make their reports.

I, myself, was prevented from making a great many reports from the committee of which I was a member, and which I had in my desk ready to report.

In concluding these desultory remarks, allow me to say, that when I rose I had no intention to consume the time of the House for more than a very few minutes; and if I have displayed any earnestness on this subject at this time, it has been because I felt, as every member should feel, concern for the honor of the House, for the credit of our legislation, and because I desire that the House shall now return to a practice which all admit to be a wholesome one; even those who depart from it feel a sort of necessity to excuse themselves, by alleging that while the general principle is undoubtedly correct, the immediate circumstances of their own particular case should make it an exception from it.

Mr. CARUTHERS. I do not design, Mr. Speaker, to go into any argument in regard to the general propriety of referring bills in their regular order. I do desire, however, the consent of the House to state the reasons that, while recognizing this general principle of propriety in acting upon business in regular order, the bill now under consideration ought to be immediately put on its passage. It proposes nothing new. An act, passed at the last session of Congress, granted to this railroad company the right of way as proposed in the bill which I have this morning reported. It is in the exact language of that act. We can, therefore, be in no danger of hasty legislation on the subject. The attention of the House has been called to it heretofore. There was in the bill which was passed at the last session the following proviso:

"The said location shall be made without injury to the public interest, in the opinion of the said Secretary of War."

The Secretary of War construed that proviso that he could not look to any interest of the community; that he could not look to the public benefit which might accrue from the construction of the road; that he was bound strictly by the terms of the act, and to consider merely what injury was to be done to the public property through which the road was to pass. The following is the Secretary's construction in his own words, in a letter to T. S. O'Sullivan, at New York:

"As you have called my attention to the benefits to be derived by the community from the construction of the road, and the necessity to its success, of securing the route proposed, it seems proper to remind you that such circumstances cannot affect the question referred by the act for the decision of this Department; and that with the most favorable disposition to the success of this, and every other enterprise calculated to advance the commercial prosperity of the country, I am precluded from taking into view the advantage to individuals or companies by the terms of the simple and narrow question propounded by the act, whether any injury will result to the public interests."

Acting, Mr. Speaker, under this construction, which was, at all events, a strict one, but with which construction I have now no desire of quarrelling, he imposed upon this Iron Mountain Company such restrictions as made this grant of right of way of no possible use to them. The Iron Mountain Company, when this act was passed by Congress, supposing a liberal construction would be given to it, placed the Iron Mountain road under contract through the public grounds. And, after so placing it under contract through that region, the Secretary of War imposed conditions on it which rendered the grant nugatory, and which absolutely prohibited them—or, in effect, at least, prohibited them—from going through these public lands.

The company then come and ask from Congress the meaning of these provisions, and the attention of the House being directed to the provisions of this bill, I think they will find that in these provisions the rights and interests of the Government have been most studiously guarded and protected.

We ask for no appropriations. We only ask for the right of way—sixty feet through these grounds. On examining this subject, you will find that the road, according to its present line, runs almost immediately on the banks of the Mississippi river; that all the public buildings are situated so far back from the river that no possible injury can be done, either to the arsenal, the magazine, or the Jefferson barracks. For, to provide still further against any possible injury, one of the provisions of this bill is, that this company shall erect, at its own expense, a strong wire, or other substantial fence, between the line of road and the public grounds.

The bill provides, further, that the company shall open and construct large iron gates to give as many passages to the river as the commanding officer at Jefferson barracks shall think proper. It provides still further, that this company is to be responsible for all public losses by collision, or other injuries, done by the passage of the road through these public grounds.

Now, I desire to state, that when these conditions were imposed by the Secretary of War, they were so onerous and oppressive on the company that the company went to work, through its engineer, and endeavored to find some other outlet for the St. Louis road to the Iron Mountain road. That engineer examined most carefully all the ground through which the road could possibly go, in order to avoid running through these public grounds. The result of this examination was, that the company found they could get no outlet for the road from the city of St. Louis to the Iron Mountain without the increase of twenty-one miles in distance, and without a much more burdensome and heavier grade. Mark me: the distance from St. Louis city to the Iron Mountain is only about eighty miles. Here, in giving the distance as eighty miles, you have increased the distance of the road, if not allowed to go through the public grounds, twenty-one miles.

Still more: the grade which would have to be adopted, if the line ran this twenty-one miles further, is still heavier, according to the report of the engineer. I shall read, for the satisfaction of the House, that portion of his report which applies to this point:

"After full surveys of every possible route, (says Mr. O'Sullivan, the engineer,) it is conclusively shown that the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad, if built at all, must follow the west bank of the river for about twenty miles south of that city; and, therefore, that it must pass through the lands fronting on the river occupied by establishments referred to in law. Immediately westward from the city bank the country rises so much as to be impracticable for the work along any route that should clear those lands in their rear. If the right of way is not conceded, the Iron Mountain is inaccessible from St. Louis, except at the cost of about twenty-one miles increase in distance, and a material increase in grades."

This right of way being so obstructed by the construction put upon the bill by the Secretary of War, the road was, as I remarked, put under contract at the time this construction was made.

It was desirous, of course, to commence the building of this road to the city of St. Louis. The first section of the road through these public grounds was placed under contract.

When this construction of the proviso, which I now ask the House to repeal, was made by the Secretary, the company abandoned the contracts which they had before made. They disbanded the forces which they had at that point, and reorganized them, and placed them upon other sections of the road, twenty or thirty miles distant from St. Louis.

The necessity for the immediate passage of this act, and the reason why I object to its going upon the Calendar, and taking its regular course with other bills, is the all-importance, to this enterprise, that they should commence at the city of St. Louis. They are desirous of commencing now, and are waiting at this moment for the favorable and kind action of Congress upon this proposition. They desire, I say, to commence the work now. If you compel them to build twenty-one miles more of road, they may be compelled to abandon the whole enterprise. I shall not detain the House with a recital of the general benefits of that enterprise to the whole community; of its being the connecting link between St. Louis and New Orleans, and a connecting link in the great chain of roads uniting the North with the Gulf. I shall detain the House with this matter only so far as to state that it is all-important that this road shall be built as a connecting link, and to state that this connecting link is jeopardized by the imposition of this burden of building twenty-one miles more of road, and that of a much heavier grade.

When, therefore, gentlemen come to see how sedulously the committee have guarded the interests of the public grounds at St. Louis, and know that the committee unanimously recommended the bill to the House, and see the absolute necessity of the construction of the road through the public grounds at St. Louis, they will admit that this is a case, not involving any new principles of legislation, not asking an appropriation upon the part of the Government, but that it simply asks the Government to give to a part of its citizens a right of way, of sixty feet, through these Government lands.

Mr. ORR, (interrupting.) Mr. Speaker, I should be glad if the gentleman from Missouri would state what are the restrictions which the Secretary of War imposed upon the company. If the public grounds and property were likely to be injured, he should state what that injury is, and what restrictions the Secretary thought necessary, in his estimation, to impose, in order to counteract that injury.

Mr. CARUTHERS. I will say, in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from South Carolina, that there were six restrictions imposed. The first of which—already complied with in making the final location—was this: That the road through the arsenal grounds should be located one hundred feet further east than the line on the map submitted. I say, with that the company has complied, and with that the bill which I reported this morning complies. The bill is drawn in obedience with the requirements of the Secretary of War, and the road is located one hundred feet further east.

The second restriction was, that the company was required to place a stone wall, of such height as the commanding officer shall designate, between the road and the grounds occupied for military purposes, with suitable iron gates and ways, and a strong wire fence between the road and the water, with suitable iron gates and crossing places—the number of gates not to exceed four at Jefferson barracks, one at the magazine, and one at the arsenal. The points to be selected by the commanding officers thereof, but the Government to have the right to open as many ways across the railroad to the routes as the circumstances of the service may require, but without expense to the company. The road from the arsenal to the water to be passed over by a bridge in such manner as to cause no obstructions.

3d. The commanding officer's house, and any other houses it may be necessary to remove in consequence of the road passing through the public grounds, to be taken down and removed to sites designated by the commanding officer, and put up at the expense of the company.

4th. The company to keep the gates, fences, and crossing-places in repair as long as they retain the right of way for the road; and to keep, at all times, watchmen, or other suitable persons, to give timely notice of the approach of trains.

5th. That the company shall be responsible for all losses which may be sustained by the public, either by the destruction of public property, or by collision with the trains in passing over the several crossing-places.

6th. Horse-power only to be used in passing through the public grounds.

It is this sixth condition which falls with such crushing weight upon the company, and to be relieved from, mainly, that this bill is reported. The Secretary requires, under his strict construction of the act to which I have called the attention of the House, that horse-power only shall be used; and in the bill I have reported, I provide that in all cases where powder is to be received or shipped at the magazine such power only should be used. I will state that the magazine building is seven hundred feet from this line of road, and, consequently, that it would be in no danger from the sparks of the cars. The only possible danger would be in receiving and shipping powder from the magazine; but this, I think, is amply provided for in the bill, by requiring that horse-power only should be then used.

Mr. BISSELL. I desire to say a single word upon this subject. It is pretty well known, by those who care anything about it, that I am disposed to be liberal upon this occasion, and upon all similar occasions, where companies are engaged in making important public improvements. I was not in the Hall when this bill was presented, but I understand that it came from the Committee on Public Lands. This proposition does not at all relate to public lands, or anything connected with public lands. It is an application to run a railroad through lands which have been appropriated long ago for similar purposes, in or near the city of St. Louis. It seems to me that this subject is a proper one for the Military Committee, and I rise merely for the purpose of suggesting to the gentleman from St. Louis, [Mr. CARUTHERS,] without the slightest disposition to be unfair, unreasonable, or illiberal to the railroad company in this case, whether we had not better refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs?

I think there are many difficulties involved in this matter which perhaps might be obviated by the Military Committee in the course of a single session. And I must confess that the fact of this bill coming here from the Committee on Public Lands, with a favorable recommendation, weighs not a straw with me in its favor. I am at a loss to know how the matter ever went before that committee. It relates to public grounds which long ago were appropriated to military purposes, and they have nothing at all to do with the legitimate business of the Committee on Public Lands. I merely desire, however, to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CARUTHERS] that he should move to refer the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COBB, (interrupting.) I would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that it would be better for him to make the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands. If he does not, some gentleman will get the floor directly, upon the expiration of the morning hour, and move to go to the business upon the Speaker's table; which will perhaps throw his business where he will not find it again.

Mr. BISSELL. I wish to remark again for the purpose of removing any impression to the contrary that may have arisen, that I am favorably disposed towards accomplishing the object desired by this railroad company; but I want the bill to come from the committee to which it should properly have been referred. With the consent of the gentleman, I will move to commit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. A motion is already pending to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BISSELL. I am aware of that. I proposed to make the motion as an amendment, to refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs; but I will allow the gentleman from Missouri to make any motion of reference he pleases.

Mr. HOUSTON. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama cannot take the floor from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CARUTHERS] for that purpose.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I move to go to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. CARUTHERS. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to allow me for a single moment. I have received the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] kindly, and have no objection to adopt it. I will therefore withdraw the motion to put the bill upon its passage, and move that the Committee on Public Lands may be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be committed to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to that disposition of the bill; and if it can be disposed of at once, I will withdraw the motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. There is also a motion pending to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think, then, I had better insist upon my motion to go to the business on the Speaker's table.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER accordingly laid before the House a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting a statement in reference to the marine hospital fund for the relief of sick and disabled seamen in the ports of the United States; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC PRINTING.

The next business in order was the consideration of the joint resolution authorizing an increase of the force in the office of the Superintendent of the Public Printing; which was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. Is it in order to make a motion to lay that bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. Then I make that motion.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" and "Read the bill first!"]

Mr. CHURCHWELL. Well, I have no objection that the bill shall be referred to a committee. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move that the bill be referred to the House Committee on Printing.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. EWING. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated that when the committee last rose, it had under consideration House bill (No. 49) "to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1854," and that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PERKINS] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the gentleman from Louisiana to let me say one word.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield the floor to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. HOUSTON. The House the other day adopted a resolution closing debate on the President's message; the time for that debate is now running, and the debate must close on Thursday next. I therefore desire to make a motion, which I wanted my colleague [Mr. SMITH] to allow me or make yesterday, and which I think it fair and just to the House to make; and that is, to lay aside this bill, and take up the President's message, and let the debate go on upon that. I therefore hope the gentleman who is entitled to the floor will allow me to submit that motion.

Mr. PERKINS. I acquiesce in that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the deficiency bill was thereupon laid aside.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The committee then took up for consideration the President's annual message, and the resolutions of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hous-ton] to refer the same.

The CHAIRMAN stated that upon that question the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Keitt] was entitled to the floor.

TONNAGE DUTIES.

Mr. KEITT, having the floor, addressed the committee. He denied that his friend [Mr. Smith] from Alabama had yesterday represented the political feeling of his State. After a lengthy exordium, Mr. K. said that he proposed to ask the attention of the committee while he referred to that part of the President's message which relates to tonnage duties. He proposed to divide the subject into two parts—first, its constitutionality; secondly, its expediency.

After discussing the question of the constitutionality of tonnage duties, he proposed, under the head of "expediency," to consider the four following propositions:

First, that tonnage duties in this connection will secure economy in levying taxes;

Secondly, that they will secure economy in collecting taxes;

Thirdly, the successful application of the fund; and Fourthly, that it would restore the Government to its original republican simplicity.

On this last head he said that money, in a Republic, was the foundation of despotism; and that the more the monetary resources of a Republic were reduced the nearer would it be restored to its original design and simplicity.

Up to the present time the idea had been, that Government was the means, and men the end. But we had incorporated into our Government the idea that men were the end, and Government the means. Yet by the course we were now pursuing, we were reversing this idea. He called upon the West, now treading, with giant steps, the paths of greatness, to follow the lead of her distinguished Senator, to offer up her jealousies upon the altar of constitutional liberty. He called on the North, wallowing in wealth, to turn from the flesh-pots of Egypt, and defend constitutional liberty. He called upon the South to rally again under the old Republican flag, and fight for its few remaining shreds.

[His speech, withheld for revision, will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. HUGHES, of New York, next addressed the committee on the difficulties existing in the Democratic party in the State of New York. It would be idle for him to deny that in 1848, in the State of New York, the Democratic party was split in twain. There being two parties, two conventions were called, at Rome; one assembled in the Presbyterian and the other in the Baptist church.

He related the action of these conventions, and charged the "Hards" with seeking to institute a coalition with the Free Soilers. He also detailed the action of the two parties in the subsequent election, and charged that in consequence of the coalition proposed by the "Hards" the Soft party had lost the election of all their candidates save one.

The split in New York was a mere split for spoils, and he was surprised that his friends—the Hards—should lend themselves to such "base uses." Thus he had shown, not only the action, but, as he thought, the motive of the party. He was for a union of the whole party, without which, their enemies would prevail against them.

He had endeavored to give the history of the Hards and Softs; he had endeavored also to show that the Hards sought a coalition; and if there was one doctrine of law more than another which the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cutting,] should adhere to, it was the doctrine of estoppel.

He thought that the gentleman was estopped from saying a single word on this subject of coalitions. He hoped that this subject might now be dropped—that New York might be allowed to settle her own difficulties in her own way. He stood upon the Baltimore platform, and on that platform he meant to stand, come what might.

[Mr. HUGHES's speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to discuss the question before the committee, nor am I disposed to detain it with any lengthy remarks.

Mr. CUTTING. May I be permitted to ask the gentleman whether he will yield me a few minutes of his time for personal explanation?

Mr. SEWARD. I call the gentleman to order. He has been heard once, and I object to his taking the floor when other gentlemen desire to get possession of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York was heard on the deficiency bill, but not on the President's message; and if he obtains the floor he will be entitled to speak on the latter subject. The floor, however, has been assigned to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The Chair understands that the gentleman has yielded it temporarily to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. He cannot do it. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania yields the floor at all he must do it unconditionally.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to say a word by way of explanation. I understand that a friend of mine from New York [Mr. Wheeler] takes to heart what I said in regard to his taking the floor so frequently. I meant no disparagement to him. My remarks have been intended in kindness throughout. I trust that no gentleman will consider them to be otherwise.

Mr. GROW. I simply wish to state that I do not yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cutting] to make a lengthy speech. I cannot afford to give him more than ten minutes of my time.

Mr. JONES. I submit to the Chair whether a gentleman can obtain the floor and then transfer it to another to make a speech?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. JONES. Then I insist on the enforcement of the rules.

Mr. CUTTING. One word. There is no member of this committee who is less anxious than I am to obtrude myself upon the time or the attention of its members; but it cannot, I think, have failed to strike gentlemen that there has been this morning a prepared and designed personal attack upon myself, with a view to affecting and impairing the influence of my accidentally becoming the champion of the Democratic party of the State of New York, by imputing to me the same errors and the same political offenses that I had been inveighing against the day before.

Sir, I desire, inasmuch as these words fell warmly on the ears—at once—in the moment—on the spot—at the time—to give those explanations, which are personal to myself, with a view to see whether the charges which have been made were candid—were frank; and whether, when they charge me, as a member of two conventions, with any sins—if sins were committed by either of these bodies—it would not have been more frank to have stated what were the courses which I personally adopted in relation to each and every of these measures, instead of charging upon me that which was done by the body.

Is the Speaker of this House, is the chairman of this committee, is every member of this body to be made responsible for every act of the body, even though he votes for or against the particular measure? And what do you think of the sincerity of him who, in a political controversy, or contest, wishes to charge on the Presiding Officer of this House or of this committee, or on any member of this committee, the sins of legislation which had been committed—if you please—by the majority against his wishes.

Now, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] chooses to yield me the floor, I will proceed first with an explanation personal to myself; and when I have got through with that which is personal to me, if the gentleman then desires to resume his place on the floor, I shall cheerfully yield to him with much pleasure, and with much obligation for the favor conferred. But I will not promise to do it in any time less than is necessary for the purpose of putting myself right. I mean either to do that, or else leave the committee to judge between the gentleman and myself. When I have done that, and resumed the floor, I shall ask the favor of this committee to address it again; because the observations which came from me a day or two since were made in answer to a question put to me by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Smith,] who had the floor. I came before the committee then as merely responding to that inquiry, and not to make a set speech for the purpose of reviewing this quarrel.

Now, understanding that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] is indulgent enough to say that I may—as respects, at all events, that which is personal—explain, I will proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to understand if the gentleman from Pennsylvania yields the floor to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GROW. I have no objection to yield the floor to the gentleman from New York for the purpose he has specified.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand this, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania actually yields the floor? The Chair was subject to embarrassment yesterday and the day before in consequence of members yielding in this way, as I understood the facts in a different sense to those members. I understood, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cutting] made his speech yesterday, that he was occupying the time on his own account. And now, I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to have resigned the floor without condition to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GROW. I do not propose to yield the floor absolutely. What I have to say I wish to say to-day. But if the gentleman [Mr. Cutting] will allow me to say what I wish, he can then make his remarks. It will not take me more than ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. CUTTING. I should be very sorry to press the matter further. A favor extended gracefully is one which I always respond to willingly; but if it is to be thus extended with restrictions, I prefer to remain for the present under the embarrassments which, perhaps, until I have an opportunity to reply, may and ought to rest on me. I accept nothing which comes reluctantly.

Mr. GROW. It does not come reluctantly. I propose to the gentleman from New York to give him a certain length of time to make any personal explanations he may think proper. But he has given notice to this committee that he shall seek the floor on some other occasion; and why should he intrude on every man's time? I made what I considered to be a liberal offer. I was willing to allow the gentleman to make any personal explanation. I had no objection to his doing so. But I cannot permit him to go on making a speech on this controversy in the mean time, which would throw me over till to-morrow, when I have no desire to speak. If I speak at all, I desire to speak to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield the floor to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GROW. I would be very happy, Mr. Chairman, to accommodate the gentleman; but as my attempt to be accommodating was not appreciated and accepted, I must therefore take my time.

I do not propose to discuss the subject before this committee, nor to make a political speech; nor would I make any remarks now, but for a reflection which was cast upon the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and upon her officers, in the Senate of the United States yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The Chair would inform the gentleman that it is not in order to refer, in his remarks, to any matter pending before the Senate.

Mr. GROW. Then I do not propose to refer to a matter pending before the Senate, but will confine myself to a statement of facts, and to vindicate history. It has not been thought proper by the delegation from Pennsylvania here to notice the newspaper remarks and charges which have been made against the Executive and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania on this subject, because it is one with which the General Government has nothing to do, and over which she has no control. I read these remarks—

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will suspend until the question of order is decided.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask the Chair if it is proper in debate in the House of Representatives in Committee of the Whole, to refer to a debate which has been had in the Senate, and to read a part of that debate in a gentleman's speech?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that it is not; but the Chair would say, that he does not know what the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to read.

Mr. GROW. I propose to read a statement from a paper.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is not in order to refer to matters which have transpired in the other wing of the Capitol, and he hopes, therefore, if the gentleman proceeds with his remarks, that he will confine himself to those which are strictly in order.

Mr. GROW. It comes with bad grace—

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, (interrupting.) I call the gentleman from Pennsylvania to order.

Mr. GROW. I will obviate all questions of order by making statements on my own authority, and referring to the action of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is in order.

Mr. GROW. It is not long since that a memorial was presented here, by the citizens of Ohio, or Indiana, complaining of the State of Pennsylvania for want of fidelity to the laws and Constitution of the Union, and of comity to her sister States. And since then her citizens have been represented in hostility to the General Government, disobeying the decrees of the Federal courts, imprisoning the marshals sent to execute the process of the courts, burning the bridges of the railroad company, tearing up their railroads for some three or four weeks in succession, showing a disposition to interrupt all communication between the East and West across that great thoroughfare; and, finally, that her Executive is aiding and abetting mobs and rioters. That passengers have been subjected to great inconvenience, and business men to unnecessary delay and expense; by reason of the difficulties at Erie, is not the question in controversy, but who is in fault for it, and where ought the blame to rest?

Sir, some years since the State of Pennsylvania constructed a canal from Franklin, along French creek, a distance of eighteen and a half miles, to French Creek aqueduct, which was subsequently, by act of the Legislature, transferred to a company, with authority to build a railroad between Pittsburg and the harbor of Erie; but that road was never built, nor any part of it; but the company built a road from the Ohio State line to the city of Erie, two points separate and distinct from those fixed in their charter, and over an entirely different route. And this is the road that makes the connection between Erie and Ohio, and is of the same gauge as the Ohio roads. The construction of this road the supreme court of Pennsylvania decided, more than a year ago, was without legal authority, and its use since that time could, therefore, have been entirely restrained by the Commonwealth; and it is now subject to such conditions and restrictions as the Legislature think proper to impose.

The connection between Erie and the State of New York, is made by what is called the Erie and Northeast Railroad, the termini of which was fixed by its charter at the State line and the borough of Erie, and one of the conditions of its incorporation was, that "the said railroad shall be so constructed as not to impede or obstruct the free use of any public road, street, lane, or bridge." And at the time of building said road, the company applied to the city authorities for permission to lay their track within the limits of the city, so as to connect with the Franklin Canal Company's roads. That permission, as I understand, was granted with the express condition that it might be revoked at any time by the city authorities. At the time of putting down the track of this road it was laid at Harbor Creek, some eighty or ninety rods along a public highway, including the bridge over said creek, and that, too, under a protest of the supervisors of the township. But the track, as originally laid, remained unmolested till the company commenced taking it up to change the gauge, and then they were notified by the township authorities, that if they took it up they would not be permitted to lay it again on the public highway.

And here is one point of conflict between the citizens of Harbor creek township and the Northeast Railroad Company; and the other is within the corporate limits of the city of Erie, where the railroad company never had any authority from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to lay down a track. But whatever differences of opinion there may be as to the right of the railroad company, under their charter, to cross the township bridge at Harbor Creek, and run along the public highway, that doubt, it seems to me, must end at the eastern line of the original limits of the borough of Erie. From that point to the State line of Ohio the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has never granted any franchise for the construction of a railroad. Between these points, then, the citizens of Erie are but resisting encroachments attempted upon their rights as citizens, and as members of a municipal government, by an associated company acting without any legal franchise. And though they may be guilty of some excesses in vindicating their rights, are they, or the party that attempts the encroachments, most to blame? Had these companies been content to remain quiet till the meeting of the Legislature, and then sought there for legal authority before acting, there would have been no disturbance at Erie, and travel and trade would have proceeded as heretofore, unmolested. But why should the public complain that there should be a break of gauge at Erie instead of Buffalo; for it must, of necessity, be at one place or the other. The railroad gauge of Ohio is four feet ten inches; of New York, six feet and four feet eight and a half inches; and the Pennsylvania gauge is four feet eight and a half inches. It is, therefore, impossible to pass from the northwest, through either New York or Pennsylvania, to the Atlantic sea-board, without a change of gauge.

And is there any reason why the citizens of Erie or the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania should not avail themselves of the commercial advantages of their local and geographical position, especially when they can do it without any obstruction of commerce or trade, and without injury to any other section of the Union? How is trade and travel obstructed any more by a change of gauge at Erie than at Buffalo, or any other point between the inland States and the sea-board? The gauges which the different States have selected for themselves, without any action on the part of Pennsylvania, has made such change necessary. And all that Pennsylvania or any of her citizens desire, is the simple enjoyment of the advantages of her position. She has no disposition to tax trade and commerce passing through her limits, nor to obstruct its cheap and speedy transit.

All companies now acting under her franchises can lay such tracks as they think proper, and of any gauge. She simply says to Ohio and New York, you have each free permission to bring your own gauges within our limits, and join them either at Erie or at any point west of that. This is the declaration of her Executive—this is the law of her statute-book. By this arrangement, all her rights and interests in her improvements already constructed, and those in course of construction, are secured, and that, too, without any injury to the trade of her sister States, or any obstruction to their intercourse. And because she is disposed to avail herself of the commercial advantages of her position when she can do it without injury to any other section, a prejudice is attempted to be created against her citizens, and even the lawmakers of the country talk of withholding the rights due her as a member of this Confederacy. While Pennsylvania is loyal to the Constitution and laws of the Union, and faithful to her sister States, she is equally loyal and faithful to herself. And because her Executive, who is charged with the maintenance of her rights and her interests, is disposed to protect both, as well as the rights of the citizen, against unjust encroachments by companies acting without legal franchise, he is made the subject of misrepresentation and reproach.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I reside in the West, and I would like to ask the gentleman a few questions.

Mr. GROW. It would give me pleasure to oblige the gentleman from Illinois, but after the experience I have just had in attempting to oblige a friend I cannot yield. Sir, what difference can it make to the West, and how is her interests affected, whether the change of railroad gauge be at Erie or Buffalo? So far as any local interests are concerned this is simply a controversy between Erie and Buffalo, in which the trade of the great West in its transit to the sea-board has no interest, save as it is at present obstructed by these difficulties.

But is the Executive of Pennsylvania, and the citizens of Erie the party in blame for their existence, as they conceive they have been resisting only illegal encroachments and exactions by unauthorized companies? Every decree of the State courts has been faithfully observed; and instead of confining this controversy to the State courts it was taken into the district court of the United States by the railroad company; and the citizens of Erie, acting under legal advice, disregarded its decrees for want of jurisdiction. And the court, when that question is fully argued, instead of deciding it, reserves the opinion, and imprisons the citizens. And now one complaint against the Commonwealth is, that she imprisons the marshals and officers of the Federal court. Sir, she has the right, not only to imprison the marshals, but the judges, when they act without the authority of law. The proceeding complained of is simply to test that question. It is a question of conflict between State and Federal jurisdiction. And from the time this controversy went into the district court of the United States it was taken out of the hands of the Executive and of the State courts.

No application has been made to them save in one instance, and in that case the decree of the court was enforced by State authority, and faithfully observed by the citizens; and in no case has the Governor given encouragement to riots or breaches of the peace.

Such are, in brief, some of the circumstances of the controversy between the citizens of Erie and the corporations to which I have referred. It is a controversy between the rights of the citizens and the privileges of a municipality and corporations acting without legal franchises.

I have taken this occasion, sir, to make these remarks, in order to correct the misstatement of facts which is calculated to do injustice to the executive and judicial officers of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and injury to her citizens.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, obtained the floor.

Mr. DEAN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a simple statement?

Mr. SMITH. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. DEAN. I am unwilling the House should adjourn before a distinct answer is given to the question put to my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] in reference to the course the friends of the Administration in New York will pursue relative to Nebraska. I understand the position they occupy is this, (I speak only from my own observation): they regard the compromise of 1850 as a full and final settlement of the slavery agitation in Congress, and they are willing that the principles of that compromise shall be applied to any new Territory that shall be organized, whether it be Nebraska, Cuba, or Sonora.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, then resumed the floor.

Several MEMBERS appealed to him to yield it for a motion to be made to rise.

Mr. SMITH. I am not going to detain the committee more than a minute. I desire only to say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS] has made such an appeal to me that, under the circumstances, I cannot refuse to yield him the floor, and take my chance of obtaining it again hereafter.

Mr. CUTTING here rose, and obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH. But as the hour is late, I ask the gentleman to give way for a motion to rise.

[Cries of "No, no!" "Go on!" and much confusion.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield the floor for that purpose?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. Then, with my colleague's permission, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to,

And the committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman [Mr. ORR] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the annual message of the President of the United States, and the resolutions of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston,] proposing to refer the same, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BRIDGES moved that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to,
And thereupon the House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 20, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I would ask if the joint resolution from the Senate, to increase the force in the office of the Superintendent of Public Printing, is not the first business in order this morning?

The SPEAKER. It is not, because it is a public bill, and this is private bill day.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The following private bills from the Senate were taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by their respective titles, and severally referred, as indicated below:

A bill confirming certain land claims in Louisiana, in the Bastrop grant. Referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

An act for the relief of Joseph Gideon. Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

An act for the relief of N. K. Warrington and C. St. John Chubb, executors of Captain Lewis Warrington and others. Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

An act to incorporate the Pioneer Manufacturing Company of Georgetown, District of Columbia. Referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

An act for the relief of Moses Olmstead. Referred to the Committee on Pensions.

An act for the relief of Ezra Williams. Referred to the Committee on Claims.

An act for the relief of John Fagan. Referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

An act for the relief of the heirs of Judith Worthen, deceased. Referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

An act to reimburse to the common council of New York city expenditures made for the first regiment of New York volunteers. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

An act for the relief of Rebecca Freeman. Referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

An act for the relief of Charles A. Kellett. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

An act for the relief of James Dunning. Referred to the Committee on Claims.

An act for the relief of Charles Cooper & Co. Referred to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER then stated that as there were no further private bills on the Speaker's table, the next business in order during the morning hour, as the unfinished business of yesterday, was a bill "granting the right of way to the St. Louis and Iron Mountain railroad through the arsenal, the magazine, and Jefferson barracks tracts," and that the pending motion was to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported the following bills; which received the signature of the Speaker:

An act for the relief of Lewis B. Willis, late a paymaster in the Army of the United States;

A joint resolution for the relief of Alexander P. Field, late Secretary of Wisconsin Territory, and sureties; and

A joint resolution of thanks to General John E. Wool.

IRON MOUNTAIN RAILROAD.

Mr. HAVEN. The Chair announced, a few minutes ago, that there were two motions pending in reference to the Iron Mountain railroad bill—one to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the other to refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs. I understand that the friends of the bill are willing and desirous that it should go to the latter committee, and I trust it will take that direction.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I withdraw the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, so that it may go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question was taken, and the bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. COBB. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that we could do better than resolve ourselves into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. This is objection day, and a few of the private bills may be disposed of.

A MEMBER. Not one, I am sure.

Mr. COBB. I think otherwise. Several additional bills have been reported from the committees since last objection day. I have myself no bill upon the Private Calendar; but I desire to get clear of as many of the private bills as we can. I make the motion that we resolve ourselves into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and on that motion demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and Cox were appointed.

The question was taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 67.

So the House refused to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDGERTON. Mr. Speaker, before the result was announced, I was going to call for the yeas and nays on the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair acknowledges that the gentleman from Ohio addressed the Chair before the Chair made the announcement.

Mr. EDGERTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I want to have the yeas and nays taken on the question. I would say to the House that the committee has been in session this morning till quite a late hour, and that not yet, since the commencement of this session of Congress, has there been one single day devoted to the consideration of private business. It is entirely useless, gentlemen well know, for the committee to act on matters relative to them unless they are considered by the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that as the gentleman from Ohio did not make his motion until after the announcement of the result by the Chair, he is now late in doing so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman from Ohio is in time. He certainly addressed the Chair very palpably before the Chair made the announcement. The object of the Chair is to execute the law with fairness; and it admits that the gentleman addressed the Chair in time, and that the Chair did not allow him to make his demand as it should have done.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated that when the committee last rose it had under consideration House bill No. 49, "to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1854;" and that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUTTING] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. CUTTING explained and defended the position of the "Hards" in New York, contending that they were the true Democracy.

Mr. WESTBROOK replied to his colleague, [Mr. CUTTING,] and maintained that the position of the party in New York called "Softs" were the true friends of the Administration, and the regular Union Democracy.

Mr. WALBRIDGE then took the floor, and made some remarks in regard to the history of the New York difficulties. He endeavored to prove that there had been such an interference by the Administration in the New York affairs as to create much of the difficulties now dividing the Democratic party.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York, likewise addressed the committee; and in the course of his remarks, said if the State of New York ever expected to become Democratic, they would have to vote for the friends of William L. Marcy or Daniel

S. Dickinson, or place New York forever in the hands of the Whigs. These two wings must come together, or Seward will rule the State. The "Hards" and the "Silver Grays" cannot begin to cope with Seward. Those whose heads have grown bald and gray in the New York contests will have to stand by those who have not mingled in the conflicts.

[These speeches have been submitted to the speakers for revision, and will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. WADE obtained the floor.

Mr. CUTTING. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to give a date?

Mr. WADE yielded the floor.

Mr. CUTTING. The Wilmot proviso, Mr. Chairman, was offered in Committee of the Whole on the 8th day of August, 1846. Mr. Wright's election came on in the November following; and the Journal shows where the gentleman's [Mr. WESTBROOK's] friends then stood.

Mr. WESTBROOK. That Wilmot proviso was voted down in the Democratic convention.

Mr. WADE again obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPRISONMENT OF CAPTAIN BEECHER.

A message was here received from the President of the United States, by the hands of Sidney Webster, his Private Secretary, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying documents, in pursuance of a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 3d instant.

Mr. WALKER. What does the communication relate to?

The SPEAKER. It relates to the seizure and imprisonment of Captain Beecher.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Then I move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I call for tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were, upon a division—ayes 101, noes 45.

So the motion was agreed to.

A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of Mr. MACHEN, its Chief Clerk, informing the House that they had passed a bill of this House of the following title:

H. R. No. 73. An act explanatory of an act, entitled "An act for the relief of Benjamin S. Roberts," without amendment.

And, also, that they had passed bills of the following titles:

S. No. 86. An act for the relief of J. Boyd, of Louisiana;

S. No. 100. An act for the relief of Mary C. Hamilton;

S. No. 148. An act for the relief of Zachariah Lawrence, of Ohio;

And asking the concurrence of the House therein.

Also, that the President of the United States had notified the Senate, that he did, on the 18th instant, approve and sign bills of the following titles:

S. No. 28. An act concerning district courts in California.

S. No. 65. An act to continue in force the act entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California, and for other purposes."

S. No. 81. An act changing the name of the American-built steamer Falcon, to that of Queen City.

BILLS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. HOUSTON. There are a few bills upon the Speaker's table, which I ask may be taken up and disposed of. It will not consume more than ten minutes' time.

The following bills from the Senate were then taken up, severally read a first and second time by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

"An act for the extension of the preemption privilege in the State of California." Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

"An act to relinquish to the State of Wisconsin the land reserved for salt springs therein." Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

"An act to divide the State of Ohio into two judicial districts, and to provide for holding district and circuit courts of the United States therein." Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

"An act to provide for the establishment of the marine hospital at St. Marks, in the State of Florida." Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BOOKS TO MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER. The business next in order is upon referring to the Committee on the Library the resolution "for supplying new members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives with such books of a public character as have been heretofore supplied."

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The question next in order is upon referring the joint resolution "authorizing an increase of force in the office of the Superintendent of the Public Printer" to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MURRAY. This resolution emanated from the Joint Committee on Printing. They have examined the matter, and recommend that a resolution of the kind should be offered and passed. I have a letter here from the former Superintendent of Printing, which I would like to have read for the information of the House, and which is in answer to one from the former Committee on Printing.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be printed.

Mr. MURRAY. The resolution is a very short one, and I would be glad to have it read. There is absolutely a necessity for increasing the force in the employment of the Superintendent, for the purpose of saving money to the Government. The duties of the Superintendent of the Public Printing are very onerous; have been very much increased since the office was created; and cannot be performed by his present force; and, therefore, I think there is an absolute necessity for the increase of force which he now asks.

Mr. JONES. This office was created under the impression that the Superintendent of Public Printing would discharge the duties of the office, and that it would not be necessary to employ clerks to assist him.

Soon after, a joint resolution, or bill, was brought here authorizing the appointment of two clerks, with a salary each of $1,500 per annum, and a messenger. At first it was voted down by the House, but after some time it was reconsidered, and authority was given for the proposed appointments.

Now another reason comes before us for the appointment of two more clerks, with the same salary as those already appointed, and where the thing will stop I do not know.

Mr. HOUSTON. Never.

Mr. JONES. I see in it a heavy and expensive bureau in embryo. I hope the matter may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, that the resolution may be printed, and that members may be able to know upon what they are called to vote.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to ask the gentleman one question, for the purpose of information. I wish to know whether the necessity for this increased force does not arise from the fact that we have ordered the printing of 100,000 copies of another census book, which will devolve a large amount of labor upon this officer? If these clerks are demanded in consequence of the action of this House, we are responsible for the expense incident to our own acts.

Mr. JONES. I do not know. I suppose if those books had not been ordered the demand for the clerks would have been the same. I would suggest that perhaps the cause of their appointment may be found in another direction. Certain men may have been promised office under the new Superintendent. They are doubtless anxiously waiting for them. They may incur disappointment unless these places are created for that purpose.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It may be for that reason, but it may be in consequence of the order to which I have alluded, and which I voted against. It is for that reason, I am inclined to think, the resolution should be adopted.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. With the permission of the chairman of the Printing Committee, who is entitled to the floor, I will state the reasons why this increase of force in the office of the Superintendent of Printing is required. The law which created the office of Superintendent imposed upon that officer an immense amount of labor—so much, that it was physically impossible for a single man to perform it.

In the first place, it required that he should receive from the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House, all the printing which should be ordered by either branch of Congress, and deliver it to the public printer. It also required that he should receive from the various chiefs of Departments and heads of Bureaus all the printing that might be required for their offices, and place that in the hands of the printer. It compelled him to supervise this printing as it progressed, and see that the work was executed in the style and manner provided for in the law.

Gentlemen may understand something of the immense amount of work ordered by Congress during a single term, when I inform them that the books printed by order of the last Congress amounted to one million volumes. Independent, then, of the printing for the Departments, the Superintendent, under the law of 1852, was compelled to give his personal supervision to the execution of this immense amount of books, together with all the reports, bills, and small executive documents ordered to be printed. But the law also provided that the Superintendent should make contracts for and procure all the paper which might be required for the public printing, keep samples of the same, and see that none was received which; in all respects, did not conform to the contract.

At the time the law referred to by the honorable gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] was passed, and which gave to the Superintendent two clerks, it was a matter of imperative necessity. It was utterly impossible for the Superintendent, in his own person, to discharge his duties under the law. He could not superintend the work, keep the various accounts required, and inspect and receive the work when executed, without assistance. It was a physical impossibility. Even the additional force thus granted, under the then existing circumstances, was found not to be sufficient. It is true that the labor then to be performed was nothing like as great as it is now; but notwithstanding that fact, the force was inadequate. At that time the work of the Departments had not devolved upon the Superintendent, because the contracts which had been made by them had not then expired. These contracts expired only during the late recess, and after the adjournment of the last Congress. Now, he has not only upon his hands the work ordered by the two Houses, but all that required to be done by the several Departments, and it is no inconsiderable amount, I assure you.

Besides, sir, since the increase of force in that office was granted by the late Congress additional duties have been imposed by law upon the Superintendent; duties which he was not required to perform, and which add greatly to the labors of the office. I refer to the first section of "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1854," which I now have before me. By this law, in addition to the duties I have before enumerated, it is made the duty of the Superintendent to supervise the binding of all the books which are directed to be bound, see that the work is properly executed, and receive and receipt for them from the binder. He is also required to supervise the engraving of maps, see that the work is done properly, and upon such paper as the law requires. Every gentleman knows that these maps are not executed here. Contracts are made in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, and the law is so rigorous in regard to the duty of the Superintendent, that if he executes it properly he must give his personal presence in all these places, when the work is under way, to see that the contracts are fully complied with. It is made his duty to examine every single map, and see that it is upon such paper as the contract provides. He must have a proper force here to attend to the business of his office while absent supervising the engraving and printing of the maps, or else permit the public service to go unperformed.

But, not only have these additional duties been imposed upon the Superintendent since the two clerks were allowed, but the labors of the office have been nearly doubled from another cause. The public printing then was done by a single printer, and in but one office. Now there is a printer to each House, and consequently two offices. It is easy to see that the labors of the Superintendent and his clerks are greatly increased from this cause. The two offices are situated at opposite ends of the Avenue; but the work, as it progresses in each, must be supervised by the Superintendent or one of his clerks. But the paper for all the work done for Congress and the Departments is purchased by Government. It is obtained in large quantities, and has to be taken care of. It is fully as much as a single clerk can do to receive the paper from the contractors, inspect and weigh it, and take care of it. He has to deliver it to the printers as they require it, weigh it out to them, take their receipts for the same, and keep with them the proper accounts. He must be at the warehouse constantly, to supply either office when paper is needed. Orders are constantly coming in from the several Departments for small jobs, the paper for which must be supplied, without delay, by the Superintendent.

In addition to all these duties, sir, the Superintendent is compelled by law to keep as many as twenty separate books, and in these books are kept over one hundred separate accounts. He has all the calculations of all the work executed by both printers to make. The law fixes the rate of payment by prices, and according to rules only understood by printers, or, rather, not generally, understood by others than printers.

Such, sir, are the duties of the Superintendent of the printing, and how, in the name of common sense, are they to be properly executed, onerous and various as they are, by himself and two clerks only? As was stated by the honorable gentleman from New York, [Mr. MURRAY,] this matter was referred to the Joint Committee on Printing—of which the House Committee is a part—by the Senate. The Superintendent and his clerks were present when the Joint Committee considered it, and we had a full knowledge of all the details of duty imposed on them. Indeed, our duties, as members of the Committee, bring us in constant intercourse with them, and have abundant means of knowing the difficulties and embarrassments under which the Superintendent labors for want of sufficient force. The committee were unanimous in the opinion that these clerks were needed, and the resolution now before the House was reported to the Senate by direction of the committee. I cannot see how it is possible for the force now employed to execute properly the requirements of the law, and, therefore, urge the House to adopt this resolution.

The public printing, under the present mode of doing it, has been greatly improved, as all may see. The improvement is not only in the quality of the paper used, but in the mechanical execution of the work. I ascribe all this to the provision of the law which subjects all the materials and the work to the inspection of an intelligent Superintendent, who must approve it before it is received from the hands of the printer. Not only in this respect does the system work well, but our printing now actually costs us one third less for the same amount than it did under the old system. I am anxious to see the present system continued while it works so well, and should regret exceedingly that it should be embarrassed by any want of a sufficient force to carry it out. These clerks asked for are absolutely needed, and I trust the House, without referring the resolution, will order it to be read a third time, and passed.

Mr. DEAN. I hardly think that the House is now prepared to vote on this question; and therefore move that it do now adjourn. The motion to commit, which is pending, will keep the joint resolution from the table.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the House adjourned (at fifteen minutes before four o'clock, p. m.) until Monday next, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, January 23, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of Thursday was read and approved.

Hon. ROBERT TOOMBS, of Georgia, appeared in his seat this morning.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. PETTIT. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a resolution at this time, and I ask for its immediate consideration. The Committee on Private Land Claims, in view of the immense amount of business devolving upon it, and the quantity of writing which its members have to do as members of other committees, have directed me to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims be authorized to employ a clerk.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. FISH presented the memorial of Benjamin F. Cooper, in which he remonstrates against the passage of an act, entitled "An act to secure the right of citizenship to children of citizens of the United States born out of the limits of the United States;" which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a petition of Augustin Demers, nephew and only surviving descendant of Francis Chandonet, praying to be allowed the commutation to which said Chandonet was entitled under certain resolves of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the petition of Elizabeth C. Smith, praying for bounty land and three months' extra pay, she having served in the army during the Mexican war, under the assumed name of "Bill Newcom;" which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EVANS presented the petition of inspectors of customs for the district of Charleston, South Carolina, praying an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented three petitions of citizens of Iowa, praying that a grant of land may be made to aid in the construction of the Great Western Air-line railroad from Fort Wayne to Council Bluffs; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EVANS presented the memorial of Jane M. Rudolph, widow of Thomas C. Rudolph, late captain in the United States revenue service, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented three petitions of citizens of Clay and Fayette counties, praying for the establishment of a mail route from McGregor's Landing to Bradford, in Chickasaw county, Iowa; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, three petitions of citizens of Iowa, praying that a grant of land may be made to aid in the construction of the Great Western Air-line railroad from Fort Wayne to Council Bluffs; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the memorial of Samuel M. Clendenin, praying compensation for services as clerk to Lieutenant Ruggles in 1840; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. BELL, it was Ordered, That the memorial of the legal representative of William Russwurm be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Colonel J. J. Anderson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Mrs. Floyd, widow of Colonel Floyd, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, in order that they may be presented in the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. FISH, it was Ordered, That the petition of Thaddeus Scott, one of the children of William Scott, an administrator of Susannah Scott, praying to be allowed the pension to which he alleges said William Scott was entitled under the act of July 7, 1838, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. BUTLER, it was Ordered, That the petition of Mrs. Stewart, mother of Captain James Stewart, and the memorial of Rev. Richard Fuller, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. FOOT. The Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred a bill making a grant of public lands to the several States and Territories of the Union, for the benefit of indigent insane persons, has had the same under consideration, and directed me to report the bill back with an amendment in the form of a substitute, in which it asks the concurrence of the Senate; and when so amended, it recommends the passage of the bill. I move the printing of the substitute and the report. I desire to signify to the Senate my purpose to call up this bill for action at an early day.

The motion to print was agreed to.

Mr. FOOT. The Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the memorial of David P. Weeks, has directed me to submit an adverse report thereon; which report I move may be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOOT. The Committee on Pensions has had under consideration the petition of Adam Hays, late a surgeon in the Army of the United States, praying arrears of pension. It finds that this petition was referred to the Committee on Pensions at both sessions of the last Congress, and on both occasions adverse reports were made from that committee to the Senate, and those reports concurred in. The only report the committee now make, is a resolution that, without further examination of the papers in consequence of those adverse reports, and the concurrence in them by the Senate, the prayer of the petition of Adam Hays be rejected.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of William Blake, reported back the same without amendment, and recommended its passage.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the motion to print the memorial of Samuel C. Reid in behalf of the claimants in the case of the brig General Armstrong, reported in favor of printing the same; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the petition of Richard King, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition and accompanying papers of Daniel Myerle, praying compensation for losses sustained in his efforts to introduce the mode of water-rotting hemp into the United States, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. STUART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the documents in relation to the claim of Jonathan Kearsley, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill to provide for the final settlement of the accounts of Jonathan Kearsley, late receiver of public moneys at Detroit, and of John Biddle, late register of the land office at that place; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of William A. Burt, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill to enable the United States to make use of the solar compass in the public surveys; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives was received, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that its Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

An act explanatory of an act entitled "An act for the relief of Benjamin S. Roberts;"

A joint resolution of thanks to General John E. Wool;

An act for the relief of Lewis B. Willis, late a paymaster in the Army of the United States; and

A joint resolution for the relief of Alexander P. Field, late Secretary of Wisconsin Territory and sureties.

Which were then signed by the President pro tempore.

TERRITORY OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask the permission of the Senate to submit at this time a report from the Committee on Territories in relation to the Nebraska bill, which was set apart for to-day. The committee have had their attention called to the southern boundary of the proposed Territory of Nebraska, as fixed by the bill already reported, which is on the line of 36° 30'. Their attention has been called by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to the fact that that boundary would divide the Cherokee country; whereas, by taking the parallel of 37° north latitude as the southern boundary, the line would run between the Cherokees and the Osages. We have concluded, therefore, to vary the southern boundary, in order not to divide the Cherokee nation by the terms of the bill.

Then there are two delegates here who have been elected by the people of that Territory. They are not legal delegates, of course, but they have been sent here as agents. They have petitioned us to make two Territories instead of one, dividing them by the fortieth parallel of north latitude—the Kansas and Nebraska Territories. Upon consulting with the delegates from Iowa, I find that they think that their local interests, as well as the interests of the Territory, require that the proposed Territory of Nebraska should be divided into two Territories, and the people ought to have two delegates. So far as I have been able to consult the Missouri delegation, they are of the same opinion. The committee, therefore, have concluded to recommend the division of the Territory into two Territories, and also to change the boundary in the manner I have described.

We have prepared our amendment in the form of a substitute, to come in lieu of that which we have already reported. We have also incorporated into it one or two other amendments, which make the provisions of the bill upon other and more delicate questions more clear and specific, so as to avoid all conflict of opinion. I propose to substitute this bill which I hold in my hand, for the one reported by the Committee on Territories. I merely ask now that it may be printed, so that Senators can see what it is.

Mr. GWIN. Does the Senator propose to postpone the consideration of the Nebraska bill?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Only for the purpose of having the substitute printed which I now offer. I do this at the request of various friends. I prefer myself that we should proceed to the consideration of the subject to-day; but various friends have asked for an opportunity to look into the bill, and therefore it is that I ask for an order for its printing.

Mr. GWIN. Will the Senator call up the Nebraska bill in the morning?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I intend to do so.

Mr. MASON. I did not hear the honorable Senator from Illinois distinctly, and I wish to know whether the amendment he now proposes as a substitute is reported from the committee?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would ask the Senator from Illinois whether the committee has reported only a single bill for both Territories, or a separate bill for each?

Mr. DOUGLAS. We put both Territories in one bill. If the substitute which I offer be printed, Senators can see precisely what the committee propose to do.

Mr. JOHNSON. Are the boundaries specified in each case?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Everything is specified.

The motion to print was agreed to.

The bill, as originally introduced by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, provides that all that part of the Territory of the United States, included between the summit of the Rocky Mountains on the west, the States of Missouri and Iowa on the east, the 43° 30' north latitude on the north, and the Territory of New Mexico, and the parallel of 36° 30' north latitude on the south, shall be organized into a temporary government, by the name of the Territory of Nebraska; but nothing in this act is to be construed to impair the rights of persons or property now pertaining to the Indians in that Territory, so long as such rights shall remain undistinguished by treaty between the United States and such Indians, or to include any Territory which, by treaty with any Indian tribe, is not, without their consent, to be included within the territorial limits, or jurisdiction of any State or Territory. All such territory is to be excepted out of the boundaries of Nebraska, until the tribe shall signify to the President of the United States their assent to be included. The usual provision is made for the appointment of Executive officers in the new Territory; and also for a Territorial Legislature, a Judiciary, and a Territorial Delegate to the Congress of the United States.

The Committee on Territories reported back the bill with a substitute, in which they thus define the boundaries: "Beginning at the southwest corner of the State of Missouri; thence running west, on the line of 36° 30' north latitude, until it intersects the 103d meridian of longitude west of Greenwich; thence north, on the meridian, until it intersects the 38th parallel of north latitude; thence west, on the said parallel of latitude, to the summit of the Rocky Mountains; thence northward along and upon the summit of said range of mountains to the western boundary of the Territory of Minnesota; thence southward, on and with said boundary, to the Missouri river; thence down the center of the main channel of said river to the State of Missouri; thence south, on and with the western boundary of said State, to the place of beginning." The territory thus defined they propose to constitute a Territory, and afterwards to be admitted as a State, with or without slavery, as their constitution may prescribe at the time of their admission; the power, however, being reserved to the General Government to divide this Territory into two or more, as Congress may deem proper. The substitute, as the original bill, makes provision for the appointment of Executive officers, a Territorial Legislature, a Judiciary, and a Delegate to Congress. The seat of government of the new Territory is to be located at Fort Leavenworth, which is now a military station. The substitute concludes with this section:

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That in order to avoid all misconception, it is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of this act, so far as the question of slavery is concerned, to carry into practical operation the following propositions and principles, established by the compromise measures of one thousand eight hundred and fifty, to wit:

First. That all questions pertaining to slavery in the Territories, and in the new States to be formed therefrom, are to be left to the decision of the people residing therein, through their appropriate representatives.

Second. That "all cases involving title to slaves," and "questions of personal freedom," are referred to the adjudication of the local tribunals, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Third. That the provisions of the Constitution and laws of the United States, in respect to fugitives from service, are to be carried into faithful execution in all the "organized Territories" the same as in the States.

The committee in their report say, that the principal amendments which they submit to the Senate are those in which the principles established by the compromise measures of 1850, so far as they are applicable to territorial organizations, are proposed to be affirmed and carried into practical operation within the limits of the Territory.

The substitute now submitted to create two Territories, provides that "All that part of the territory of the United States included within the following limits, except such portions thereof as are hereinafter expressly exempted from the operations of this act, to wit: Beginning at a point in the Missouri river where the fortieth parallel of north latitude crosses the same; thence west on said parallel to the summit of the highlands, separating the waters flowing into the Green river or Colorado of the West from the waters flowing into the Great Basin; thence northward on the said highlands to the summit of the Rocky Mountains; thence on said summit northward to the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude; thence west on said parallel to the western boundary of the Territory of Minnesota; thence southward on said boundary to the Missouri river; thence down the main channel of said river to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, created into a temporary government by the name of the Territory of Nebraska."

Another section in the substitute provides that "All that part of the territory of the United States included within the following limits, except such portions thereof as are hereinafter expressly exempted from the operations of this act, to wit: Beginning at a point on the western boundary of the State of Missouri, where the thirty-seventh parallel of north latitude crosses the same; thence west on said parallel to the eastern boundary of New Mexico; thence north on said boundary to latitude thirty-eight; thence following said boundary westward to the summit of the highlands dividing the waters flowing into the Colorado of the West or Green river from the waters flowing into the Great Basin; thence northward on said summit to the fortieth parallel of latitude; thence east on said parallel to the western boundary of the State of Missouri; thence south with the western boundary of said State to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, created into a temporary government by the name of the Territory of Kansas.

The section providing for the election of a Delegate is amended by adding to the words "that the Constitution, and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory as elsewhere in the United States," the following:

Except the eighth section of the act preparatory to the admission of Missouri into the Union, approved March 6, 1820, which was superseded by the principles of the legislation of 1850, commonly called the compromise measures, and is declared inoperative.

There are other amendments that do not materially affect the principle of the bill.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating a statement of receipts and expenditures of the marine hospital fund for the year ending 30th June, 1853; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE CONTINGENT FUND.

Mr. HUNTER. The Committee on Finance, to which was referred the act regulating the disbursement of the contingent fund of the Senate, and for other purposes, with the amendments proposed by the House, has instructed me to recommend the Senate to disagree with the House in their amendments except the last, and to report an amendment in lieu thereof. The last amendment of the House the committee recommend the Senate to concur in. I move that the Senate proceed to consider the amendments at this time.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendments of the House, which the committee recommend to be not concurred in, are the following:

To strike out of the first section of the bill, which is as follows:

"That all moneys which have been, or may hereafter be, appropriated for the compensation of members and officers, and for the contingent expenses of the Senate, shall be paid out of the Treasury on requisition drawn by the Secretary of the Senate, and shall be kept, disbursed, and accounted for by him according to law; and the said Secretary shall be deemed a disbursing officer, and shall be allowed the sum of $1,000 per annum as a compensation, over and above his salary as Secretary of the Senate, for the duties hereby imposed upon him," the words "and officers, and for the contingent expenses."

To strike out of the first section the following words:

"And shall be allowed the sum of $1,000 per annum, as a compensation, over and above his salary as Secretary of the Senate, for the duties hereby imposed upon him."

In the second section of the bill, which is as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That in lieu of the bond now required by law to be given by the Secretary of the Senate, he shall give bond to the United States, within ten days after the passage of this act, with one or more sureties, to be approved by the Comptrollers of the Treasury, in the penal sum of $30,000, with condition of the faithful application and disbursement of such funds as may be drawn from the Treasury under this act, which bond shall be deposited in the Comptrollers' office; and it shall be the duty of each and every Secretary of the Senate who may hereafter be chosen, to give bond as aforesaid, within thirty days after he enters upon the duties of his office, and before making any requisition as aforesaid."

To insert the words "in addition to," in place of the words "in lieu of."

In the second section, in the clause "to be approved by the Comptrollers of the Treasury," after the words "by the" to insert "first," so that it shall make the bond to be given "to be approved by the first Comptroller of the Treasury;" and also to insert "first" before "Comptroller" where it subsequently occurs.

The amendment which the committee propose to substitute for the amendment of the House is as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said Secretary of the Senate to deposit the moneys aforesaid which may come into his hands with a depository, who may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, for other disbursing officers in the city of Washington; and all payments on account of the pay or mileage of members of the Senate, and all payments of their officers and for the contingent expenses of the Senate, shall be by drafts drawn by the Secretary on such depository.

And the amendment of the House, which the committee recommend the Senate to concur in, was to strike out the third section of the bill, which is as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That the accounts of the Secretary of the Senate, of his disbursements of moneys on account of the contingent expenses of the Senate, when passed by the committee to audit and control such contingent expenses, and certified to have been so passed by the chairman of such committee, shall be deemed and held conclusive by all the officers of the Treasury Department."

The report of the committee was concurred in.

CAPTAIN GUNNISON.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred a resolution in relation to the subject, to report a bill granting five years' half pay to the widow of Captain Gunnison, which I am instructed to ask the Senate to consider at this time.

The bill was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of ——— Gunnison, widow of Captain Gunnison, deceased, upon the list of pensioners, and pay her for five years, from January 1, 1854, half the pay to which her husband was entitled at the time of his death.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. STUART. There is a blank which it is necessary to fill, and with that view, and yet that the bill may be acted upon at as early a date as possible, I move to postpone its further consideration until to-morrow.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Let the bill be ordered to be engrossed, and we can pass it to-morrow.

Mr. BADGER. "Mrs. Gunnison, widow of Captain Gunnison," will be definite enough in the bill.

Mr. CASS. That will sufficiently distinguish the person whom we propose to relieve. I do not think the clerks in the Department would stop it, though they stop almost anything.

Mr. STUART. I am willing that the bill should pass; but I doubt whether it would, in such a condition, pass through the Departments.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. HUNTER. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill from the House making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending 30th June, 1855, to report it back with two amendments. I ask that, by unanimous consent, the bill may be considered at this time.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The amendments of the committee were to insert at the end of the bill the following:

"For repairs and additions to professors' quarters $5,000.

"For cavalry exercise hall, $20,000."

Mr. HUNTER. Both these items are in accordance with the estimates of the Secretary of War. The other items of the bill are also according to the estimate, in which these also were included, but were not placed in the bill by the House committee. The Committee on Finance propose to restore them.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I submit the following amendment to be added at the end of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That the pay and emoluments of the sword-master shall be the same as those of the first lieutenant of cavalry.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will state to the Senator that I was about to offer an amendment from the Committee on Military Affairs, which will be somewhat more simple, embracing the professors of drawing and French as well as the sword-master.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let it be read.

Mr. SHIELDS. The amendment which I propose will be to add the following as an additional section:

Be it further enacted, That the compensation of the professors of French and drawing be made equal to that of professors of the other departments, and the compensation of the master of the sword be twelve hundred dollars per annum.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand that the compensation proposed by the amendment to the sword-master is above what is proposed by the Senator from Texas, which allowed him the same as a first lieutenant of cavalry.

Mr. SHIELDS. It is about the same, according to the present rate.

Mr. HUNTER. I would prefer the amendment of the Senator from Texas, because by the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, if the pay of the first lieutenant of cavalry is increased, the pay of the sword-master would go up with it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I would not have the slightest objection to that amendment. This, however, is recommended by the Board of Visitors, and it is in conformity with their recommendation; and it is what has been recommended for several sessions past.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was not aware that it was the intention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to offer an amendment of this character, which I thought was very necessary. The pay which the sword-master receives at present is totally inadequate for the duty which he has to perform, and I offered my amendment with a view to increase it. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator, and I shall support it, and hence I withdraw the one which I offered.

Mr. SHIELD's amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then reported to the Senate as amended; the amendments were concurred in, the bill was ordered to be read a third time; was read a third time, and passed.

PAPAL NUNCIO.

Mr. CASS. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate, so far as he may deem it compatible with the public interest, a copy of any correspondence which may have taken place with the Government of the Papal States touching a mission to the United States.

Mr. President, as that is a mere resolution of inquiry, I suppose there cannot be any objection to considering it at this time.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words explanatory of the reason for the introduction of this resolution. The Senate is aware that a distinguished foreigner from the Roman States arrived in our country some time since, and that he has been visiting different portions of it. It is reported, and I believe correctly, that he is clothed with some mission, giving him a public character in this country. I understand he is the Nuncio to Brazil, and that he has been instructed to stop in the United States, and to bear an autograph letter, as it is called, from the Pope to the President of the United States. It is a common procedure in Europe, and it is intended as a compliment and a mark of good feeling towards the people of the United States. There is nothing in the arrival of this agent, whatever may be the character of his duties, which should give alarm to the most jealous sectarian. He does not come in any sacerdotal character, as the representative of the Sovereign Pontiff, the head of the Catholic religion, but he comes as the representative of a temporal Prince, ruling over a considerable portion of Italy, and especially of that portion of it endeared to us by many a glorious recollection, where large numbers of our countrymen are always residing, needing the protection of the Government, and with which we have important commercial intercourse. I understand, sir, that the proceedings which led to this mission were conducted in the most unexceptionable manner. The American Chargé at Rome was sent for by the Cardinal Secretary of State, and the intention was made known to him, and he was asked whether he thought the measure would be acceptable to the people of the United States. He answered, as he ought, that he had no doubt that the representative would be kindly received, and hospitably treated in our country, and that the step would be received, as it was intended, as complimentary to the people of the United States. And I do hope, sir, that the pledge thus given will be as sacredly redeemed as is now in our power. The Pope has given evidence of kind personal feelings towards the people of this country which entitles him to special regard. He is among the very few sovereigns of Europe who have contributed towards the monument now being constructed in this city to the memory of Washington. He has sent a block of marble, hallowed by its association with the relics of the Empire Republic, to make part of our national testimonial to one whom to honor is to honor our country and human nature.

Now, sir, I have read with shame and regret the accounts given in the papers of the outrages attempted against the distinguished individual, who has come here under the circumstances mentioned. No American can contemplate them without indignation. Besides the scenes at Cincinnati, it is reported, upon apparently good authority, that three balls were fired through the windows of the house of the Archbishop of Baltimore, perhaps on Friday evening last, under the impression that this gentleman was in the room; and this morning's mail from New York has brought us the information that when the Baltic sailed, a day or two since, he was thought to have been on board, and a large crowd of persons assembled at the wharf with hostile demonstrations, and with an apparent intention to do him injury. And I was shown, an hour or two since, a placard which had been stuck up in various places in Wheeling, using the most inflammatory terms, and invoking public violence upon this stranger, who is commended to us by his character and position. I have inquired of a near and dear relative now in Rome, who, from his situation, must know, as well as any man, the estimation in which this Archbishop is held in his own country, and he told me he was a man of the highest character and standing, who had satisfactorily filled many important stations, and whose public and private life was without blot or blemish.

Sir, these outrages violate equally the rights of hospitality, the honor of the country, the supremacy of the municipal law, and the guarantees of the law of nations. Mr. President, these acts of violence which override the laws, and which too often pass away unpunished, do more injury to the cause of republican institutions in the old world, than any other event, than all other events, indeed, connected with our history and progress. They are circulated with celerity and zeal from the western shore of England to Siberia, and are thus spread over Europe as proofs of the incapacity of Republican Governments to protect the lives, persons, and property of their citizens. Our good reputation, upon this subject is essential to the progress of free principles.

I understand, sir, that that atrocious tragedy which terminated in the death of Hugo Bassa, at Bologna, has been charged to this gentleman, and has produced the excitement which has led to these acts of lawless violence. I do not wonder that a deed like that has aroused deep feelings of indignation in this country. I can appreciate that feeling fully. It has been called an execution, but I call it a murder, and a foul, cold-blooded one. But I believe the distinguished gentleman to whom I have alluded, had no more to do with it than you or I had, Mr. President. He was indeed the civil Governor of Bologna at the time, but totally destitute of any power or authority. The Austrian forces had taken possession of the city, and their commander had proclaimed military law, which, as we all know, prostrates all other authority whatever. The unfortunate Bassa was seized, tried, condemned, and executed, while the hour-glass was yet counting its sixty minutes, and by an Austrian military tribunal. I do hope, in the ways of Providence, that this deed, deserving universal execration, will yet call down upon its perpetrators a just and fearful responsibility. Why, sir, all who know the Austrian predisposition to revenge, under such circumstances of popular efforts for the recovery of freedom, well know they need no prompter to deeds of blood, and admit no protector between their victim and their vengeance.

I repeat, sir, there is no palliative for the conduct which has been manifested towards this gentleman, and I, for one, desire to call the attention of the Senate to it, in the hope, also, that it will attract the attention of the country. If the subject of these remarks is here in a diplomatic capacity, he is under the protection of the laws and Constitution of the United States, and we have a right to know how those laws have been executed or violated, in order that we may apply the necessary legislative remedy. That is our right and our duty; and the resolution of inquiry is therefore within the legitimate scope of our authorities.

But, after all, the best safeguard and security in cases of violent excitement is to be found in a wholesome public opinion. Like truth, it is mighty, and will prevail in this land of freedom and intelligence. Thanks to the good sense and good feeling of the people, time is sure to bring a corrective for any erroneous impressions which may prevail. Apprehension is felt lest violence should yet be offered to this guest of the nation. I trust not. I trust his exit from our country will be marked with the peaceful respect which is due to the sovereign he represents, and to the mission, originating in kindest feelings, upon which he was sent. And I cannot but express my fervent hope that all good citizens, wherever he may pass, will unite to prevent such disgraceful proceedings, and to assert the majesty and the supremacy of the law. It is better to prevent than to punish; and there are few improper public acts which cannot be prevented in this country by an energetic display of public opinion.

Mr. MASON. I have heard, with very great satisfaction, the expression of sentiment which has fallen from the distinguished and venerable Senator from the State of Michigan. If there is anything of which the American people should be proud, it is that they have a Government of law, as distinguished from a Government of force; and if there is any duty which every citizen owes to his country superior to any other, it is to take care that public sentiment everywhere should be in submission. Sir, I have seen, not only with concern, but with indignation, through the press, that this gentleman, be he whom he may, has been met, in some of the cities where he has visited, with insult and violence, threatening, as I understand, his life. I do not know what his mission is. I am glad, however, that the Senator has introduced the resolution, in order that we may know whether he comes here in any accredited form; because, if he is here as a guest of the nation, he is entitled to the safeguard of the nation within its broad limits. If he is not here in any character to be accredited as the guest of the nation, then, although the protection of the Government cannot be extended to him, possibly the sentiments that may be expressed on this floor by the representatives of the States, may lead the turbulent and violent men who have been at fault to know that they are under a Government of law, and that if the arm of the civil authority either wants energy or is paralyzed, means may be taken to lead to its exertion.

It is said that this gentleman comes from the Papal States. The honorable Senator has some reason to believe he is here, in some sense, as a guest of the nation. Be this as it may, he is a foreigner, and I trust the American people never yet have responded to the condition in which Rome once stood when her people had but one word to express stranger and enemy. Sir, the fact that he is a stranger and a foreigner entitles him to the respect, the consideration, the courtesy, and the protection of every man in this land, until he ceases to deserve it; and if, in any way, he has made himself censurable by conduct abroad—which I learn from the honorable Senator from Michigan is a calumny upon him—he is amenable to the authorities abroad, and to none here. I have seen, as I have said, with deep concern, the manifestations of popular sentiment, I know not from what description of people, evinced towards this man, who, whether he be in any form here as a guest of the nation or not, is a stranger in a strange land, with whom the protection of the law should always go. I trust it will be extended to him; and if the fact shall turn out to be that he is entitled, because of his political relation to this country—for it is his political relation alone which we can recognize—to the safeguard of the country, I will go as far as any man in seeing that it is extended to him.

Mr. BUTLER. This subject was brought to my attention this morning by a friend. I confess that I was not surprised at hearing the details of the outrage which has been offered to the gentleman whose name has not been mentioned here, but who has been sufficiently indicated. I wish distinctly, as a Senator of the United States, to say upon this floor, if my voice may have any influence abroad, that I am satisfied that conduct of this kind has proceeded entirely from an irresponsible multitude, and that it does not have the sanction of the public opinion, or even the popular opinion of the American people. These are exhibitions offensive, not only to national comity and hospitality, but they are disgraceful to the spirit of the age, and they offend the very spirit of that religion which is taught both to the Catholic and to the Protestant. And, sir, shall we violate that interrogatory propounded in our sacred volume, "Doth our law judge any man before it hear him and know what he doeth?" No, sir; let us not sanction anything of this kind. I am glad it is condemned by so high an authority as my friends who have spoken on the subject, and I join heartily in the censure of the disgusting insults offered to this gentleman in Baltimore, New York, and, I believe, Cincinnati.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. President: It is merely for the expression of my individual opinion that I rise. I have noticed, in the public prints, the treatment that this individual has received throughout several of the States of this Union. I have endeavored to ascertain the principle on which that feeling arose. It is said, by the Senator from Michigan, that he is the representative of the Papal States; that he is a distinguished and worthy man. I care not whether he be the representative of the religion of his country, or whether he is here in the character of the representative of a political Power, on his way as Minister to Rio Janeiro or not, the national hospitality of this country has been stabbed. A stranger, a distinguished stranger, has been most unkindly and inhospitably treated, and the most unfortunate incident connected with it is, that there has been no feeling in the parts of the country where the disturbances arose to put them down. It seems as if the laws of the land, in certain sections of the country, are to be overrun by violence and combinations of individuals to defeat them; and, strange to tell, these combinations and conspiracies against the law are not punished anywhere. The liberty of the country is becoming so great that men can rise up in thousands, and women unite with them, to put down the existing institutions, and to cover the men who may come before them, or who may be the object of their displeasure. What is the origin of all this? It is the failure to enforce the Constitution and the laws of the country, and the neglect on the part of the people to keep that due subordination to law which every country must regard before its honor can be sustained abroad. But, sir, this goes to the world, the civilized world, as the hospitality of the American States; and the American character is injured by this course of conduct. But when we come to strip it of its covering—and I take this occasion to say it to the world—we find that it is not the American character that has been guilty of these violations. It is not the native citizens of the United States who have perpetrated these outrages upon a quiet stranger. In every instance, if the papers tell the truth, it has been the foreign influence of the country that has been attempting to bring into degradation the Constitution and the laws of the land; and from political, or other considerations, this influence is allowed to injure our country in its character abroad from the apprehension of incurring the displeasure of the foreign people or citizens among us. It is time to tell the truth, and not be yielding to this kind of influence.

Take the outrages from Cincinnati around to Baltimore, and I have heard of no American name, a native of this country, of character, connected with the transactions. Why, then, should gentlemen be so timid, or so fearful to express an opinion and say that this is not American feeling, or American hospitality? It is a violation of American hospitality by a foreign influence within our limits; and I, for one, shall never hesitate, or fear the consequences, politically or otherwise, of denouncing such conduct as inconsistent with the character of our country, and with our hospitality.

I feel it is an obligation upon every Senator on this floor to rescue his own State from that which is so well calculated to damn its reputation. Sir, I hesitate not to say that this gentleman could have passed through the State that I have the honor in part to represent without being subjected to one single act of outrage; and if such an act had been attempted by any part or portion of our people, the hospitable feeling of the rest of the people of the State would have prevented it.

Mr. BADGER. You can make the same remark of the whole southern country.

Mr. DAWSON. Yes, sir, I can say it for all the southern States.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. It has happened in Maryland.

Mr. DAWSON. It has not happened in the southern States strictly. These things are not properly attended to. All sorts of isms, all sorts of feelings are combining themselves together, not in subordination to law, but in subordination to feeling; and they are rising up everywhere and breeding social disorder and discontent throughout every section of the country; and unless firmness characterizes the representatives of the people in Congress, the period will come when the people will combine and do as they please; and these insurrectionary movements of all kinds will be carried on almost anywhere and everywhere. How is it to be avoided? The honorable Senator from Michigan calls for information, and intends to say that in the event that the laws of the country are insufficient to put down this insubordination of conduct, we will amend the laws.

Why, Mr. President, there is not a State in this Union where, if the laws were enforced against persons who thus combine to commit outrages, the laws are not sufficient to put them down, not one. It is the looking out for the elections—the disposition to carry the feelings of a certain class of the community with the politicians or with the party that yields to this influence that is much to blame for them; and that is growing daily.

But, sir, I did not intend to say as much as I have said. I only rose to say, in conformity to the request of the Senator from Michigan, that as a Senator in Congress from the State of Georgia, I look upon these outrages with great regret, and also to add that they could not happen in the State which I have the honor in part to represent here.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I regret that the Senator from Georgia should, in his condemnation of these transactions, have said that they could not have occurred in a particular State, or a particular section of the Union. I have no idea that they could have happened with the sanction or the approbation, or even the tolerance of any State in this Union. I believe, sir, that there is not a right-minded man in this country who does not feel humbled as an American citizen, that such acts of violence should have occurred anywhere in our country. There certainly can be but one opinion, and but one sentiment on this subject, North or South, East or West.

It may be, sir, that the greatest violence has occurred in particular localities, and this tends to fix a higher disgrace upon those immediate localities than upon the whole country; yet we all participate in the disrepute that is brought upon the country by it. I apprehend, too, that it cannot be said that one section or another section of the country is entirely exempt or alone guilty. I regret to say that it has occurred in the great West, which I believe is as loyal to the Constitution and laws as any part of the Union. I regret to say that it has occurred in the southern States, within a few miles of this Capitol, and therefore we cannot say that either the one section or the other is entirely exempt. Nor am I willing it should be inferred that either the one section or the other approve of, or acquiesce in, such conduct.

I am at a loss at this time, not having expected the question to come up, to say what we ought to do; but I believe I hazard nothing in saying that there is not a man in this body who does not feel humbled and indignant that such transactions should have occurred, to bring disgrace upon the country in the eyes of the whole world. We all feel the humiliation, and I trust we are willing to perform whatever duty belongs to us in arresting it, so far as our power extends.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. President, this subject comes before the Senate without any previous knowledge on my part. The distinguished Senator from Michigan a few moments ago mentioned to me his purpose of offering a resolution to the Senate, and did me the honor to express the wish that I should say what might occur to me on the subject. I do it cheerfully; and I am the rather induced to do so from the somewhat sectional aspect which my excellent friend from Georgia

[Mr. Dawson] has given to it; without, however, intending, I am sure, to do injustice to any other part of the country. I agree with the Senator from Illinois, who has just taken his seat, in believing that the feeling on this subject, spontaneously arising in every well-regulated mind, is not bounded by any sectional lines—that it does not exist more in one part of the country than another.

The Senator from Georgia says that this gentleman could pass with safety through his State; and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Badger] adds to it the suggestion, throughout the whole southern country, without the slightest outrage or mark of disrespect. I have not the least doubt of it, sir; but with respect to my own section of country, I can say that he has already been there. I have had the pleasure of making his personal acquaintance; I have met him in the most respectable circles in that part of the country, and I have seen him universally considered and treated as entitled to every mark of respect and hospitality which can be shown to a distinguished stranger.

Sir, he comes to us in the highest character which a man can wear in a civilized community. He comes to us under the shield of the law of nations. He is clothed with a diplomatic character, not indeed accredited to this country, but to another foreign country with which we are at peace. He bears with him, as I understand, an autograph letter from the chief of his own Government—a Government with which we have friendly relations, and at whose Court we are represented by a relative of the distinguished Senator from Michigan. He comes to us, sir, in a still higher capacity, under a still stronger protection—that of the stranger, that of the inoffensive traveler, that of the sojourner, who demeans himself peaceably among us, obeying our laws, and trusting to be protected by them. Sir, it is not necessary, surely, to add further titles of respect. If it were, I might say that he is an object of respect—perhaps I may even say veneration—to the great religious communion to which he belongs, and which, in this country, where we have no religious establishments, stands in the eye of the law upon an equal footing with every other communion, and every other form of our common Christian belief.

Well now, sir, I know nothing of the antecedents of this gentleman. I am willing to take them from the testimony of the honorable Senator from Michigan, who tells us that his relative, the accredited representative of this Government to the Government of which this gentleman is a diplomatic representative, speaks of him in the highest terms as a good citizen, and as a person justly enjoying the confidence of his Government. What more, sir, prima facie, can we want or can we ask? And surely we all know that since he has been in this country, he has neither uttered a word nor done an act that affords the color of a justification—rather than let me say of provocation—for the unmanly assaults of which he has been the object.

Now, I must say that if it were a question of legislation, no new enactments can be necessary to secure to such an individual the protection of our laws. Sir, if public sentiment cannot do it, no form of legislation can do it; and I will not think so meanly of the public sentiment of this country as to believe that any further legal provision is requisite to extend the protection of the common laws, which secure the rights of every individual, to a stranger and foreigner of this character, coming among us under these circumstances. Why, sir, if this is not the state of things in this country, every individual concerned in these acts of lawless outrage, or affording them countenance and encouragement, is himself guilty of an offense against the fundamental principles of civilized society, more dangerous in its consequences than is charged—I believe most unjustly, and without foundation—upon this gentleman, whose character has now in some degree come before the Senate. If we cannot strengthen public sentiment to the point of affording protection to a person of this character in this country, we should make ourselves worse citizens than this stranger is represented to be, most unjustly, as I believe, on the authority which has been given to us.

I therefore rejoice that an opportunity has been afforded in this Senate to do whatever can be done by the expression of opinion on all sides of the House, to strengthen the arm of the law, by bringing in support of it the more powerful arm of public opinion and public feeling.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 24, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 15.

I hope the resolution of the Senator from Michigan will be adopted.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it is with some hesitancy that I submit any remarks on this subject, but it occurs to my mind that this body, as well as other bodies, is sometimes liable to err. My own opinion is, that the business of this body should be confined to subjects over which it has jurisdiction. I find no authority in the Constitution for us to undertake to regulate public opinion. If the individual referred to by the distinguished Senator from Michigan comes to this country in a political and accredited character, I take it for granted that he has reported himself to the Secretary of State, and it is the duty of this Government to protect him in his person. If he came here in a religious character, the shield of our institutions is thrown over him. Every State in this Union has provisions in its constitution and laws to protect every one in the free exercise of his religion. I should like to know what jurisdiction this Government has over any one of the States to put down riots, or to punish rioters, or to control her citizens. I am at a loss to know by what means we are to obtain jurisdiction over this matter. I regret as much as any one any violation of law, or any disrespect shown to this stranger, whatever may be his mission; yet, sir, I hold that this is a matter which belongs to the States; that they are capable and competent, and that they will enforce the rights of the stranger, as well as of their own citizens.

It has been said by my friend from Georgia, and correctly said, according to the reports in the papers, that the outrages referred to have been committed by foreigners, not by native-born citizens; and that this individual could have passed through the southern States unmolested. That is doubtless true, but how are we to account for this? I suppose that where these outrages have been committed there are a number of individuals, not native-born, but foreigners, who suppose—I care not now whether the supposition be true or not—that they have felt the oppressions of religious intolerance abroad. They may be mistaken; but whether they are or not, is a matter with which we have nothing to do. In the southern States we have but few foreigners; and that is the way to account for the difference of treatment in different portions of the country. No doubt, sir, those who have been engaged in these outrages have supposed themselves justified for their conduct; but I contend that it is a matter which belongs to the different States, with which the Federal Government has nothing to do. Nor do I see that the Senate of the United States has any right under the Constitution to attempt to control public opinion, however much each individual Senator, as an individual, may regret these occurrences. We hear of no murder committed in any State of the Union which we do not regret to hear, and yet murders are being committed every day. We hear of no outrage upon any citizen, foreign born or native born, which we do not regret to hear of; yet that does not give the Federal Government jurisdiction over the subject-matter.

I tell you, sir, there is very great danger that we may in time forget that there are States in this Union, and that this Federal Government is one of delegated and limited powers. With all due respect to those distinguished gentlemen who think we have jurisdiction over this matter, and who think it is the duty of the Senate to control public opinion throughout the country, I beg leave to differ with them. Public opinion will regulate itself in the various communities throughout the Union where these outrages have occurred. If, however, this individual has a diplomatic character, and a political character as an accredited agent to this Government; it is a different matter; but the fact that he is accredited to another Government does not give to the General Government jurisdiction over local offenses in the different States. If he possesses the character of an accredited representative to this country, I never heard it before this occasion. If he came here on a religious mission, he is protected by the institutions of every State in the Union, and I have no doubt their laws will be enforced without the intervention of the Federal Government.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, I wish to say a word upon a topic on which the honorable Senator from Mississippi has touched in his concluding remark, and that is, as to the question of jurisdiction. Why, sir, that is a very clear matter. The object which we have in view in this inquiry—and it is a legitimate object—is to ascertain whether this gentleman is clothed with a diplomatic character in the United States. If he is, we have legislative jurisdiction over the subject; for then his right of protection rests upon the Constitution and laws of the United States. The Constitution expressly secures protection to "ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls," and this is to be provided by Congress. We may find, therefore, from the answer to this inquiry, that we have jurisdiction. If we find that he is in that position in this country, and that his person has been threatened with violence, and if we find that a defect exists in the existing law, it may be necessary to remedy it, so as to insure full jurisdiction over the subject-matter. That is a legitimate object of inquiry. We propose to ascertain, in the first place, the position of this gentleman, his public character, his diplomatic relation to us. If we find he is under the protection of the law of nations, then we can examine the necessity of any legislative interference.

It is very true, as the honorable Senator has said, that public opinion controls itself in this country; but discussions which arise here and elsewhere, on topics before the public, are, I think, of great service. They serve at times to enlighten public sentiment, and more or less to aid it. Why, sir, this is no common case. The honorable Senator speaks of murder, and of other crimes, which are committed throughout the country, which we all regret, and which the laws are amply sufficient; if not to prevent, at least to punish, and if not to punish, the offenders escape from circumstances, such as the want of proof and other difficulties, which the law cannot supply. But our conduct towards this stranger becomes a national act. The eyes of all Europe are upon it. The representative of one of the sovereign States of the Old World is here among us in a character entitling him, under any circumstances, to claim from us protection and hospitality, and therefore our national character is involved in this matter. It is not a mere question as to an ordinary breach of laws. That is bad enough, but that would not call upon the Senate for any interposition, nor would it require any peculiar manifestations in regard to public opinion. But in this case it becomes us to redeem ourselves from the obloquy of these atrocious acts of violence which have been threatened against a diplomatic representative coming among us, under peculiar circumstances complimentary to our country, and originating in the kindest feelings.

Sir, what should we say if one of our ministers to Europe should land in France, and proceed thence to Russia, and meet with similar insults in every State through which he might pass? Should we look upon it as an ordinary case of assault and battery? No, sir; but from Lake Superior to the Atlantic ocean, one burst of indignation would arise, and the honorable gentleman may be sure that such is the feeling in Europe; for when you come to questions involving love of country, the sentiment is almost equally strong everywhere. I repeat, no American deserves the name who would not feel indignant, were one of our representatives exposed to similar treatment.

Mr. PETTIT. This resolution is right, and ought to be adopted in two points of view: First, that we may know whether the Pope of Rome, a secular prince, desires to open any negotiation, or extend his intercourse with us beyond what it has heretofore been. It is our right to know that, at all proper times, whenever the President is willing to communicate such matters to us in open Senate.

In that view, it is proper that we should be informed of what the Pope, as secular prince, desires of us.

This resolution is proper in another point of view. If it shall so turn out that this gentleman is the Ambassador of the Pope to this Government, in a secular point of view, and if our laws are not already sufficient for the protection of such persons who come—as is said, and as is true—clothed with the protection of the law of nations, it is proper that we should be informed upon the subject of their defect and deficiency, in order that we may supply them to reach subsequent cases, not past ones—not to punish the present offenders, if our laws are not sufficient.

For these two reasons I think the resolution should pass. It is respectful to the President, and respectful to all concerned. I suppose, sir, that this gentleman visits this country in a double capacity: First, to announce the will or pleasure of a secular prince, his sovereign, as such to the United States; and, secondly, to announce the Sovereign Pontiff's will to his followers, or his Church, in this country. In the former point of view, we have all right and all concern with him, and the whole world has a right to look to us for the protection of such persons. In the latter point of view, we have nothing, as a Government, to do with him. It will be expected, however, that our people will treat him with that kindness and that attention which is due to distinguished strangers upon a peaceable mission of religion, or anything else for which they shall see fit to travel over our country.

Sir, I am not disposed to make invidious comparisons between the North and the South, as to where these outbreaks take place; but I am told, and I believe it is the fact, that the most severe and most outrageous of them has been in a southern State, if Maryland may be called a southern State, and I believe she has always ranked herself as such. The transaction to which I refer occurred very recently at Baltimore. No violation of the rights of hospitality so gross as that which occurred in Baltimore has happened in any other place, according to the reports; and we know nothing of these matters at all but from reports. And, sir, it is not long since a transaction that would have made a northern man blush took place at New Orleans, which is in a southern State, I believe. There a high functionary, an official of the Spanish Government, was mobbed, the flag of his country taken down, and he compelled to leave it. Yet, forsooth, gentlemen say none of these difficulties occur in southern States!

Well, sir, I pass from that matter. I will say, however, that I think more consequence has been given to these things than is necessary. The resolution should have passed sub silentio, and the information asked for could be furnished us, if consistent with the views of the President, without any trouble.

I had the great pleasure and the great honor of an introduction to this gentleman last Friday night, and had a somewhat extended conversation with him. He expressed to me his great satisfaction at the reception which he had received, as he said, everywhere; but, perhaps, there ought to be some exception. He regretted that he had lost a great deal of the advantages of social intercourse from not being able to speak the English language fluently, though I thought he got along with it very well. He spoke particularly of the difficulty at Cincinnati, and said, to use his own language, that it was a small affair, and there was nothing of it next day. He added, that it was possible the Holy Father might be a little displeased about it, but he thought all would be right when he got home, which would be soon, as he had to return to Italy immediately. He said he had been in the country six months, and had been highly delighted with all parts of it, and his reception throughout.

Let it be understood, further, that by the very information from which we learned that there was a gathering at Cincinnati we also learned that it had a peaceable origin, and a peaceable design, so far as he was concerned. I believe they designed to go near the residence of Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, and there, perhaps, give him and the new-comer a serenade. But, sir, gentlemen have spoken about domestic feeling, and the policy of different sections of the country. If we look at the report of matters in Cincinnati, we find that the municipal authorities there were watching with vigilance, with a lynx-eye, every movement; and before there was any opportunity, before there was any demonstration of roughness and ill-treatment, or bad usage, they were on the ground in numbers, and suppressed it; and so anxious were they to prevent an outbreak and violation of the law, that they themselves violated the law, and they trampled upon the rights of the people who assembled together. It is true that the police, in endeavoring to protect this man, did trample upon the rights of those who were supposed to be rioters.

The remark which the Senator from Mississippi made is true, that so far as our own people are concerned, not one native-born American was engaged in that riot. Those engaged in it were all foreigners. They came here with the passions of the old country rankling in their breasts, and with the idea that this man had been the cause of sacrificing and wantonly shedding human blood. It would seem, then, to be quite natural, that when they came to a land of liberty they should have a burning desire, if they could, without force, to express peaceably their hatred and condemnation of such conduct in their own country; and it turned out that they had no intention of violence; and the only violence which took place was on the part of an over-vigilant police in the city of Cincinnati.

Now, sir, it seems to me that, after all, more consequence has been given to this matter than need be, and more, I think, than the gentleman himself regards it as worthy of; for he expressly said that it was a small matter, that he was delighted with the whole country, and should have a fine report to make when he went back. He did say, in his own broken English, that he supposed the Holy Father might possibly be a little displeased on hearing of it, but that it amounted to nothing, and there was nothing at all of it the next day.

But, so far as the passage of this resolution is concerned, I think it ought to be adopted. The Pope never has had a resident Minister or accredited agent here. If he desires to have here, as we have had at Rome, an accredited representative, a chargé d'affaires, and if he desires a closer political intimacy with us, we ought, by all means, to encourage it; and it is proper that the Senate and the country should know it. I doubt not the whole country will hail it with joy and acclamation; that not only the Papal States of Italy, but that all countries where civilization is known, desire to be united to us by bonds of diplomacy. The country will rejoice to know that they desire to extend their relations with us by sending ambassadors or any other grade of ministers which they may see fit. It is our policy to encourage such a course of conduct on their part, and, above all, sir, it seems to me that we should welcome a representative from that once mighty country which was both empire and republic at different times, and the greatest in the world at one time.

I cordially concur in the sentiment, that if anything is necessary to be done in order to protect this gentleman, or any other who shall come in his character of a secular representative, we ought to know the deficiency of our laws, and act promptly in enforcing them. And yet I am not willing to say that anything has thus far been done which can justly attach odium or disgrace to the country; or to its native-born citizens; or to the General Government; or the municipal authorities of the various States. Everywhere, and on all occasions, the municipal authorities have endeavored to keep the peace, and have immediately quelled the disturbances.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I believe that ever since the arrival in this country of the distinguished personage who has been the subject of this debate, the public mind has been more or less excited in particular localities. This, I think, was very natural. There are a great many Germans, and a great many Italians in this country, who were connected with the revolutionary movements in Europe of 1848. They unquestionably believe—whether correctly or not I do not now stop to inquire—that this distinguished personage was connected with the revolution of 1848 as one of their chief oppressors—that he had a direct agency in defeating the movements which were then on foot to emancipate their native country from the iron yoke of despotism.

Sir, I know of no person of any note who would, in any shape or form, give encouragement to an unlawful assemblage for the purpose of committing violence, either upon a foreigner or one of our own countrymen; but when the people of this country, who claim to be the sovereigns, choose to assemble together for the purpose of expressing their deliberate opinion, or for the purpose of expressing their sympathies in regard to any man, whether a foreigner or a citizen, they have an unquestionable right to do so. I did not hear until this morning that any personal violence had been attempted upon this distinguished gentleman; that I neither seek to justify nor palliate. The assemblage that took place in the city of Cincinnati was such a one as very often takes place in this country. When the people see proper peaceably to assemble together to express their opinion of one whom they regarded as a blood-thirsty tyrant and murderer—as one who had sought to oppress their countrymen, and as one who had wrested from their hands the invaluable prize of liberty for which they were struggling, they have an unquestionable right to do so. While there is power sufficient in this Government to protect the person and property from violence, there is no power to stifle public opinion—there is no power, and I trust in God there never will be, to prevent the people from a free expression of their sentiments.

Sir, I doubt not that any person could travel, as the Senator says, whether he be a tyrant or not, through the State of Georgia, without producing any excitement. There are very few Italians, very few Germans in that section of the country; but in the West, in the city of Cincinnati, for instance, as well as in the city of New York, there is a large number of foreigners, both Italians and Germans. There is an excitable population there; and whenever a man comes among them whom they may have known at home as a tyrant or an oppressor, who can deny to them the right of peaceably assembling together and expressing their opinions of his conduct? This was an attempt on their part, if you choose, to get up a public opinion with regard to this individual. How is it to be counteracted? The Senate of the United States is called on this morning to manufacture a public sentiment against the opinions which have been expressed by these assemblages. It was scarcely necessary that my learned friend from Michigan should come in here and ask Senators to say that they were opposed to violence. It was scarcely necessary that we should be called upon seriously and soberly, here in the face of the American nation, to say that we had some respect for the rights of a foreigner when he comes among us. It was scarcely necessary for us to say that in this country none of us approve of that wild spirit of mobocracy which now and then overspreads particular localities. It was scarcely necessary that a resolution should have been introduced for these purposes; for however much of disaffection there may exist in particular quarters of the Union at certain times, the great body of the American people can see no hope for their happiness, no hope for their safety, either in person or property, except in the maintenance of the laws. And if there be any principle deeper seated in the American heart than any other, it is a determination to make this a Government of law—a Government of order—where the rights of the lowest as well as the highest are amply protected.

Now, Mr. President, it is a very great mistake to suppose that this gentleman is without remedy. It is a very great mistake to suppose that he has nothing here in America to rely upon except public sentiment. But, sir, I must say that if he were guilty of the crimes which are charged against him—and I do not pretend to express any opinion on that subject, for of this I know nothing—if he were guilty of even one half the crimes that have been charged by his countrymen against him, the people were right in expressing their opinions peaceably and decidedly against him. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. MASON. I call to order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART

in the chair.) The galleries must be kept in order, or they will be cleared at once.

Mr. WELLER. There is no one, I trust, who would sanction or approve of an act of violence. Whether this gentleman comes here in a political or a religious capacity, he comes as a distinguished foreigner. He is entitled to protection in his person and property. But, at the same time, you must concede to the American people the right of expressing their opinions about his conduct, either past or present; and therefore it is that I say that before I shall be prepared to assert that the people were wrong in assembling together and expressing their indignation—before I shall be prepared to pass upon that question at all, I must examine into the truth of the charges which have been made against him by his countrymen who were connected with the revolution of 1848. Before I shall be prepared to pass judgment of censure upon them, I must determine the question whether he be a bloody tyrant or not. I have already confessed that I am not sufficiently familiar with the history of that revolution to pass judgment upon this question. That a large portion of his countrymen now among us believe that he was guilty of the most atrocious acts of inhumanity, I have no doubt. Under the excitement very naturally produced by this belief, they have expressed their feelings with great warmth. In the city of Cincinnati I am sure the evidence abundantly establishes the fact that they intended no personal violence to the Nuncio, or the Archbishop, whose guest he was. No one in that section occupies a higher place in the affections of the people than the Archbishop—no one ranks higher as a Christian and gentleman. Their only object seems to have been to express in an impressive manner (but without violence) their disapprobation of the past conduct of the Nuncio.

Sir, there was, in my judgment, no necessity whatever for this discussion. The Federal Government has provided ample remedy for any outrages which may be committed against him, if he comes here in a political character. The President of the United States undoubtedly knows whether he comes here in a public or political character or not. If he comes here in a political character, he is amply protected by the laws which have already been enacted by the Congress of the United States. Upon the 30th of April, 1790, at the very beginning of this Government, it seems that Congress was careful to guard and protect the rights of foreign ambassadors, and ministers, and other public officers who might see proper to visit the country. Among the very first acts of the first Congress that convened under the Federal Constitution, an ample remedy was provided for any outrage that has been or may be committed upon this Nuncio, if he be a political character. What is that remedy? That act provides:

"SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall violate any safe conduct or passport, duly obtained and issued under the authority of the United States, or shall assault, strike, wound, imprison, or in any other manner infract the law of nations, by offering violence to the person of an ambassador, or other public minister, such person so offending, on conviction, shall be imprisoned not exceeding three years, and fined at the discretion of the court."

This is an act of Congress, a law of the land now; and if this gentleman be a political character, if he comes here as an ambassador, or as a minister, or as the Senator from Virginia says, "the guest of the nation," all the President has to do is to instruct the district attorney in the State of Maryland to institute criminal proceedings against those who have been guilty of this act. If he comes here as a public minister, the violence offered to his person at Baltimore is a direct violation of this act, and I hope they will be prosecuted and punished. Wherefore then the necessity of having the question brought in here? If he is a private individual he must rely upon the laws of the State for his protection. The Federal Government cannot interpose. The same law which protects my person and property must protect him.

I desire to be understood properly above all things. What I have said to-day is not to be understood as encouraging in the slightest degree a resort to violence in any case. No Senator here more strongly disapproves of that wild spirit which sometimes induces the people to take the law into their own hands, and apply their own remedies. I know of no case, I can imagine of no case, which would justify a subversion of the law—this must be maintained, or else there is an end to all government. The law provides an ample remedy in all cases which should be resorted to; but when the people see proper to meet together and express their opinions in a peaceable manner, without resorting to violence, I scarcely think that the Senate of the United States ought to be called upon to put it down. I know they cannot do it. You may undertake to manufacture public sentiment, but when did we become the manufacturers of public opinion? When was the Senate converted into a laboratory? When did the people intrust us with the sovereign power of speaking the public sentiment of America? From what section of the Constitution do we derive the authority to say to the people of this republican land that you shall not give free utterance to your opinions? I had supposed that we came here for the purpose of legislating, for the purpose of carrying out such measures as public sentiment and public opinion might indicate, and not for the purpose of dictating to the people what they should seek, and what they should do in a given case. They are entitled to their opinions; and, so far as I am concerned, they may express them in any way that suits their convenience. So long as they do not resort to force or violence, I have no complaints to utter.

The resolution was adopted.

ADMISSION ON THE FLOOR OF THE SENATE.

Mr. BADGER. I find that I undertook the other day an affair of a little more difficulty and complication than I was aware of at the time, when I proposed an amendment to the 48th rule for the admission of persons on the floor. Though my proposed amendments were printed and upon gentlemen's tables for a week, nobody attended to them, and I could get no assistance in remedying any oversight, except one or two amendments which were suggested by my friend from New York [Mr. Fish] at the time, and which were promptly introduced.

I find that since the resolution of amendment was adopted, there are two or three classes of public officers who have been left out, in respect to whom I think it is important and right that they should have admission to the floor. I will suggest, therefore, that, if the Senate will agree with me in that opinion, it will be proper for them to reconsider the vote adopting the resolution, in order that the names of those officers may be inserted. My object is to include among the persons entitled to admission, the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, the Mayor of Washington, the Heads of Bureaus, the Secretary and Members of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and the District Attorney of the United States for this District. I move, therefore, to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, in order that I may propose this amendment.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. BADGER. I now move to amend the resolution, by inserting the names of the officers whom I have mentioned.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHASE. I wish to move an amendment to the resolution, to carry out the original idea of the Senator from North Carolina, and after I have said a word, I think the Senate will agree to it. There is at this moment a very distinguished gentleman from Michigan, an ex-chancellor of that State, lately a member of the highest court in the State, and it is impossible, under the rule, to introduce him on the floor.

Mr. BADGER. I see the object; it is right, and I therefore move to amend by adding, after the provision for the admission of judges of courts of record, the words "and persons who have been chancellors or judges of the supreme or superior courts of any State."

Mr. CHASE. I would suggest that it would be preferable to use the words "chancellors or judges of the highest courts of law or equity."

Mr. BADGER. I accept that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I should like to understand the resolution as it now stands.

Mr. BADGER. If my friend from Arkansas will allow me, I will read the resolution as it is. As it now stands, it proposes to amend the 48th rule, so as to provide—

"48. The following persons and none others, shall be admitted on the floor of the Senate: Members of the House of Representatives and their Clerks, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Attorney General, and the Postmaster General; the private Secretary of the President, Chaplains to Congress, the Superintendent of the Public Printing, the Deputy Postmaster of the city of Washington, the Marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia, Judges of the United States, the Clerk of the Supreme Court, Foreign Ministers and their secretaries, Ministers of the United States to foreign Governments and their secretaries, and persons who have been such ministers or secretaries, the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, the Mayor of Washington, Heads of Bureaus, the Secretary and Members of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, the District Attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia, judges of the courts of record of the several States, and persons who have been chancellors or judges of the highest courts of law or equity of the several States," &c.

The amendment was adopted; and the resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

MISSING PAPERS.

Mr. JOHNSON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Chair appoint a special committee, whose duty it shall be to investigate the matter of the loss of the original papers in the case of Mark Bean and Richard H. Bean, heretofore presented and filed in the Senate, and report such remedy and relief in the premises as shall seem fit.

I wish to state in explanation, that when the papers in the case were presented in the Senate some three or four years ago, they were printed, and the application of the petitioners was reported upon favorably. During the last Congress, it appeared that the papers had been mislaid or lost, and the case has been again presented, and is before the Committee on Public Lands; but the papers have not yet been found. The papers which have been lost involve testimony that can never be supplied again; the testimony, for instance, of a man of such high and distinguished character as General Matthew Arbuckle, of the United States Army; and unless they are found, material damage will be done to the rights of a citizen of this country. I ask for the appointment of a committee which shall have authority to investigate the circumstances of that loss, and cause these papers to be found, if possible, or report such remedy to the Senate as shall seem fit in this individual case, and such provision, if any shall be deemed necessary, as will prevent the recurrence of such an unfortunate accident. It is certainly wrong that original papers, and important ones, too, should be subject to casualties of this character, by which the rights of those whom we represent can be utterly and entirely sacrificed. I ask the Senate to consider and adopt the resolution at this time.

Mr. BADGER. I would ask the Senator from Arkansas if all these papers have not been printed?

Mr. JOHNSON. They have been; and one of the measures which has suggested itself to my mind is, that we may be able to establish the identity of the printed copy, if we cannot find the originals, though it is not yet certain that the originals cannot be found.

Mr. BADGER. We always consider printed copies as authentic when they are printed by authority.

Mr. JOHNSON. That may be the practice here, but the House of Representatives will not accept our printed copies unless they are authenticated by the original papers.

Mr. BADGER. I was not aware of that. We always accept theirs very willingly.

The resolution was agreed to.

PAYMENT FOR THE CENSUS PRINTING.

The bill providing for the payment for printing the returns of the Seventh Census, and for the paper purchased for said printing, was read a second time; and

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate proceeded to consider it, as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to appropriate $15,909 93 for printing the returns of the Seventh Census, under the joint resolution of March 3, 1853, and $27,111 68 for the paper purchased for that printing.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to state, for the information of the Senate, that provision was made by law at the last session for printing the census returns. The Superintendent of the Public Printing was directed to have the census printed; but, by an oversight, as I suppose, no appropriation was made to pay, either for the paper or the printing, in the appropriation bill of the last session. The paper has been furnished under the contract; and the Public Printer has executed the work under his contract, and the several sums to which they are entitled are those named in the bill. I apprehend, therefore, it can receive no opposition in the Senate.

Mr. BRIGHT. For what census returns is this money to be paid?

Mr. HAMLIN. This bill proposes to pay for the quarto edition of the census which has already been published by direction of law. It is to pay for the paper which has been furnished under contract, and to pay for the printing which has been executed by the Public Printer under his contract.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then it has nothing to do with the order which was made a few days since, and on which the motion to reconsider was made?

Mr. HAMLIN. Nothing in the world.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time, and passed.

DISPATCHES OF A. DUDLEY MANN.

Mr. MASON. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to the Senate copies of all the dispatches written by A. Dudley Mann, or such portions thereof as may be deemed not inconsistent with the public interest, while he was employed in the diplomatic service of the United States, at or near the States of the Germanic Confederation, Hungary, and Switzerland, together with copies of the instructions under which he acted, and other communications made to him by the Department of State.

Mr. President, that is a mere call for information. I conceive that there can be no objection to it. I have seen most of these dispatches, and have read them with some care and a good deal of interest. I call for them for the information of the public, upon the political and commercial relations of the country. I therefore ask the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN NEW YORK.

Mr. FISH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill "to provide a place for holding of the courts of the United States in the southern district of New York, and for other purposes," which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. FISH. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to consent to the second and third reading and passage of the bill to-day; and I will state the reason why I make this request. On Thursday last the building in the city of New York, in which the United States courts, the district attorney's, and the marshal's offices are located, were destroyed by fire. There is, therefore, immediate necessity for some provision for the accommodation of those courts and their officers.

The first section of the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to provide suitable buildings for this purpose. The second section provides that process made returnable to the building which is now destroyed may be returned to the new building.

I have submitted the bill to the Secretary of the Interior, and it meets his approval. I may also state, it has been drawn up by the district attorney for the southern district of New York, with the approval of the district judge.

The bill was read a second time by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being proposed, the bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. JOHNSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Colonel Alexander G. Morgan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MILITARY POST IN IOWA.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a military post at or near Sargent's Bluffs, on the Missouri river, for the protection of the western frontier of the State of Iowa.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. BADGER submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That, for the residue of the present session, every Friday shall be set apart exclusively for the consideration of private bills on the general orders of the day; and that on the first Friday of every month no such bill shall be taken up to which there may be objection, or the consideration of which may lead to debate.

JOHN HAGAN.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to ask leave to withdraw the papers in the case of John Hagan, now on the files of the Senate. The purpose of withdrawing them is, that they may be sent to England for the purpose of being laid before the joint commission to settle claims between the two countries. It is desirable to withdraw the papers now, for it is necessary that they should be sent out by the next steamer.

Leave to withdraw the papers was granted.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. BRIGHT, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the message received from the House of Representatives on Thursday last, announcing the appointment of a select committee of nine on the part of the House, to join such committee as might be appointed by the Senate, to consider the propriety of amending the Constitution as to the manner of electing the President and Vice President of the United States; and it was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, January 23, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER laid before the House communications from the War Department, transmitting, in compliance with the resolution of the House of the 16th instant, letters from the Colonel of Engineers, inclosing the reports of the surveys of Taunton river and New Bedford harbor, and of Scituate harbor and North river, all in the State of Massachusetts, and explaining the delay in furnishing them to Congress.

Mr. CROCKER. I move that both of the communications be laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

S. S. PRENTISS, DECEASED.

Mr. HUNT. I offer, with the unanimous consent of the House, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be directed to pay to the widow of Sergeant S. Prentiss, late of Mississippi, any balance which may be due him under a resolution of the House, passed February 6, 1838, providing for pay and mileage while contesting a seat in this House.

Mr. HUNT said: Mr. Speaker, in 1838 the election of Messrs. Gholson and Claiborne, who occupied seats in the House as Representatives from Mississippi, was contested by Messrs. Word and Prentiss. On the 6th of February, of that year, the contestants were allowed the same compensation, per diem and mileage, allowed to members of Congress, computing the per diem from the day of presenting their claim to seats in the House. (Journal of the House, page 365.) Mr. Word received his full pay; but Mr. Prentiss drew only a portion of his—leaving a balance of $736, as appears from an official memorandum still standing to his credit. The object of the present resolution is to cause that balance to be paid to Mrs. Prentiss, the widow of S. S. Prentiss, deceased.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Prentiss was well known to many of the members of this House. He was a man of extraordinary abilities, of extensive and varied attainments, and of many amiable and noble qualities. He was a scholar, a poet, a wit, a lawyer, an orator, and a statesman of respectable standing.

While a member of the House, he was one of its chief ornaments—an attractive and fascinating public speaker—sensible, full of knowledge, and with an imagination ever teeming with bright images and apt illustrations. Indeed, sir, what Doctor Johnson happily said of Goldsmith may well be applied to Mr. Prentiss: Nihil non tetigit quod non ornavit. As a gentleman, he was the soul of honor, brave, generous, kind-hearted, truthful, chivalric, affectionate, true to his friends, and faithful to his country.

Like most of the sons of genius, he was careless about money; and he died, as I am informed by the gentleman who requested me to take charge of this matter, in straitened circumstances. His wife and little children reside in the district which I now have the honor to represent. With these remarks I submit the resolution. Its adoption will be an act of justice, and, I am sorry to believe, a measure of needed relief. The form of the resolution was suggested by an experienced member, the honorable chairman of the Committee on Elections.

I move, sir, the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I desire to ask the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] what Mr. Prentiss it is which the resolution has reference to.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Prentiss, of Mississippi.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I desire to be informed why it was that Mr. Prentiss had not received his compensation and per diem allowance before his death?

Mr. HUNT. If the honorable gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Davis] had attended to my remarks, he would have heard me give the reason. It is this: Like most of the sons of genius, he was regardless of money.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I object—

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] suspend for a moment? The gentleman from New Jersey addressed the Chair, and I understood him to object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SKELTON. I object to it, unless it is referred to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. HUNT. I have but one word more to say.

The SPEAKER. The Chair considers that the resolution is objected to.

Mr. HUNT. Oh, no! the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SKELTON] does not object; there is no objection. The question now is about the adoption of the resolution. I move that it be adopted.

Mr. SKELTON. I object to the resolution being introduced and put upon its passage, but I have no objection to its being introduced and referred to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. HUNT. I hope that the House will not take that course, which is unnecessary. I will observe, by way of explanation—

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] yield the floor to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON?]

Mr. HUNT declined yielding the floor.

Mr. HUNT. I am only going to make a few more remarks. Before I introduced the resolution I consulted the honorable chairman of the Committee on Elections—a gentleman of experience—and on his kind suggestion I drew up the resolution which I have presented in the form in which it has been offered to the House. An examination was made, too, at his request, to ascertain the amount due to Mr. Prentiss; but we agreed that it would be better to let the Clerk, on reference, ascertain the facts. I hope gentlemen will be satisfied with this explanation, and that they will take the course in reference to this petition which the House may choose.

Mr. STANTON. I hold that there is no necessity, for that reason, to refer the entire matter to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understood the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SKELTON] to have objected to the resolution unless it be referred. Then there is an objection, and, of course, the resolution is not debatable.

Mr. SKELTON. I objected unless it be referred to the Committee on Elections.

The SPEAKER. The proposition to refer to the Committee on Elections is then pending, the objection being made.

Mr. STANTON. It seems to me that it is too plain a matter to need reference to the Committee on Elections. It is a mere matter of calculation, which can be done as well by the Clerk as the committee. The House, by a resolution passed about the time of the pendency of the contested-election case referred to, provided for the payment to Mr. Prentiss, who was one of the contestants, of his mileage and per diem for the time he was here engaged in prosecuting his claim, which I think was some forty-two days. The honorable gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] brought to me the certificate of the Treasurer of the United States, showing that Mr. Prentiss had drawn only twelve hundred dollars of the amount due him. The whole amount, as shown by the records of the Treasury and the Journal of the House, was some nineteen hundred dollars, leaving a balance of seven hundred dollars and upwards due Mr. Prentiss under the resolution. The case is exceedingly plain, and I thought it unnecessary to refer the matter to the Committee on Elections; and that it was better to provide, by a resolution, that the Clerk of the House should ascertain and pay over the balance to the widow, whose necessities have induced her to apply for what her husband either did not know he was entitled to, or was too indifferent about money to demand in his life time.

Mr. SAGE. I move the previous question.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. The main question is upon the reference of the resolution.

The question was taken, and there were, upon a division—ayes 50, noes 74.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the adoption of the resolution, and being put it was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was agreed to.

LAND LAWS OF UTAH.

Mr. BERNHISEL, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be instructed to inquire into the expediency of extending the provision of the Oregon land law over the Territory of Utah, and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBORS AND RIVERS.

Mr. FULLER, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read for information:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to furnish this House with copies of all contracts made, and correspondence subsequently, with the chief of the Bureau of Topographical Engineers, for furnishing materials of wood and stone for improving the harbors and rivers of Lake Michigan, under and by virtue of the act "making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers," approved August 30, 1852.

The SPEAKER. The resolution being a call upon the President for information, it lies over for one day.

Mr. FULLER. Will it be in order to move to suspend the rules, to allow me to introduce the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order to make such a motion.

Mr. HUNT. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution I offered was adopted, and to lay that motion upon the table.

The question was taken upon Mr. HUNT's motion, and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. FULLER. I now move to suspend the rules, for the purpose of introducing the resolution which I offered a moment since, and which has been already read by the Clerk.

The question was taken on Mr. FULLER's motion, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the rules were suspended. The question then being upon the adoption of Mr. FULLER's motion, it was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined, and found correctly enrolled, a bill of the following title:

"An act explanatory of an act entitled 'An act for the relief of Benjamin S. Roberts;'"

Which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask the consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a marine hospital at Memphis, Tennessee.

The question was then taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask leave to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire what legislation is necessary in relation to the residue of the land lying in the Virginia military district, in the State of Ohio; and that they report to this House by bill or otherwise.

The question was then taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BENSON. I ask leave of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a Bureau of Agriculture, to be connected with the Department of the Interior, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

The question was then taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the propriety of providing, by law, for holding semi-annual terms of the Federal courts for the eastern district of Virginia, in and for the city of Alexandria; and that that committee report by bill or otherwise.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STRAUB. I ask leave of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be, and it is hereby, instructed to report by bill authorizing the Postmaster General to purchase, establish, and build suitable grounds and post offices in each and every city, town, or place in the United States, at the cost and expense of the General Government: Provided, That the cost and expense of any one of such grounds and offices shall not exceed the sum of _____ dollars: And provided, further, That the income or profit on postages to the postmaster of such city, town, or place shall amount to or exceed the sum of _____ dollars annually.

Mr. HAMILTON. That proposes absolute instructions, and I am opposed to it. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I submit that the resolution is not yet before the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has not been received by the House, and the motion to lay it upon the table is not, therefore, at this time in order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

[Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. JONES. This is not resolution day, and unless we go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union we shall spend the whole day with motions to suspend the rules.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated the business before the committee to be the consideration of certain resolutions offered by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] for the reference of the President's annual message, upon which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WADE] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. WADE. When the committee were last in session they had just gone through with matters and things in general in the State of New York. They had witnessed a contest between the Hards and Softs, which had created so much excitement as to make it impossible to get a hearing upon any other subject.

I had myself made up my mind upon the merits of that controversy, as I presumed every gentleman upon this floor had done, and I hoped that would have been the conclusion of the matter. The discussion seemed to assume about the form of what lawyers would call a "proceeding by bill and cross bill"—the "cross bill" being very cross. [Laughter.] In my humble judgment, both parties succeeded admirably in establishing their title to relief. It is my wish, however, that they may not get the relief they mutually pray for, and which the testimony in the case shows them richly entitled to. The consequences of such relief might be very unpleasant.

But it is not my intention to go into this matter upon the present or any other occasion. I have no objection to their continuing this "Kilkenny cat" fight until they make way with each other, not leaving even the "tips of their tails," if they are so disposed. [Laughter.]

My purpose to-day is to speak in reference to a controversy which has excited considerable attention, not only in the district which I have the honor to represent, but all over the Union. I mean the recent difficulties in reference to railroads in the borough of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania. I shall examine and present to the committee, for a very short time, the merits of that controversy, and I do it with the more confidence because the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] a few days since informed the House that there had been an interruption in the transportation of freight and passengers at that place.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania admitted the fact that the business of freighting, and the carrying of passengers, on one of the most important thoroughfares in the western States had been, for several weeks, entirely interrupted, so far as railroad carriage is concerned; and he submitted the question as to who was to blame for this interruption of the commerce of the country. Whoever casts his eye over the map of the middle and western States, and especially those bordering upon the northwestern lakes, cannot but see that that thoroughfare is, and must be—unless obstructed by lawless violence, or by the rights, real or pretended, of States through which it passes—one of the most important channels of inland commerce in the western country. You will see, by an examination of the map, that that railroad lies alongside of the southern shore of Lake Erie, the navigation of which is for nearly six months of the year obstructed by ice. Now, sir, the commerce and travel along this line of railroad ought not to be subject to the caprice of a lawless mob, or the selfish legislation of a State intended to destroy or divert it from its natural channel. My constituents are, perhaps, more interested in this matter than the people of any other portion of the western country. I have received letter after letter from those constituents, stating that they have sick friends whom they desire to bring to their homes, but have not been able to do so on account of this lawless mob spirit at the borough of Erie.

Others of my constituents—men of wealth—men who have passed triumphantly through the most trying commercial revolutions, have been compelled to bow to this infernal spirit, and yield to poverty, from mere inability to perform contracts of transportation over this mob beleaguered territory of Pennsylvania.

These wrongs are insufferable, and if Congress and the Federal Government are powerless to redress them, then I would appeal to the public opinion of the States—that opinion which is stronger than law—of more virtue than statutory enactments.

The history of the difficulty is this: In 1848, the Legislature of Ohio was applied to by the people of Pennsylvania, for the charter of a railroad that should connect the city of Pittsburg and Central Ohio. That charter was promptly granted by the Legislature of Ohio, giving gentlemen from Philadelphia and Pittsburg, or whoever else in the State of Pennsylvania they might desire to take stock in such a road, a charter for a railroad extending through the entire breadth of the State of Ohio, from its eastern to its western line, through the very heart of the State.

This road has been a great highway, grooming under its burden of the great staples of Central Ohio; and Pennsylvania has enjoyed, without the slightest hindrance or murmur from citizens of Ohio, the immense wealth drawn from this most productive commerce. The direct effect of this road, it was known at the time its charter was granted, would be to divert the produce of that part of Ohio from the Ohio canal, and from the railroads leading to the lake, and conduct it to Pittsburg and Philadelphia. While Pennsylvania was asking of the Legislature of Ohio a charter for this Ohio and Pennsylvania railroad, at the session of 1848, the people of Ohio, at the same session of the Pennsylvania Legislature, were likewise soliciting a railroad charter across the county and through the borough of Erie, to the New York State line—a distance of about forty miles. The two charters were granted nearly simultaneously by the two Legislatures.

This Erie railroad charter was obtained by the people of Ohio, in order to supply the link of railroad communication, then in course of construction, from the Mississippi to the Atlantic.

All the States but Pennsylvania promptly granted charters for this great thoroughfare. But Pennsylvania was hesitating, reluctant, and, as the sequel will show, shamelessly treacherous. This charter, had Pennsylvania not faltered with her plighted faith, would have been all that the people of Ohio and the West would have asked or desired. It would have conducted passengers and property through the infatuated borough of Erie, without even the poor and pitiful excuse they now interpose for their lawless violence.

As I have said, these two acts—the charter from Pennsylvania to cross the county of Erie, and the charter from Ohio to cross that State—were simultaneous, and designed to be mutual concessions from the one State to the other; and for their mutual accommodation they were to compromise—"prove measures"—by which the rights and interests of the two States would be made mutual and perpetual. Now, Mr. Chairman, what should a great and magnanimous Commonwealth have done in such a case as this? Get what she wanted, secure her own ends, and then "back out?" But Pennsylvania did just that—she repealed the charter she had granted to Ohio, and thus began by treachery what has ended in mob rule and murder. She will get her reward—the day of retribution is approaching, and is now even at the door. Had an unfortunate vagabond, to save himself, or a wife, or child from starvation, obtained a loaf of bread or a bag of corn, by pretenses as false and fraudulent as Pennsylvania obtained her Ohio charter, he would have been a fortunate miscreant if he had not received for it free lodgings in a dungeon. But what was the conduct of Ohio towards her sister State under such provocations? Did she retaliate? Did she return evil for evil? Not at all. She felt herself wronged—outraged, by this conduct of Pennsylvania. But she did not retaliate, and I hope she will not. Thus far she has endured the insult and the injury, in the firm belief that the good sense and enlightened policy of Pennsylvania's true men, will, ere long, redeem her character from this deep reproach.

Still Ohio is not insensible to the gratuitous stab aimed at her vital commercial interests by Pennsylvania. While the dishonest measure of repealing the Erie railroad charter was pending before the Legislature of Pennsylvania, Ohio remonstrated.

These resolutions, which I have read, were adopted in 1849; and I may be permitted here to say, that the State of Pennsylvania, in her public laws, has not printed or published the act by which it chartered the railroad through the county of Erie. She shrunk from it when she came to make up her records. But she could not repeal the law without reciting the law repealed; and but for this, we should have no evidence on Pennsylvania records that she had ever granted such a charter.

But here is the repealing law, and I read it for the information of this committee—

Mr. GROW. I am unwilling to interrupt the gentleman from Ohio. But the reason the law is not on the statute-books is that the Commonwealth imposes a tax on the publication of the acts of the Legislature, and this tax was not paid.

Mr. WADE. I am glad to relieve Pennsylvania on this point of not recording the Erie railroad charter, but I shall not retract my charge against her of bad faith in repealing that charter. May God forgive her for the rest. She has had enough besides to account for, as I will show before I have done. I shall now read the act. [Here Mr. WADE read the repealing act, which recited the charter and declared it repealed. The act bears date March 9, 1849; Pennsylvania laws of 1849, page 137.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says it (the Erie railroad charter act) did not receive the signature of the Governor. The law was handed to your Governor, and he neglected to return it with his objections, and it thereby became a law; and you were obliged to resort to an act of the Legislature before you could get rid of it. The gentleman [Mr. GROW] says that what I have stated implies bad faith in the State of Pennsylvania. It implies no such thing; it proves it—I will not call it a Punic faith, lest I should be found slandering an extinct people. No, sir; it is Pennsylvaniaic faith.

Now, in this violated faith of Pennsylvania began all the disgraceful riots which have made the borough of Erie a hissing and a reproach through the length and breadth of the land. Ohio has stood manfully, as she always stood, through prosperity and adversity, redeeming her faith, whether plighted to unscrupulous States or to those who have put faith in her sense of pecuniary obligations. In this course of honor I trust she will ever keep; but when she is made the victim of treachery, and then assailed because she has been defrauded, she will not scruple to make her assailants feel at least that she can despise meanness as heartily as she honors fair dealing.

It is the State of Pennsylvania, and not the miserable vagabonds about the borough of Erie, that I arraign here. Let us see what your own Governor has said. Let us here understand what is meant by the State of Pennsylvania by these efforts to dam up the commerce of the great West. She contends, that, inasmuch as she lies across the pathway of the people and commerce between the Atlantic and the great West, she stands there as the dog in the manger—though I do not wish to speak evil of that dog [laughter]—she stands there to make the most of her position. She has tried to do it, ay, the "Court awards it, and the law doth give it;"

and she stands in the position of the "Shylock" State of the Union.

Let us hear what Governor Bigler, in his last annual message, says to the Legislature on this subject:

"The Legislature should render this important link of commerce between the sea-board and the great West subservient to the interests of the people of Pennsylvania."

"It so happens that Pennsylvania holds the key in this important link of commerce between the East and the West; and I most unhesitatingly say, that where no principle of amity or commerce is to be violated, it is the right and duty of the State to turn her natural advantages to the promotion of the views and welfare of her own people. It may be that neighboring States, possessing similar natural advantages, would give them away for our benefit, but I have not been able to discover any part in their former policy to justify such a conclusion."

No one can take exception to that, if she does it in a legitimate way, and does not undertake to divert the commerce of the country from its natural channel into by and forbidden paths, that she may enrich herself alone at the expense of her neighbors. The Governor entertains strange notions of the rights and obligations of the States towards each other. Such views as these would probably have done no discredit to the "Governor of an island" in the middle ages. But that any man, who ever thought an inch in advance of his nose should dream that, at this day, any State or people, simply from their favorable location, could carry on commerce which should be profitable on their own side only passes comprehension. But it is this stupid and dishonest view that has tainted the legislation and the policy of that State. It is this fatal and stupid selfishness of the State which has emboldened the mob at Erie to expect impunity in their lawless course. This hostility to commerce, on the part of that State, is suffered to be the path of wealth. The great West is to be invited, nay wooed, to the lap of Pennsylvania by "apostolic kicks and blows;" the Governor's idea of wooing and winning commerce to his State having been probably gathered from the method the feminine pig takes to woo her mate—by righting.

This is precisely the course pointed out by the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania, as I have shown you from his own declarations, in his annual message to their present Legislature.

We of the west only ask to pass peaceably over her territory, and to take our merchandise to such markets as seems most profitable. If the markets of Pennsylvania are more inviting than those of other States, no doubt she will get our trade; but if she only seeks to force our trade into her markets, when these are not as profitable to us as the markets of other States, this then, is sheer dishonesty, of which Pennsylvania, or any other State, ought to be ashamed. The plea to justify the course she has pursued, is, that other States would not be more honorable than Pennsylvania herself. But is that the policy which ought to characterize the conduct of one sister State towards another? Is it just towards States of yet unsoiled honor to assume gratuitously that such States would be as devoid of honesty and good neighborhood as the Governor of Pennsylvania endeavors to incite his own State to pursue? This is the bottle argument of him who "holds the cup to his neighbor's lip to make him drunkard." "If I do not sell the poor man the poison, some other scoundrel will, therefore I may as well be the scoundrel myself, seeing that it is profitable." Whatever the law—law made by themselves—will permit one man or State to do to another, seems right and proper to be done, in the light in which Governor Bigler looks at these most important matters.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I appeal to every gentleman upon this floor, if the worst man, the very worst neighbor you can dwell by, is not the man who is eternally insisting upon his naked legal rights to be enforced with all their sharpest corners? Let such a man be wealthy, and he is a tyrant—let him be poor, and he will be dishonest, and ever tempted to gamble with the law. All such men are full of crotchets and tricks, designed to overreach and defraud in such a shape as to evade legal responsibility, but regardless of justice or honor. Such a man is an unmitigated curse to the neighborhood compelled to endure his presence. Through his influence and example, his neighborhood will be by the ears, and peace and good fellowship flee his hated presence.

The same thing holds good with States as well as individuals. This is the difficulty with Pennsylvania under her present rulers. They have the bond for the "pound of flesh nearest the heart" of her sister States, and, say they, "we will take the full weight of it; and we don't know but other States would do the like by us."

Mr. Chairman, this wretched policy is as profitless as it is dishonest. It will, it must, drive from Pennsylvania more trade than she can win thereby; and already, I rejoice to say, she begins to feel it in the indignant reprobation of the people East and West, and in the withdrawal of business men from contact with those regardless of their neighbors' rights.

But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] desires still to justify Pennsylvania, and he backs the reasoning of the Governor in his beautiful theory of gauge breaking. But I will attend to this theory presently.

Again, it is argued by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the line of railroad from the Ohio line was laid without warrant of law, and that the people of Erie had the right to tear up the railroad track and burn its bridges.

But it so happens that not a blow has been struck by the mob at this part of the road. Legal or illegal, they seem to be perfectly willing that the people and the wealth of the great West should go eastwardly as far as the borough of Erie. But "thus far and no further," seems to be the fiat of the omnipotent vagabonds of that ill-starred hamlet. Still it is not true that the charter of the Franklin Canal Company was alone used by the railroad company, as one would be led to infer from what fell from the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The canal company was authorized by an act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania to construct a railroad from the north end of their chartered canal to the lake, by such course as the company might choose. There was no limitation as to time of completion, nor any points on the route to be observed. And though I do not propose to discuss the legality of that charter, I have yet reason to believe that a number of the most eminent legal gentlemen of the State advised the company before laying this road that the charter was legal.

But this is an evasion of the question at issue. The people of Erie knew the road was being laid, and neither they nor any one else, so far as we are advised, even hinted that all was not right—that there was no charter. No, they waited until the road, at great expense, was put in full operation; and after leaving it in peace for two or three years, why, as by magic, it was discovered that Erie, the borough of Erie, was outraged by this illegal railroad, and so all its drunken and sober inhabitants are let loose, not upon the illegal railroad, but on one of the legality of which no manner of doubt has ever been entertained by any one. They do not touch the illegal road, by which the wealth of the West is brought to their doors; not at all. There is evidently method in their madness.

The justification, then, that the people of Erie are doing what they have a legal right to do is fatal on the plea got up for them. But it is groundless on another principle. Neither in Pennsylvania nor elsewhere, where law and order rule, are men permitted to take the law into their own hands, much less are they permitted to set the orders, judgments, and officers of the law at defiance.

But this the Erie mobs have done with perfect impunity, and to interpose a justification in their behalf is to justify mob law. No lawyer can be found, one might presume, to stand up and contend that the people of Erie have acted legally; and if such notions prevail in Pennsylvania, the sooner they are eradicated the better will it be for the honor and peace of the State.

But when one justification after another fails, still others, such as they be, are brought forward. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] attempts to justify the mobocrats on the ground that they were vindicating the Pennsylvania gauge law. The Governor, and some gentlemen in this House, seem all of a sudden struck with a chivalrous purpose of preserving the sanctity of railroad gauges. But, unfortunately for those gentlemen, the Legislature of their own State, at its last session, authorized any railroad company in the State to construct its road upon, or alter it to, such gauge as seemed right in their own eyes.

Under this law, the Erie and Northeast railroad commenced changing its gauge to that of the Franklin Canal Company's gauge. It was under this law, also, that the Erie mobs commenced, and commenced for the sole purpose of preventing the gauge of this road being changed under the law, and for no other purpose under heaven. The mobs, therefore, commenced in sheer wanton violence, and it is an affront to common sense to attribute them to any other cause, saving only the known impunity they would enjoy from the connivance and encouragement of the authorities of the State.

This will appear in a still stronger light, and the State will appear more clearly at the bottom of it, when it is known to the committee that, after the mob spirit began to develop itself at Erie, the most advantageous terms were offered by the railroads to the citizens. The Franklin Canal road was to be extended to the harbor of Erie, and also south from the borough, to the north line of Mercer county, Pennsylvania, a distance of about sixty miles, so as to meet a line in the progress of construction from Pittsburg to Erie.

The Erie and Northeast railroad were also to extend their road to Erie harbor, and to construct a road on a six foot gauge from Erie to the State line east, in the direction of "Little Valley," so as to connect with another road in progress of construction to "Little Valley"—thus opening a direct six-foot-gauge line from New York city—and both roads were to construct their "repair shops" at Erie. Thus, law, order, fraternal feelings, and the utmost pecuniary advantages are not sufficient to quell the mob spirit. "The hand of Joab was in it." The State, the merchants of Philadelphia and Pittsburg were in it; and it is worse than idle—nay, it is one of the greatest scandals ever circulated against so quiet a State as Pennsylvania to pretend that she could not quell that Erie mob. Her "could not" was that she would not. From this conclusion there is no escape.

Pennsylvania has a motive in interrupting the communication along this Lake Shore railroad, especially during the winter. During the season of lake navigation, the freight and many passengers find their way to their destinations by steamboat and sail vessel. Then Pennsylvania cannot interrupt; but the winter business is done solely on the railroad, and by them this commerce finds its way to New York, Boston, &c. Hence the Erie mob. Hence the message of Governor Bigler. It is to divert this great trade into channels prepared by Pennsylvania—to elevate the vast products of the West over the Alleghany Mountains, instead of permitting them to go to markets to the northward of this range. Hence the tears of gentlemen from Pennsylvania.

Now, the Alleghany mountains, as you approach the lake, interpose no such obstructions to transportation, and therefore Boston, Albany, and New York receive, as they naturally should be permitted to receive, the wealth of the lake country. Pennsylvania is so situated that, by improving her condition, as she may and ought to do, she can get all from the West that she can dispose of. She may make another railroad from Pittsburg to Philadelphia, and she may tunnel her mountains at their base, and the West will supply her with all she can provide the means of conveying, and still leave a surplus behind for other markets, tenfold greater than she will have received; so that her cupidity may be gratified, if she will but put herself in a position to receive the wealth of the western country. But for her to undertake this little, petty warfare upon the commerce of the lake country in winter is unworthy of the State of Pennsylvania.

I know that she will repel the harsh things I have said of her. I know that she will reform these abuses; that she will not permit the avarice of a few misguided and reckless men to tarnish her own fair character; but that she will take her place in the sisterhood of States, remembering that the highest interest of all is to observe good faith, to carry out the purposes and intents of the Constitution, and not compel us to call for the interposition of Federal power to open communications between State and State, or to keep them open.

But, if I am mistaken in this, I may be permitted to say, that no State owes more than Pennsylvania to the kindness and good feeling of Congress. She has been the pet of the Federal Government; she has been stimulated by protection to an excess that no other State has; ay, these stimulants have been administered until her constitution has been undermined—I do not mean her State constitution, but her moral constitution. And now she wishes the further protection, which will be thrown around her by hedging up the highways of communication between the East and West, and to bind and loose at her pleasure.

Never was there a more mistaken policy than this narrow one which Pennsylvania exhibits. She cannot accomplish what she attempts. She will raise against this encroaching spirit the entire population of the northwestern States, that population which is increasing at a ratio unexampled in the history of the world; and whose wealth, too, is increasing even faster than the population. An unobstructed intercourse is demanded, as well by the interest of Pennsylvania as that of Ohio, or Indiana, or Illinois, or New York. She cannot do without it. I ask intelligent gentlemen from Pennsylvania, Have you obtained all that you need from the West? Will you never need any further railroad accommodations from the State of Ohio? Is the measure of your prosperity full, and do you desire now to have all further comities between us discontinued, and all further good offices forever forgotten? Do you wish to create this ill-blood between the two States? For I can say here, from the most earnest convictions of my own heart, that the course of petty mischief, vexation, fraud, and bad neighborhood, which has characterized the course of that State since this Erie villany broke loose, will lead to collisions which will be mourned over and deprecated by every good citizen in these United States. There is a feeling there which cannot be repressed. We will, however, first try all peaceable means. We will call upon our western fellow-citizens to unite with us of Ohio to rebuke this low, and, I may say, nasty selfishness; and I here make an appeal to the gentlemen that represent the interests of the West to take this matter into serious consideration, and let us ask ourselves what right the State of Pennsylvania has to the protection of her iron and coal while she disregards so recklessly the rights and interests of the States we represent? Let us say mildly but firmly to that State that she has no prescriptive right to the protection of her peculiar interests while she sets at naught the peculiar interests of our own States.

I put these questions, not as threats—for I am incapable of acting myself from any motive generated by such a cause, and would not insult another with a motive which could not influence myself—but it seems to me that we owe it to our constituents to devise effectual means to protect their interests against the cupidity of the State of Pennsylvania.

How long shall we be taxed for all the iron that we use, in order to gratify Pennsylvania in her efforts to obstruct the commerce and prosperity of the eastern and the southern country; for all, both West, and North, and South, are interested in this matter? How long shall Pennsylvania enjoy a monopoly of the trade in mineral coal, by the imposition of a most absurd and extravagant duty, making the poor suffer from the chilling blasts of winter to gratify her avarice, when it is well known to all commercial men that coal can be imported from Europe at a price about two thirds of what it is furnished for by the people of Pennsylvania? How long shall the State of Pennsylvania be indulged in these things, so grossly, grievously unjust? Did you not hear, when the question was up in reference to suspending the collection of the duty on railroad iron for a term of years, how unanimously the representatives of that State voted in opposition to that measure—a measure only remotely looking at the tariff on iron. So unanimous were they, that a member within my hearing said that it was the first time within his recollection that Pennsylvania voted with a perfect unanimity upon any question.

No, sir, she is jealous of her own interests, with an "exceeding great jealousy." But she is willing to touch the interests of her sister States at the curial nerve. She cares nothing about it, and she supposes apparently that this selfish policy will be endured, and that no retaliation or resistance will be attempted.

I would not counsel retaliation, because it is wrong; but then it may be a duty for us so to arrange our legislation as to protect ourselves, if Pennsylvania will not listen to reason. Let her adjust her difficulties with the railroad companies by law. Let her abide by the decision of the courts if she wishes to receive the courtesies and the kindnesses of the people of other States. Let her not undertake to legislate solely for her own benefit. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to press this subject. I have only stated what I thought requisite to satisfy the committee that Pennsylvania is in the wrong; that there is no justification for the course she has pursued in relation to the conduct of the citizens of Erie.

But, sir, who does not know that this is not the lawless outbreak of a few men and women? No! I treat this committee to look at this matter in its true light. Suppose the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania and its judiciary, had spoken the language of peaceful and order-loving men to these lawless vagabonds who have been working their mischiefs at Erie, and said to them, "the State of Pennsylvania has a character to maintain and protect. She must abide by her laws, and she will abide by them." If they had thus spoken, instead of speaking in the language of vituperation and accusation, in the language of denunciation and violence, in the language of cupidity and license to these people of Erie, there would have been none of these outrages, even to the loss of life. No sir, it only needed an honest, out-spoken, earnest rebuke from Philadelphia and Harrisburg, and all had been quiet; the law would have taken its course, and all things gone on, as every good citizen must desire they should.

From Philadelphia to Pittsburg, and from Pittsburg to Harrisburg, the voice of the public press—if it has not stimulated the lawless violences at Erie—has spoken in language that left no room to doubt that they would meet no punishment from the authorities of the State of Pennsylvania. But they talked about commercial interests, and ridiculed the losses and ruin to the West by reason of the breaking up of this great thoroughfare.

I did not intend to be half so long as I have. I simply desired to bring the matter before the committee, to disabuse the public mind of the belief that anybody is to blame in this lawlessness excepting the citizens of Erie, encouraged by the State of Pennsylvania.

I think I have done so. I think I have established the fact, that from her own statute-books she has been regardless of the rights of the people of Ohio; that she has acted in bad faith to the people and government of Ohio; that she is now enjoying to the fullest extent the benefits of the beneficent legislation of Ohio in giving her a full and free charter for a railroad for near two hundred miles in length, extending from the east to the west side of the State; and have shown that she has obliterated from her statute-book the charter of the Erie railroad, made on the sole consideration of her receiving the charter of the road above alluded to, and is in the full enjoyment of all the great benefits she is deriving from it, while she has most unjustifiably—nay, most fraudulently, withheld the consideration she solemnly agreed to give for this most valuable privilege.

I will examine here for a single moment, with the indulgence of the committee, the question as to the breaking of gauges. Why should there not be a break of gauge at Erie? The borough of Erie, in 1850, contained between five and six thousand inhabitants; the city of Buffalo, at the same time, contained forty-two thousand. There is not another railroad leading to or from Erie, except those about which this controversy has arisen. Erie is no place for the distribution of freight or passage. There is no occasion for it. Men who want to stop at Erie have an opportunity to do so. Freight consigned to Erie is unloaded there; and this course of business would have continued had they submitted to a change of gauge, according to the provisions of their own laws.

The effect of a break of gauge at Erie is to compel a transfer of freight, passengers, and baggage destined to any place beyond. All the vast products of the West carried over that route and not wanted for the consumption of the five thousand inhabitants of Erie, are in the sheer spirit of wantonness to be shipped and reshipped at Erie and Northeast. There is no occasion for it, but merely to increase the expense, and to gratify the huxters of Erie. Governor Bigler, in his message, says this is perfectly right, and that Pennsylvania is only availing herself of her situation to do all she can for herself.

What right has Pennsylvania, I ask, when any one desires to go to Albany, for instance, what right has Pennsylvania, in the exercise of fraternal feelings and good citizenship, to say to him, "You shall stop and shift your baggage at Erie, and have some peanuts if you need?" [Laughter.] What right has Pennsylvania to torment us with an eternal repetition of peanuts and ginger-pop? What right has a Governor of a sovereign State to reason, or rather, unreason, in that way, in the face of rational men? Everything which Pennsylvania should have she will have, by suffering cars to pass through her borders unobstructed. Many persons desire to stop at Erie, and they will stop there. If they do not desire to do so, why should they be compelled to stop? It is a great inconvenience and annoyance to which western commerce is subjected in being compelled to shift from car to car all her live-stock and all her dead merchandise, if I may so call it, for no good purpose except to extort money from the pockets of the people of the West.

This will be the case, and gentlemen cannot indulge the hope that this thing will be permitted to stop here. The commerce of the West cannot and ought not to be interrupted by this annoyance. The Federal Government has undoubtedly the right to regulate commerce between the States. She has the power to open post roads through the States, and no State ought so to conduct as to call for the exercise of this her power. I believe that the good sense and shrewdness of Pennsylvania will see that it is for her interest, as well as for the interests of other States, to relinquish the line of policy which she has pursued, and when a charter be profitably granted through her State, that she will faithfully adhere to her own laws granting such charters, and permitting her sister States to enjoy the uninterrupted right of passing through her territory, as their interests may require.

Mr. ROBBINS, (interrupting.) I desire merely to ask the gentleman from Ohio to allow me leave to read an extract from a paper I hold in my hand, in reference to this matter of the railroad gauges.

Mr. WADE. I do not know what the extract to which the gentleman alludes contains, and my time is near up, and I may not have the opportunity to reply.

Mr. ROBBINS was understood to say that it was from a Philadelphia paper from which he proposed to read.

Mr. WADE. I cannot help what may be said by the Pennsylvania papers of the gauge law. I am stating the whole facts which are involved in this unhappy controversy. I am stating the facts which are susceptible of the most unquestionable proof, and they establish the fact that the State of Pennsylvania, for the purpose of gratifying the eastern and central portion of her citizens, has withheld most extensive benefits, such as I have before set forth, which the railroads were early to confer, and which would have been conferred, had it not been the determination of the State to sacrifice the substantial citizens of Erie to the cupidity of those other portions of the State; and long will the people of Erie have reason to curse the short-sighted policy which led them to resolve themselves into a mob, to do the destructive and dirty work of Philadelphia, to the ruin of themselves—

Here the Chairman's hammer fell, the hour to which the gentleman was entitled under the rule, having expired.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania, having obtained the floor, said: As a representative upon this floor from the State of Pennsylvania, I feel bound by a sense of duty to say a word upon the subject of this Erie controversy; not that I have any desire of saying anything in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Ohio, who has just taken his seat, for I could not reply in language like that used by him without transgressing the rules of the House; but in what I shall say, I shall regard only what is proper for me as a representative in part of the State of Pennsylvania, and as a member of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States.

I say again that I do not intend to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Ohio. I am satisfied to leave his speech to the House for their judgment, without any rejoinder. I desire that the interest of the State of Pennsylvania in these Erie squabbles shall be made to appear in its true light; but I confess that, personally, I take no more interest in these squabbles than I do in those of kites and crows. There has, without doubt, been too great violence in the proceedings at Erie on the part of all concerned in them; but I have every reason to believe that if the rights of the people of Erie had been respected by the people of the Cleveland section of country, which the gentleman who last spoke, [Mr. WADE,] I believe, represents, all these difficulties would have long ago been settled. But when a State has been assailed with extreme violence by expressions of such coarseness as I am sure grated harshly upon the ears of members of the House, and with the most exaggerated invective for asserting its rights against the usurpations of a railroad corporation which had entirely perverted the original purpose of its charter, it may well be supposed that the people of that State would feel somewhat aggrieved, and that the authorities of the State might be somewhat slow in granting favors to their assailants.

I will now state what are some of the facts of the case as they exist, if the committee are not already worried to death by the time which has been consumed in the matter.

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

Mr. RITCHIE. In the first place, then, I ask gentlemen to remember that this railroad, instead of passing between the town and harbor of Erie, passes at some distance from the harbor, south of the town—and here I may say that this is the only harbor upon the southern shore of Lake Erie, which is thoroughly and constantly protected in all weather from storms, and which may be fortified and protected thoroughly against an enemy in time of war; and in this point of view it is one of national importance; it is the only harbor upon the lake in the State of Pennsylvania, and for this reason it is not to be wondered at that the State of Pennsylvania should take much interest in building up the city of Erie, more especially as it would be a matter of national interest whenever a harbor on the lake might be necessary to shelter a fleet in time of war.

It is the only place on that lake where vessels can be protected against storms, and also against the assaults of a foreign enemy. It is the only place on the southern shore of that lake which really has the character of a harbor. The other harbors on that shore, in Ohio and New York, are very small and trifling indeed. Well, sir, this railroad running from Cleveland to Dunkirk and Buffalo, admitting that it is legal, and that no fraud has been committed in its construction, passes on the borders of Erie, one account says three quarters of a mile, and another a mile and a quarter from the harbor; so that for all practical purposes the railroad is useless to Erie, and utterly destructive to the business of the harbor. It is so far from the harbor, and the cost of transportation from the harbor to the road is such, that it entirely prevents any business being done in the harbor of Erie. Again, still supposing the road to be legal and proper, there are just as many breaks now as there would be if the break occurred at Erie.

The road, four feet ten inches in breadth, passes along the lake shore from Cleveland, by way of Dunkirk, to Buffalo. At Dunkirk, the road which runs east is of a six feet gauge, so that everything passing east from Dunkirk changes the cars there. At Buffalo the road diverging to the east is of four feet eight and a half inches gauge, so that everything passing to the east there has to change.

Now, what was demanded by the citizens of Erie was, that the road should be made of a four feet eight and a half inches gauge, and connected with the harbor, so that articles shipped to the harbor could go directly from there to New York without a change of cars at Buffalo. In that case there would be no more changes of gauge than there are now, and always must be, so long as the gauge of the Dunkirk road is six feet and that of the Buffalo road four feet eight and a half inches. It would not add to the difficulty at all, but would simply give the citizens of Erie the right of way, unobstructed by changes of gauge, to New York via Buffalo. Now if anything is shipped at Erie, it must be transhipped either at Dunkirk or Buffalo. If the change of gauge is made at Erie, all the products shipped from that town can pass at once, by way of Buffalo, to the east, without change of cars.

I have said this much in reference to the general subject. With regard to the road from the Ohio line to the city of Erie, it was laid down without sanction of law, and in defiance of the authority of the State of Pennsylvania; and it was so decided more than a year ago by the supreme court of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, (interrupting.) I dislike to interrupt the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I desire to ask him a question in relation to the Franklin Canal Company. Was not the charter of that company obtained by the citizens of Erie for the very purpose which it has been appropriated to?

Mr. RITCHIE. I do not know how that may be; but I will read the proceedings and decision of the supreme court of Pennsylvania with regard to that charter.

Mr. WASHBURN. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if there has been any decision of the supreme court of Pennsylvania upon that point?

Mr. RITCHIE. There has, and I am about to read it.

Mr. WASHBURN. If I understand the matter, there was an application made for an injunction—

Mr. RITCHIE. I cannot yield to the gentleman further. I will now read the decision of the supreme court of Pennsylvania. I do not intend to read the whole of the opinion, but only such parts as bear directly on the question. Chief Justice Black says as follows:

"OPINION IN THE LAKE SHORE RAILROAD CASE.—Commonwealth vs. Franklin Canal Company.—Opinion of the Court.—Black, C. J., Lowrie and Woodward assenting.

"The Franklin Canal Company was incorporated by the Legislature on the 27th of April, 1844, for the purpose of reconstructing and repairing the Franklin division of the Pennsylvania Canal from the aqueduct over French creek to the mouth of French creek. By the act of incorporation, the proprietary rights of the State to that division of the canal was vested in the company, together with the surplus water power, toll houses, implements, and all property, real and personal, which the Commonwealth owned there, for the use of the canal. On the 9th of April, 1849, the company was authorized to construct a railroad instead of repairing the canal, if they should think it more expedient, and to use the graded line or towing path of the canal as the bed of the road; and by the same act the privilege was given to the company, upon increasing its stock to $500,000, of extending its road northward to the lake and south to Pittsburg.

"The Attorney General in the bill before us complains on behalf of the Commonwealth, that the defendants, instead of doing what the act of incorporation and the subsequent laws extending it, authorized them to do, have proceeded to construct a railroad from Erie to the Ohio State line, without any purpose of making the road between Franklin and the lake, but with the sole intent to form a connection with a railroad running from the State line to Cleveland. This, the bill avers, to be such an injury to the Commonwealth as can only be remedied by an injunction, because—1. The Commonwealth is interested in the proper application of the funds of the company to the purposes for which it was chartered—the Franklin Canal being given to it with the right to resume it to the use of the State. 2. A railroad from Pittsburg to Erie would have been tributary to the works of the State, but the road actually made will divert the trade and travel in another direction, to the diminution of the revenues and the detriment of the people. 3. The railroad is an unauthorized and illegal obstruction of certain public highways across which it passes. 4. It is inconsistent with the policy of the State to surrender the advantages which her position gives her of controlling the commercial intercourse between Ohio and New York. 5. If this surrender were consistent with policy, it is of great pecuniary value, and could be disposed of for a large sum.

"The counsel on behalf of the Commonwealth have moved us for a preliminary injunction, to restrain the defendants proceeding with their work or using it until the final hearing and determination of the cause. To sustain this motion, affidavits have been presented, from which it appeared that the defendants have already made a railroad commencing in the city of Erie, at the depot of the Erie and Northeast Railroad, (which extends into the State of New York,) and terminating at the point where the Cleveland, Painesville, and Ashtabula Railroad strikes the line between Ohio and Pennsylvania. This road is now in use, carrying the freight and passengers which arrive in both directions on the respective roads with which it connects.

"Numerous difficulties in the way of a preliminary injunction have been suggested by the defendant's counsel. But the great central point on which the rights of all parties must finally turn is, whether the conduct of the company in making the road they have made is authorized by the charter. If it be not consistent with the act of incorporation, then it is a lawless aggression upon the clearest right and the most valuable prerogative which a State can possess. It is in vain to deny that the Commonwealth has an interest in this business. To usurp the right of eminent domain, and establish a thoroughfare for the benefit of those who are not our citizens, by means of a railroad laid down on our soil, without asking the leave of the government, is something more than a mere insult. It touches the revenues of the Commonwealth, as well as her pride; and it is no imputation upon the honor and magnanimity of a State in debt forty millions of dollars to say that she is willing to protect both the pockets and the feelings of her people. It is not a disgrace that she thinks of justice to her creditors before she parts with her resources to those who have no claim upon anything but her courtesy. If the railroad complained of has been made in violation of law, it is such a wrong as will surely be righted some how; and therefore those who are charged with committing it will be glad to have our opinion, whether it be for them or against them. If it be true that the defendants have been guilty of conduct which cannot, and will not be tolerated, the sooner they are made aware of the extreme peril to which they exposed themselves the better for them. For these reasons principally we proceed to examine the charter and its supplements, and to compare them with the acts of the company, that we may see how they agree together.

"The original act of incorporation makes the company a gift of the Franklin division of the State canal, from the aqueduct near the mouth of French creek, together with all property, real and personal, which the Commonwealth owned, for the use of that canal, and authorizes the reconstruction and repair of it by the company. The act of 9th April, 1849, authorized them, instead of repairing the canal, to make a railroad, and to use the towing-path for the bed of the road. Another section of the same act contains this provision: 'That upon the said company's increasing the stock thereof to $500,000, it shall have the privilege of extending from the north end thereof to Lake Erie, and from the south end thereof to Pittsburg, by such route as the said company shall deem the most expedient and advantageous.' It is on these words that the defendants now rely to make out the lawfulness of constructing a railroad from the city of Erie to the Ohio State line.

"We will not pause for a definition of the word extend, nor stop to consider whether the main purpose of the company's existence must be accomplished before an incidental privilege can be exercised. We will not inquire whether a railroad which does not exist can be extended. If the defendants had obeyed their charter in other respects, we would be too anxious to protect them in the prosecution of their enterprise to allow them to be defeated on points so sharp as these.

"But, assuming that the clause quoted above gives to the Franklin Canal Company the right simply to make a railroad from Pittsburg to Lake Erie, without any restriction, expressed or implied, as to the part of the work which shall be first done, (and this is the utmost that ought to be claimed,) can we say that they are within the law in making a road from the city of Erie to the Ohio line? To this question the only answer we can give is a most emphatic negative. The more we have reflected on the case, and examined the affidavits and arguments of the defendants, the more deeply have our minds been penetrated by the conviction, that the charter creates a simple duty, which has been most palpably violated.

"No human mind can be so perverse as to doubt that the object of the Legislature, in passing the act of 1849, was to make a connection by railroad between Pittsburg and some harbor on the lake. Instead of this, a connection has been made between Buffalo and Cleveland, with no more practical regard for either of the designated termini, than if the corporators had never heard of them. The State contemplated an improvement which would bring a certain portion of the western trade through her own works to her own commercial cities. But the privileges she gave for that purpose have been so perverted as to carry that trade away, increasing the wealth, and adding to the advantages of her rivals.

"The road made by the defendants begins at the depot of the Erie and Northeast railroad, three quarters of a mile away from the lake, and one hundred and ten feet above it, and runs thence as directly as the nature of the ground will permit to that point on the Ohio State line where the Cleveland, Painesville and Ashtabula railroad meets it, and there it stops. The defendants ask us to give a solemn judgment, that this is extending a road which has not been made between Franklin and the aqueduct over French Creek from the north end thereof to Lake Erie. We do not say that there is any obligation to begin at any one place more than another, and if this could be properly called a part of the work required, it might very well be chartered. But it is not part of the road chartered; it is the whole of another road not chartered. It bears no resemblance to that described in the act of incorporation. It is different at both ends—different in character, location, and object, and is used at this moment for purposes totally opposite to those which the Legislature ever expressed an intention to permit.

"But they urge that, inasmuch as their act of incorporation permits them to extend the road from the aqueduct to the lake, 'by such route as the said company shall deem the most expedient and advantageous,' they are at liberty not only to begin at either end or in the middle, but to deviate from the natural and proper course for any purpose which may be advantageous to them; and they do not conceal that the profit of a connection with the Ohio road is their motive for making it. This is a grave error. It is not their own, but the advantage of the route, as a route, which they are permitted to consult. Between two routes they may choose the one which will, in their opinion, lead them most advantageously to the point fixed by law. But they must not turn aside to effect another and unauthorized purpose, however profitable it may seem to the finances of the company, or the private fortunes of the stockholders. Every railroad company has, and must necessarily be allowed to have, the same discretion which this one had, to choose the best route between fixed points, but the authority to depart from the route has never before been claimed. No one ever thought because the Pennsylvania Railroad Company had a right to choose its route between Harrisburg and Pittsburgh, that it therefore had a right to make a road from Harrisburg to Easton, or to Sunbury, or to the Maryland line, or that it could begin at Pittsburgh and go to Virginia, upon the plea that such a location would be best for the interests of the company. These are extreme cases, but they illustrate the principle. A deviation of half a mile to effect a forbidden purpose is not more lawful than if it were a hundred miles out of the way.

"Besides, we hold, without doubt or hesitation, that no railroad company can connect with a foreign railroad which meets it at the State line, unless expressly authorized by its charter, or unless such connection cannot be avoided without losing the advantage of what is clearly the best route. If this be not so, the doctrine of strict construction is a mockery. The right of determining to what extent, and in what manner our territory shall be made a thoroughfare for the benefit of foreign corporations, belongs to the State itself. It is so important to the interests of our own commerce, and the prosperity of our own public works, that no proposal to surrender it has ever been made without grave deliberation, and seldom without more or less opposition. The fiercest of our legislative struggles have been upon bills granting rights of way. The State will not be held to have parted with this right until she does so in plain words, of which the sense cannot be mistaken. It will not pass by construction as an incident of the privilege to make a railroad between two designated points within the State."

That is the opinion of the supreme court of the State of Pennsylvania, pronounced more than a year ago.

Mr. WASHBURNE. I would beg to ask the gentleman a single question.

Mr. RITCHIE. I know what the gentleman wants. He wants to know why an injunction was not issued. The decision was, that it was a fraudulent use of the charter of the canal company; but the injunction was refused on the ground that one could not be issued without bond from the party demanding it; and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania could give no bond, there being no organ of the Government authorized to execute it for her.

I will read now an extract from the opinion of the judge of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania:

"In the case of the Cleveland, Painesville, and Ashtabula Railroad Company, vs. the Franklin Canal Company, city of Erie, and sundry persons. (Circuit court of the United States, western district of Pennsylvania—in equity.)

"It thus appears that the complainants, under a charter from the State of Ohio for making a railroad within that State, have become shareholders to the amount of $448,500 of a capital stock of $500,000, in the Franklin Canal Company, chartered by the State of Pennsylvania to make a canal or railroad between certain designated points, to which the whole of that capital stock could alone be legitimately appropriated. Has this been done?

"By the agreement there was a common object which both companies determined to effect, and have since effected—the making of a continuous railroad from Cleveland, in Ohio, along the shore of Lake Erie, to the city of Erie, in Pennsylvania. For this purpose the whole available capital stock of the Franklin Canal Company is authorized to be used by the complainants; their advances incurred by mortgage on the road, by way of lien, with power to appoint all the officers and agents of the company, to receive its profits, make disbursements, and finally to conduct all its operations during the corporate existence of the complainants.

"By these concessions, several of the essential franchises of the Franklin Canal Company became merged in the Cleveland, Painesville, and Ashtabula Railroad Company. Whether they amount to such an abuse of the corporate powers of the former company as to disable the complainants, who were parties to them, from claiming the equitable interposition of this court, by way of injunction, or otherwise, I will not now stop to inquire. All the available pecuniary resources of the Franklin Canal Company have been appropriated, and it would seem exhausted, in making a road from the State line to and within the city of Erie. Is this the road which they are required to make by their charter? On this part of the case I am relieved from making any remarks, by the opinion of the supreme court of the State, given after a full hearing in the case of the Commonwealth against the Franklin Canal Company. In this opinion I fully concur, but from which, if I differed, I should feel myself bound to regard as the settled judicial interpretation of the several statutes of the State, under which the Franklin Canal Company derives its chartered rights.

The chief justice, after an examination of several acts of Assembly conferring corporate powers on the Franklin Canal Company, says: "The road made by the defendants begins at the depot of the Erie and Northeast Railroad, three quarters of a mile from the lakes, and one hundred and ten feet above it, and runs thence directly as the nature of the ground will permit, to that point on the Ohio State line where the Cleveland, Painesville, and Ashtabula Railroad meets it, and there it stops. We do not say that there is any obligation to begin at one place more than another; and if this could properly be called a part of the work required, it might very well be justified. But it is no part of the road chartered; it is the whole of another road not chartered. It bears no resemblance to that described in the act of incorporation; it is different at both ends—different in character, location, and object, and is used at this moment for purposes totally opposite to what the Legislature ever expressed an intention to permit. There was no decree in this case; but it is not a judgment or decree, but the interpretations and decisions of the highest court of the State, on matters arising out of their own statutes, which this court is bound to regard. It is what, in such cases, they declared to be the law, which is the law for this court. A judgment or decree may be for many reasons rendered unnecessary; but the law as pronounced must be the rule of action until reversed.

"It must follow, from this opinion, that the railroad made from the State line where it connects with the road of the complainants along the shore of Lake Erie to the city, and within the city of Erie, is not the road or any part of the road for which a charter was granted to the Franklin Canal Company; and as complainants claim under this charter, and do not pretend that there was any other authority for making it, I must conclude that it was made without lawful authority, and without regard to the eminent domain of the State. The duties assigned by an act of incorporation are conditions annexed to the grant of the franchises conferred, and it is a tacit condition of the grant that the grantees shall act up to the end or design for which they were incorporated. This the Franklin Canal Company have not done; and although the abuses of their charter cannot be inquired into collaterally, yet if they act without charter, and do what is essentially different from what they are authorized to do, as by making a canal instead of a road, or a road other than that expressly designated in their charter, they would be trespassing upon the ground they occupied, and subject to immediate proceedings for eviction, although their charter should not be judicially annulled."

Now, sir, after this inroad was made upon the territory of Pennsylvania—after the attempt to make a road through it, in defiance of laws, and to the ruin of the city and harbor of Erie—Pennsylvania may be somewhat slow about granting privileges demanded of her, but it was bound to protect the town and harbor of Erie, as part of her territory. It was bound to protect those great works of internal improvement, which has cost her more than forty millions of dollars. Her Legislature has a right to deliberate, and to examine the subject. They have also the right to consult upon the propriety of granting those privileges before they accord them.

It is a matter of great consideration to the State of Pennsylvania to decide how far she will permit roads belonging to other States to pass over her territory. If she does choose to permit them so to pass, she has the right to settle the terms upon which that permission shall be granted. I have no doubt that Pennsylvania will be liberal in her action, for such has been her character from the foundation of her government. Kindness, courtesy, honor, and honesty form the foundation upon which the government of that State rests. She took nothing by fraud or force, even from the original inhabitants of Pennsylvania—the wild men found inhabiting her territory. She has always been characterized by an adherence to law, and the rules of honor and honesty, from her first origin to the present hour. In past years, when every person expected that the State would repudiate her debt, there was not one voice heard within her borders in favor of repudiation. On the contrary, every man I ever heard speak of it in the State, demanded that the Legislature, at the earliest possible period, should levy a tax to pay the interest on her debt. At the earliest possible period after her Legislature was brought together provision for the payment of the interest was promptly made.

I would state, further, in regard to the constitutional power of this House to interfere in this matter—which is really the great point of interest here—that it has no power whatever, and that the subject is entirely foreign to its jurisdiction. It has been so decided by the judge of the circuit court of the United States in this very case which I have referred to. It was decided that, under the power to establish post offices and post roads, the General Government has no right to establish a road within the territory of any State against its consent. I will read the opinion of the judge upon this subject:

"But the complainants allege that they are entitled to an injunction on another ground. They are contractors for carrying the mail of the United States over the road they have made, in railroad cars from Cleveland to Erie, and from thence back to Cleveland; and, by an act of Congress, this road has been made a post road.

"The power given by the Constitution to establish post roads has always been construed to mean, and, as I think, rightly, such roads as were regularly laid out by authority of the States, or by counties under the laws of the States. The Government of the United States cannot construct a post road within a State of this Union without its consent; but Congress may declare, that it, establish such a road already opened and made a public highway by the direct or indirect authority of the State.

"The post roads of the United States are the property of the States through which they pass; they may temporarily part with the possession of them by charter, and the grantees, while the charter continues, have the right to preserve such road, and prevent their threatened destruction. The United States have the mere right of transit over these roads, for the purpose of carrying the mail, and, in case of obstructing this right, their laws provide an adequate remedy. The Government itself could not obtain the injunction applied for, to prevent the destruction of a mail road; the right to do so follows the right of property or possession; a mail contractor, and any other person, may have a right of action for damages in the courts of the State, for an obstruction to a mail road, or the wrong done there may be punished by indictment; but no injunction can legally issue upon an application to restrain a threatened injury to the road. This power must always be exercised with great caution; to allow it in a case like this, would be an alarming extension of jurisdiction, open to great abuses, and extending over many thousands of miles, and to persons who, as mail contractors, have no interest in the roads they pass over. The act of Congress making all railroads post roads, means only such as have charters from the several States; it is not to be inferred that they intended to do anything in derogation of the sovereignty of a State, by declaring that to be a post road which was the work of an individual or of a company, for his or their profit, without law, or it may be in opposition to law. The road of the complainants was made a post road, either from mistake or misrepresentation; and, it is to be presumed, without information to the department charged with making contracts for carrying the mail, that it was not authorized by law."

That is the rule laid down by a judge of the circuit court of the United States, and if gentlemen are curious to examine further into this matter, I would refer them to Kent's Commentaries, (volume 1, page 267,) where they will find the whole doctrine stated at length. It has never been claimed, since the origin of this Government, that Congress had the right to establish roads within the boundaries of a State without the consent of the State. The only difficulty that has ever arisen has been in regard to exercising that power where the State has consented.

I have said all that I intend to say in regard to this matter, and I do hope that gentlemen hereafter, in their discussions upon this floor, at least will avoid clamorous invectives against the characters of States. Such language as has been used with reference to this affair is not calculated to promote good feeling among the Representatives of the different States, nor to advance the business of this House.

Mr. DRUM. I had not intended to take any part in the discussion that has been introduced on this subject, and it is with reluctance that I feel myself compelled to do so. But the State which I have the honor in part to represent has been, as I conceive, grossly and unwarrantably assailed upon this floor, and any one of its delegation who could hesitate to resent the assault, would be derelict in his duty as a Representative.

While I have occupied a seat upon this floor, I have been a witness of the great anxiety of members of this House to make speeches upon any and every subject; but, until now, I have not heard delivered a speech so utterly uncalled for, both in regard to its facts and the occasion taken to make it, as the speech just now made by the gentleman from Ohio. There can be, sir, no occasion for any discussion of the questions sprung upon us here. The General Government has not been, and cannot be, called upon to act in the premises; and I am therefore at a loss to know why it is that an occasion has been deliberately sought, not only to introduce a subject of discussion which is foreign to the business of this House, but also to seek in that occasion the means of attacking, without cause and without proof, the character of the government and people of Pennsylvania. Sir, the gentleman has informed the committee that he is desirous of creating a public opinion on this subject outside of this House. If that be indeed his object, the gentleman ought to know that he has mistaken his tribunal, and that this is neither the time nor place for the manufacture of public sentiment upon any subject. I think he even mistakes the character of the people when he would endeavor to produce the impressions such as may legitimately be drawn from his remarks upon the people of his own State of Ohio. Whatever may be the depraved taste which delights in listening to remarks such as have been indulged in by the gentleman, I am far from believing that the people of Ohio possess that kind of taste. Sir, what are the facts presented here, and what the arguments upon which the gentleman bases the gross and unjustifiable attack upon the integrity and faith of Pennsylvania? The complaint made is that the people of Erie county, in Pennsylvania, have resorted to lawless force and violence to redress some imaginary wrongs. Grant, if you please, that it is so—that a very small portion of the people of the State have transcended the bounds of legal restraint, and been guilty of undue violence—does such a state of facts at all justify the wholesale charges made against our government and people? Why, sir, any man with two consecutive ideas can see that the premises do not justify the conclusion; and that if even the people of Erie county have been guilty of unlawful violence, it does not follow that all Pennsylvania is responsible for their conduct. Taking, then, the assumption of the gentleman in its fullest and broadest meaning, it by no means justifies the charges he has chosen to make.

But, sir, let me go one step further. The gentleman himself stated to the committee, and it is undeniably the fact, that no longer ago than last year the Legislature of Pennsylvania repealed the laws of that State which prescribed particular sizes of gauges for particular railroads; and that, as the law of that State now stands, a railroad company is at liberty to adopt any sized gauge that may be most convenient. Now, sir, with this fact staring him in the face, the gentleman has ventured to charge Pennsylvania with a degree of selfishness inconsistent with her relations of comity and good faith towards her sister States. Our Commonwealth has heretofore, by her laws, prescribed the size of gauge for each particular railroad in her territory; and after a serious contest in her Legislature last winter, all such acts of Assembly were repealed, and each company was thereby permitted to regulate, as it saw proper, the gauge of its track. Now, sir, the purpose and intention of all this was that the commerce, not only of Pennsylvania, but of other States, should be as unrestricted as might be compatible with our own paramount interests; and that the products of all should have free and untrammelled access to whatever market they might choose to seek. Yet, sir, in the face of this statement of his own—in the face of this evidence furnished by Pennsylvania, of her disposition to deal liberally with her sister States of the Confederacy, you are told that we have been utterly regardless of the rights of others, and of the courtesy due to neighboring States as members of one nation. Sir, the gentleman's own statement shows most clearly the wrong committed by the charge he makes. There is no justification for such a charge. The gentleman cannot justify himself to his own sense of right; he cannot justify himself to this House, or even to the constituency that sent him here, in making a charge so utterly groundless, even upon his own statement of facts.

But the gentleman from Ohio has gone even further, and he has dared to make an appeal to honorable members of this body to join with him in a scheme to plunder the people of Pennsylvania. He proposes to punish our State for an alleged injury to the West committed by a small portion of our people, by depriving her of the benefits to which her important manufacturing interests are entitled from the legislation of this Government, and he has appealed to the cupidities of other States to aid him. Sir, I do not know what the gentleman's constituents, or the people of Ohio, may think of such a proposition as this, but sure I am, that the gentleman had no warrant to expect honorable men here, representing other portions of this country, to unite in any such unholy alliance for such a purpose. I know not what his opinions may be of the gentlemen composing this House, to whom he has ventured to make such a proposal, but it is not difficult to divine what their estimate, and the estimate of the whole country, must be of the proposal itself. I have very erroneously judged the character of this House, if such an overture would not be spurned from it with disdain, no matter what may be its opinion of recent transactions in the county of Erie. But be that as it may, sir, I know how Pennsylvania and her delegation here ought to and will meet the threat contained in the gentleman's degrading proposition—she will meet it with the scorn it merits.

But the gentleman has seen fit to indulge a satirical wit and pleasantry at the expense of the people of Erie county, most of which, however, unfortunately for the gentleman, lacks the merit of originality, and has been going the rounds of the newspapers for the last four or five weeks. One specimen of the gentleman's wit I could not but remark, as it contained a most fragrant allusion to a certain animal which always showed fight in defence of its lover, and I could not help drawing from it the conclusion, that while the gentleman confessed his ignorance of the rules of the House, there are some other rules equally important to the well being of society, of which he seems to be also ignorant. I will now, Mr. Speaker, state the character of these transactions at Erie as I understand them, and in doing so, I do not desire to detain the House longer than is necessary.

Of the two railroad companies involved in the difficulty, the one called the Franklin Canal Company, as has been shown by the remarks of my colleague, [Mr. RITCHIE,] is in existence without the shadow of legal right. It has no legal charter, and the solemn decisions of the judicial tribunals of Pennsylvania have been pronounced, declaring its franchises void. So far as it is concerned, any effort to occupy either public or private property by its track might be legally resisted by anybody. In regard to the Northeast Railroad Company, it would seem that when it was chartered, and the road constructed, it was constructed with a six-foot gauge, and that it was allowed to be made with the express understanding, and even deliberate contract, that such gauge should be preserved. The Franklin Canal Company having a gauge of four feet ten inches, this would leave a break of gauge in the connection of the two companies at Erie. On the one hand, there was the Franklin Canal Company, with their rails laid in the streets of Erie, in defiance of any law; and, on the other, was the Northeast Company, which was allowed to occupy the streets, upon the express understanding and contract that they would maintain the six foot gauge. But as soon as the Legislature passed the act of 1853, repealing all gauge laws in that State, the Northeast Company, in the face of their own agreement, undertook to alter their gauge, so as to make it correspond with the size of the track on the other side of Erie; and thus enable them to run through the place without stopping, and deprive it of all the commercial advantages arising from a break of gauge at that place. Until this state of affairs existed, the people of Erie had acquiesced in the use of their streets by these companies; but when a flagrant attempt was made by these railroad companies to deprive Erie of the principal advantages arising from their location there, the municipal authorities of the borough of Erie determined, as I think they had a right to do, that any encroachment of this kind upon the public highways of their town was in violation of law, and a nuisance.

There was no law; there was no pretension of any law by which these companies claimed a right to invade the streets of Erie, or the public highways of Harbor Creek township. As long as the people interested chose to acquiesce in their occupation of the streets and roads, there was no harm done, and no one could complain. But—existing all the time, as their occupancy did, by acquiescence, and without authority of law—the people of Erie could, whenever they saw proper, or, at least, whenever the companies had violated the conditions by virtue of which they occupied those roads and streets, withdraw their acquiescence, and declare such occupancy and obstruction a nuisance. And, sir, it can make no kind of difference if, as the gentleman from Ohio has alleged, these roads were made and built by the solicitations, and at the request of the people of Erie. That circumstance would not make any obstruction of any public highway either more or less a nuisance. If, then, such obstructions of the public roads of Harbor Creek township and the streets of Erie constituted nuisances, no one can doubt the right of the people to abate them, and redress their grievances by force, if necessary, or in any other manner known to the law.

But the principal complaint made of the citizens of Erie is, that they resorted to the lawless and tumultuous violence of a mob to remove the bridges and rails of these roads. Sir, my information upon the subject has been, that throughout the whole affair, whatever was done by the people, was done in obedience to, and by the direction of their municipal authorities. Ordinances were passed, and notice duly served upon these companies, in pursuance of such ordinances. The greatest care was taken that no excesses should be committed beyond what was necessary to the completion of the work, which they were instructed they had a right to perform. Whatever was done was done under the control and direction of officers of the law. Now, sir, under all these circumstances, there can be but one question arising upon the facts, and that is a question of propriety and prudence; whether they were hasty, inconsiderate, and imprudent, in taking the course they did for the redressing of their grievances, and whether it would not have been a wiser and a better course to have resorted to the aids furnished to them by the law, is another and a different question, and one upon which I will not now pass an opinion.

These, sir, are some of the facts of this case, so far as I have been informed; and I would not have troubled the committee with a single remark had I not feared that an undue impression might be made upon the minds of members who are not acquainted with the circumstances of this very unpleasant affair. I have only further to say, that be the opinion of the House and the country what it may of the conduct of the people of Erie, it cannot, in any way, affect the character of the people of Pennsylvania as a people.

Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that a discussion on this subject has been introduced in this place. It has no business here. It can have no other effect, when treated in the manner it has been by the gentleman from Ohio, than to embitter the people of different States—which ought to be, and whose interest it is to be, friendly—against one another. I firmly believe that the people of Ohio, in whose name this attack has been made against Pennsylvania, have no just cause, and no inclination, to complain of our people; and I have yet to learn that they do so. Nor am I able to see what justification or necessity there has been for the use of the language uttered in their behalf.

Mr. CAMPBELL obtained the floor.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Ohio let me have the floor for a minute or two?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do, for the purpose of explanation.

Mr. FLORENCE. I submit the point of order, that it is not in accordance with our rules for one member to obtain the floor and barter it out to other members for the purpose of explanation, previous to speaking himself.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order for the gentleman from Illinois to make an explanation. The Chair does not know what explanation he proposes to make. If he propose an explanation out of order, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania insists upon his point of order, the Chair will so rule.

Mr. FLORENCE. If the explanation be personal to the gentleman himself I shall not object to his making it. It strikes me that the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio made this morning were strongly personal toward Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. WASHBURNE. I withdraw my application for the gentleman who favors the narrow gauge. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, an effort has been made by the two gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITCHIE and Mr. DRAW] to create the impression that there is nothing involved in this Erie controversy excepting that which interests the State of Ohio. It is for the purpose of disabusing the minds of members upon this point that I rise more than for any other. If it were a mere controversy, affecting solely the local interests of the State which I have the honor in part to represent, or affecting simply the interests of the State of Pennsylvania, the gentlemen might then well say that it was a controversy which had no business here; but, sir, I take the ground that great national interests are involved in it. Interests which not merely run through all the commercial branches of interests of this nation, but interests, to some extent, affecting the existence of the Government. The supremacy of law is involved in it. It is, in part, to vindicate the supremacy of the law that my voice is heard upon this occasion.

I do not rise, sir, to join in any controversy which is merely local, and affects no general or national interest. But, sir, in the present case, we see the sovereignty of the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania sunken in the municipal power of a sort of seven-by-nine town on the southern shore of Lake Erie. We see the officers of the law ridden down by an enraged populace—an unrestrained mob. There is no arm stretched forth by the Keystone State to shield these officers, or to enforce the obligations of law and order. It strikes me, therefore, that it has become something more than a controversy between Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Mr. Chairman, the first gentleman from the State of Pennsylvania who addressed the committee [Mr. RITCHIE] hinged his whole argument on the charge that some citizens of Ohio, who are interested in the charter of the Franklin Canal Company, had acted fraudulently, and had transcended the limits of the power ceded to them. Sir, were I to admit his premises, I find nothing in them which justifies his excuse for the State of Pennsylvania which is not founded on the false hypothesis that two wrongs make one right, or that one wrong justifies another.

I deny, however, that the gentleman has established, by any fact which he has adduced, a single charge against the law-abiding spirit of those persons in Ohio or Pennsylvania who were interested in the charter of the Franklin Canal Company. For, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding he has read the decision of the court at large, he was compelled to admit the fact, that no writ had ever been issued restraining that company from making its road in the manner in which it has been constructed, and which has been torn up by a lawless mob.

Yes, I say [to Mr. RITCHIE] that the gentleman has fully admitted that no injunction had ever been granted against these persons—no process of law repelled in all their proceedings. If this be the case, this Franklin Canal Company have not violated any law, and have done nothing more than to exercise the rights granted to them by their charter—have transcended no bonds of legal right—have stricken no blow at the majesty of the law.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania. I stated that the Franklin Canal Company had violated the law, but that the violation of it had not been enjoined. I stated that the decision was made, that they had violated their charter, and I presented that decision.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, then, no writ restraining them from proceeding has ever been issued by any court of the State of Pennsylvania. They are not chargeable with obstructing the execution of any judicial process.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in relation to the great merits—the practical merits—of this question, I have a few words to say. We have three great national interests—interests not confined to the State of Ohio, or to the State of Pennsylvania, but national interests. They are—agriculture, which produces; the manufactures, which fabricate; and the commerce, which transports the article from the point where it is produced to the point where it is consumed. These are our three great national interests, which, of right, may claim the protection of national legislation.

The farmer, it is said, who makes two spears of grass to grow where but one grew before is a public benefactor. The mechanic, whose ingenuity gives to the world a piece of mechanism by which labor and expense is saved, is a public benefactor. The merchant, who is engaged in commerce, and whose energy opens up new and improved thoroughfares for the transportation of these products of industry, is a benefactor. Now, Mr. Chairman, that community, that State, or that people, which throw obstacles and obstructions in the way of the progress of either of these great interests are, therefore, enemies to the welfare of society.

The State of Pennsylvania, or rather the town of Erie, requires that there shall be a break of gauge in the railroad at that point, by which all the commerce of the Mississippi valley which crosses to the Atlantic, and all that passes from the Atlantic to the Mississippi valley, shall be subjected to a sort of taxation for the benefit of that village. That, I say, sir, is such an obstruction as is adverse to the great national commerce which passes along that lake shore, and forms an obstacle to the progressive spirit of the times. Why, I ask, do we come here to legislate and discuss propositions to open harbors upon your lakes, to improve the great natural thoroughfares—the rivers of the West—if we are to submit quietly and tamely to the erection of artificial obstructions at Erie?

Sir, with the same propriety might the citizens of St. Louis claim, for the benefit of that flourishing city, that there should be no improvement of the river above it. So might the citizens of Cincinnati, with the same propriety, claim that we have no right to improve the Ohio river above that point, because such improvement, though national, might affect injuriously the local interests of that city. But the citizens of Erie, backed by the Governor of the State and the Representatives of Pennsylvania upon this floor, insist upon it that this break of gauge shall exist there, and give as their only reason that the people of the town of Erie are benefited thereby, at the expense of a national commerce.

You have a proposition before this House to construct a canal around the falls of the Ohio river at Louisville. The Government has already constructed the Louisville and Portland canal, and for what purpose? Why, the God of Nature had broken the gauge in navigation at the falls of the Ohio, by means of which, before the canal was made, the farmers, the mechanics, and the merchants, who were interested in the commerce of that river, were compelled to tranship the products of their industry. This Government said that they would make a continuous and uniform gauge; and that they would use the funds of the National Treasury for the purpose of facilitating the national commerce that passed over these waters. Did anybody ever hear the citizens of Louisville—a city whose local interests require the transshipment of these products—going out with arms and shooting down the officers or employees of the Government who were engaged in the construction of that work of internal improvement? No, sir; they were controlled by no such selfish and contracted policy as that which now runs rampant at Erie. Did anybody hear of the ladies of the city of Louisville going out with axes and saws and rotten eggs for the purpose of enforcing their legal rights? No, sir. Yet such disgraceful scenes as these have been presented constantly, almost daily, in the city of Erie, where they seem to think that the industry of the nation should be compelled to pay the expense of building up their one-horse town. Whether the ladies who have, with rotten eggs, attempted to control this great question belong to “upper tendom” or “lower tendom” I do not know. Whether they belong to the Woman’s Rights party proper or not I am not informed; but I will say—

Mr. GAMBLE. I would beg leave to state, that the gentleman from Ohio totally misapprehends the facts in relation to what the citizens of Erie want. I hope the gentleman does not desire to misrepresent either the city of Erie or the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What does Erie want?

Mr. GAMBLE. With the permission of the gentleman, I will state what the citizens of Erie want. They do not contend that there shall be an additional break of gauge at the borough of Erie. There is now a difference of gauge between the roads of the State of Ohio and those of the State of New York; or, in other words, the railroads of New York have one gauge, and the railroads of Ohio have another; hence there must of necessity be a break of gauge, or interruption, somewhere. Whether that break of gauge be in Pennsylvania or in the State of New York can in no way, I respectfully submit, effect the interests of Ohio, or any part of the great West. But the question arises, where should it of right be made? These two companies—the Franklin Canal Company, and the Erie and Northeast Company—obtained from the Legislature of Pennsylvania the privilege to construct roads, both of which were to terminate at the city of Erie. The Northeast road adopted a six feet gauge, under a contract with the New York and Erie road, and to suit the gauge of that road, while the Franklin Canal Company adopted the Ohio gauge of four feet ten inches. After having adopted these gauges they obtained from the city of Erie the privilege of extending their roads into the city, upon conditions that they would afford certain facilities to the trade of the important harbor of Erie, and maintain the gauge adopted by them. Instead of carrying out this agreement in good faith, they adopted a grade which carries them some ten or twelve feet above the level of the streets of Erie, which they cross on bridges thus elevated, and at a distance of a mile and a quarter from the harbor.

Last winter the Legislature of Pennsylvania repealed her restrictive gauge law, and very soon thereafter it became manifest that both these companies had transferred their roads and franchises to New York and Ohio companies, and were to be conducted without regard to the restrictions contained in their charters, and in violation of their solemn agreements with the authorities of Erie. Thus we find them tearing up their track, and relaying it upon a different gauge, not the gauge of any of the New York roads with which they unite, but making it necessary to break gauge not only at Dunkirk, in the State of New York, but also at Buffalo.

It is for these flagrant violations of the rights of Erie, secured to her by the Legislature of the State, and by her contracts with those companies, that she has, in her corporate capacity, deemed it proper for her, in a manner, to redress her wrongs, and not, as has been asserted, merely for the paltry purpose of compelling those companies to make a change of gauge at Erie, and thereby obstruct and impede the business of this great thoroughfare.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As the gentleman has interrupted me, and made an argument in support of his own side of the question, I will ask him a question. I want him to tell me, why it is, if the people of Erie have the law and justice upon their side, that they do not submit to the law, and seek redress from it?

Mr. GAMBLE. I thank the gentleman for asking the question, and I will answer it with the greatest pleasure, if he will give me the opportunity.

The committee have been informed that this Franklin Canal Company have been acting for more than a year in violation of a decision of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, that their charter had been fraudulently used for a purpose not embraced in the law of incorporation, and for which they had in law no franchise, no existence, but that it has been acting by the sufferance of the people of Erie, who, rather than the business of this great thoroughfare should be interrupted—

Mr. CAMPBELL, (interrupting.) I cannot give way to the gentleman to make an argument. We have heard all this before.

Mr. GAMBLE. One moment. The citizens of Pennsylvania did not desire to interrupt their facilities for intercourse with the people of Ohio; for, permit me here to say, that up to this time nothing but the utmost kindness, the utmost comity of feeling, has ever existed between the citizens of Pennsylvania and the citizens of Ohio. More than a year since the supreme court of Pennsylvania decided that the Franklin Canal Company had no legal right to construct this road; yet, as I have said, during all this time, they have, by the sufferance of the people of Erie, been allowed to occupy and enjoy a privilege which the committee will see was no barren one, when I tell them that within that time a responsible company offered $250,000 for the privilege of the right of way over this same route; yet, notwithstanding the fact that this company had usurped a privilege of such value and importance, they were not molested—

Mr. CAMPBELL, (interrupting.) I cannot give way to the gentleman any longer.

Mr. GAMBLE. I have nearly finished what I proposed to say. This company made application to the supreme court of the State for an injunction—

Mr. CAMPBELL. Your colleague has told us all about that.

Mr. GAMBLE. I think no one has stated what I am about to state, but I will take very little more of the gentleman’s time. The supreme court granted the injunction, and never since that time have the citizens of Erie molested them. They have not, in any instance, violated the law since the injunction was served on them, nor will they violate the law, or commit any act of violence, so long as these companies confine themselves to legal tribunals, having jurisdiction over the offense complained of. But, as if to harass and aggravate the people of Erie, and to subvert other purposes than a speedy adjustment of the dispute, one of these companies made application to the district court of the United States at Pittsburgh, and obtained an injunction. The people of Erie immediately employed counsel, and appeared to answer the injunction upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction over the subject; a point which they seem to have established to the satisfaction of everybody except Judge Erwin, who, instead of deciding the point at once, held the matter under consideration; but, in the mean time, permitted the marshal to go on imprisoning the citizens of Pennsylvania for not immediately and implicitly obeying an injunction which they had alleged and argued before him was void for want of jurisdiction, and which he was not willing to deny or decide, so that his decision might be reviewed by the supreme court, and the question settled whether the marshal or the authorities of Erie were the aggressor. These are the facts in the case, and are the reasons why the citizens of Erie did not obey the injunction of the court. I thank the gentleman for the privilege he has accorded me for the purpose of explanation.

Mr. CAMPBELL, (resuming.) Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has not presented the case in a different view from that which has been presented by his colleague, [Mr. RITCHIE.] The gentleman cannot conceal or avoid the prominent fact, that the United States marshal, when engaged in the service of a process issued by a United States court, was seized and imprisoned by virtue of the municipal authority of the town of Erie. That mob-law has thus far triumphed, with the sanction of Pennsylvania State authority, no one denies. Mr. Chairman, I hold to the doctrine, that however odious a law may be it is the duty of those charged with the execution of it to see that it is faithfully executed. There is a law upon our statute-book, to which I make reference, that, in some of its details, is particularly odious to me, as we all know it is to a great portion of the people of the North, (the Fugitive Slave law,) and yet, sir, I believe that it is the duty of the President of the United States, and of the officers of the Government charged with its execution, to see that it is faithfully executed as long as it remains upon the statute-book. The President has no right to assume legislative or judicial power, and to decide upon the expediency or the constitutionality of any law upon the statute-book. It is his business to execute the laws, and it is the business of the courts of the land to decide upon questions of constitutional right.

I refer gentlemen of Pennsylvania to a case where a fugitive from service, or a supposed "fugitive slave," was arrested in the State of Pennsylvania, and a justice of the peace, or a judge of one of the State courts, issued a process by virtue of which the United States marshal was arrested. How speedily did that Pennsylvania judge (Judge Grier) come forward and say that no "tuppenny justice" should thwart with impunity the prompt execution of a law of Congress, or obstruct the process of an order of the United States court. Yet, sir, notwithstanding your President, and your judges, and your marshals have been vigilant and faithful in seeing that that particular law is executed when a poor negro runs the race for freedom, they fail to execute it when these great commercial interests are stricken down by the mob. They have sent their troops and the national Treasury on the first dawning of any attempt on the part of the populace to override and trample down the officers of the law when a negro was to be taken; but when these national interests are assailed they are as silent as the grave.

Sir, the telegraph every day brings us accounts that infuriated mobs are destroying property, not only within the municipal limits of the town of Erie, but outside of them; it brings us accounts that the frenzied populace have driven back the United States marshal, holding in his hand a decree emanating from your highest judicial tribunals. And, sir, the contractors who are transporting the mails of the United States are detained, private interests are sacrificed, and there is an utter disregard of all the obligations of law—a willful, a deliberate, and a continuous effort on the part of the people of Erie to strike down the law. The people of Ohio, and of the whole West and North and East look in vain to the law-executing branch of their Government for a sufficient power to enable the United States marshal to execute the process and enforce a decree of your Federal court.

Mr. Chairman, I submit to gentlemen whether, if one law is to be faithfully executed and the powers of the Government are to be drawn forth whenever it is necessary for that purpose, if we have not a right to expect the strong arm of the Executive to be extended in order that the law may be enforced in this particular case. Adopt any other rule, and dangers, serious and alarming, quickly follow. Partial legislation, and the partial execution of the law, soon bring disrespect to Government, and a total disregard to the restraints of law.

Let it once go abroad to the people of this land that only one of the laws is to be executed, that the powers of the Government are to be called out only to execute a particular law, and held back when laws affecting other vast interests like these are affected, and the result will be most disastrous. Your laws and your Government would then be scoffed at by all who appreciate the great principles upon which just Governments are founded.

Mr. Chairman, as I said in the outset, these are not local interests which are involved in the Erie affair. These are not interests affecting the State of Ohio alone. They are interests deeply affecting the great commercial enterprises of this whole country. The question is to be settled as to the power of law. That question is at issue, and that is the great point presented now to the American people in this case. The experiment is to be tried. We are soon to know whether the Executive of this land will send forth the necessary power to enable the officers of the law to execute the process which has been placed in his hands, or whether party servility and party influences are to triumph over all the high obligations which our Constitution and laws impose.

The reasons why delay has been occasioned are not made known. They may be satisfactory, but I doubt it. It has long been well known that the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania has taken no efficient steps. It is well known that he sympathizes with those engaged in riding down the law at Erie. It is well known, too, that the sovereignty of that State has been controlled or swallowed up by the petty corporation of the town of Erie.

I see, too, by the newspapers, that the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania seems unwilling to leave the question in controversy to rest upon the law as it is, or to rely upon the judicial decisions which have been made, and read by the gentleman, [Mr. RITCHIE.] Fearing that the decisions of the courts would not break down that Franklin Canal Company, they resort to the process of repeal. I observe that, a few days ago, the Senate of the State of Pennsylvania passed a bill to repeal the charter of the Franklin Canal Company, thus declaring that she does not regard that company as having acquired any vested right by the construction of the road under their charter, which may not be revoked. If they did acquire it, that Senate swept from the statute-book the power under which it was acquired. This legislation is aimed at Ohio and other western interests.

Let me say to those who look to Pennsylvania interests, that I do not come here for the purpose of engendering bad feeling with them. God knows that there are many reasons why I should love Pennsylvania. I am allied to her by many interests and sacred ties; but if Pennsylvania mobs are to ride over the law of the land, and Pennsylvania legislation set at defiance the rights which we have acquired under her laws, and she commences the business of repealing charters, Ohio will not be beaten in that game. Others can play it as well as the Keystone State.

I do not believe in retaliatory legislation, but in my State there is a party, to which I do not belong—a radical party—a radical and progressive Democracy—the Democracy of Young America—the "Lightning Line Democracy"—that do believe in the right of a Legislature to repeal preëxisting charters. That party is now largely in power in our Legislature. I would have Pennsylvania understand that it is just as easy for our Legislature to repeal and strike down the charters which involve the interests of her people, as it is for her to play that game with charters involving western interests. Pennsylvania has taken, so far as her Senate is concerned, the initiative in this operation. She may go on if she chooses, but she will find the Ohio Democracy not merely ready, but willing to pursue the policy of repeal! Ohio's radical Democracy are in session, and there is no doubt but that they can go a little ahead of anything in the way of progress which the old Keystone dare undertake.

We have, also, radical Democrats in the highest judicial tribunal of our State—in the supreme court. They have been elected judges, previously committed and pledged to sustain the Legislature in this doctrine of repeal. So that, Mr. Chairman, if the worst come to the worst, and Pennsylvania proposes to settle this matter by repealing charters, I feel an abiding faith that the Buckeye State will not come out second best in that contest. If that is the shape which the controversy is to assume, Ohio is ready.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I did not propose to participate in this discussion, nor do I now propose to do so. When my honorable friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITCHIE] was on the floor, I desired to ask him a question in relation to this Franklin Canal Company, but I did not obtain from him a very satisfactory answer.

Now, sir, if I am rightly informed about this charter of the Franklin Canal Company, it was chartered by the Legislature of Pennsylvania, on the application of the people of Erie—they procured a charter of the company for the very purpose for which it was afterwards used—that is, to get a railroad connection West. If there were any legislative legerdemain in procuring this charter from the Pennsylvania Legislature, which is charged, it was exercised by the people of Erie. As I understand it, they were instrumental in procuring the very charter which they denounce as a fraud. If I am wrong, I hope I may be corrected by any member from that State on this floor, for I desire to state only facts.

I differ from my honorable friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITCHIE] in regard to what the supreme court of his State has decided in regard to this Franklin Canal Company. I put it to him as a lawyer, and I know him to be one of the ablest of the lawyers who occupy a seat upon this floor. He has told us that this Franklin Canal Company has a franchise which has been declared forfeited by the highest judicial tribunal in that State. Now, as I said before, I take issue with the gentleman, and I will show, to the satisfaction of this committee, that there has never been such a judgment by the supreme court of the State of Pennsylvania, and that, too, upon the very authority which he has produced here—

Mr. RITCHIE, (interrupting.) The court delivered their opinion upon the charter on a technical point.

Mr. WASHBURN. That is true; the court gave an opinion, but it rendered neither a decision nor a judgment. There was an application made to the court on behalf of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for an injunction against this Franklin Canal Company, on the ground that it had forfeited its franchise by misuse, or for some other reason. Now, does the gentleman pretend to say that that injunction was granted at all? No, sir. This very opinion which the gentleman has read from, says, further on, that it was refused.

Mr. RITCHIE here made a remark, which was entirely inaudible to the reporter.

Mr. WASHBURN. The court declined to interfere, did not interfere in regard to this matter, and refused to grant the injunction. But I admit that the court, through its chief justice did not give an opinion in regard to the merits of the question—the court made an argument, if you please, but it was the judgment of the court, and no decision of the court. What did the honorable Chief Justice say in delivering his opinion upon this point?

"This disposes of the matter for the present. We might have refused the motion without more than a reference to the statute, which makes it necessary."

that is, before an injunction can be granted under the laws of that Commonwealth, a bond has to be filed by the party applying for the injunction—

"that the bond shall be filed. But after a labored argument of counsel, we thought the parties entitled to some expression of opinion upon the main question."

The judge thought the parties entitled, not to a decision, not to a judgment, but "to some expression of an opinion upon the subject." That is all. It has not been shown before this committee that there has been any further action in that regard, or that there has ever been a JUDICIAL DECISION in that court declaring the charter of the Franklin Canal Company forfeited. If this charter had been declared forfeited by the court, why does the Legislature of Pennsylvania propose to repeal the charter, and resort to that method of taking away its franchise? That is the question. If the court has declared it void, what is the necessity of bringing a bill into the Legislature for the purpose of doing something which the courts have already done, according to the gentleman, [Mr. RITCHIE]? What necessity of the Legislature declaring the charter of the company forfeited, when the courts had done the same thing more than a year ago?—

Mr. RITCHIE (interrupting.) For the purpose of carrying into effect the decision of the court, and that that decision might be enforced.

Mr. WASHBURNE. It was for the purpose, the gentleman says, to carry into effect the decision of the court. It strikes me as something very novel, that the solemn judgments and decisions of the highest judicial tribunal of the great State of Pennsylvania are so utterly worthless that they are inoperative, until "enforced" by the action of a coördinant branch of the Government—the Legislature.

Again, sir, I feel some interest in this question, on behalf of my constituents, and on behalf of the people generally, of the State which I have the honor in part to represent.

Our connection with the East has been obstructed by these lawless proceedings in Erie, and our merchandise is lying, piled up in heaps, awaiting transportation over this "isthmus." We of the West feel a great interest in this matter, and I am glad that the question has been brought up here and discussed before the country, that the people everywhere may judge at whose door this great wrong lies, so that they may be able to pass a correct judgment in the premises. As I understand, one gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. GAMBLE.] upon my left, states that this difficulty in Erie has arisen in regard to taking up the track in the streets of the borough of Erie. It is contended, on the part of those who are upholding this Erie mob, that although the Legislature of Pennsylvania passed an act giving the railroad company the right to make this change of gauge, yet that there was a power which the town corporation had of regulating the streets that the Legislature could not, or did not, take away. I will not undertake to say what power or authority was reserved to the city of Erie by any of these laws in regard to any of these companies; I am not discussing the question as to the rights of that city in its corporate limits. If the city had the power claimed within its limits, I desire to ask by what color, or right, or authority, did the people of Erie travel seven miles beyond its limits, on the Erie and Northeast road, and ruthlessly destroy the railroad bridge at Harbor Creek?

Mr. GROW. Will the gentleman give way for an answer to his question?

Mr. WASHBURNE. I will do so, Mr. Chairman, with pleasure, although the gentleman denied me that courtesy the other day.

Mr. GROW. I explained that to my friend, and I hope he was satisfied.

Mr. WASHBURNE. I certainly was.

Mr. GROW. I will explain to the gentleman, and, in so doing, I simply desire to answer the question which he has asked. The railroads having their termini at Erie had no authority to go over the city limits. They obtained authority to lay their track within these limits only upon condition of laying a certain description of track, the power being retained to revoke it at any time. The gentleman asks now why the people of Erie went off eight miles east of Erie to burn the bridge at Harbor Creek? The charter of the Northeast Railroad Company provided that, in laying the track, the road should not interfere, or in any way obstruct any highway or bridge. The bridge at Harbor Creek was on the highway at the time this railroad was built; and they laid their railroad track over that bridge. The citizens of Harbor Creek protested against appropriating the public highway for that purpose; and that is the origin of the difficulty at Harbor Creek.

Mr. WASHBURNE. I understand the position of the gentleman, and it is of that very thing that I complain. He says the reason why they burned the bridge at Harbor Creek was because it was an obstruction to the highway at that place. Who decided it to be an obstruction? Was it a court of competent jurisdiction, adjudicating upon the matter after a hearing on both sides? No, sir; it was this lawless mob at Erie who passed upon this question, setting at defiance and usurping the province of the courts of the country, and making its own lawless and ungoverned will the arbiter. It is this which is the subject of so much and so just complaint, that all these matters have not been settled by an appeal to the law of the land, but by appeals to brute force, and to the law of the strongest.

Again, I would like some defense of that line of conduct on the part of the people of Erie and their abettors, which has been more than once suggested here to-day before this committee. What is the excuse, the justification, for the recent interference with the process of the Federal courts?

Did you ever know, Mr. Chairman, a more outrageous perversion of the process of the law of a State than that by which the United States Marshal was arrested by State officers, by a process emanating from a State court, for simply discharging his duty in serving the process of his own court? And yet this has been very recently done. These Erie "regulators" have usurped an authority utterly unjustifiable, arrested the Marshal, and incarcerated him in their prison, simply for doing his duty. What, I ask, is the justification for conduct like this?

Sir, I must agree with my friend from Ohio, that the State—I regret to say the State of Pennsylvania—the "Keystone" in the great notional arch—did yield her influence and great name to uphold a mob of the character of the Erie mob. Sir, she dishonors herself by her conduct. What can she expect if she thus deals with her sister States in the West in obstructing our travel and in interrupting our commerce, and placing all these impediments in the way of our intercourse with the great cities of the East?

I have heard something of a Mint at Philadelphia, and I have heard something of remonstrances against the erection of a Mint at New York. I believe it has been in consequence of the votes of members of this House coming from the West that the removal of this Mint to New York has been heretofore prevented. But I tell gentlemen from Pennsylvania, that if they continue a course of this kind so prejudicial to all our great interests, and so annoying to our people, they may expect little assistance from us in the future. We do not want to interfere with anybody, or any State, who does not interfere with us; but we insist upon that comity which it is the duty of one State in our Confederacy to extend to every other. We do not desire to be drawn into conflict with any State—

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, (interrupting.) If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to ask him if the people of his own State have not hitherto refused to grant the right of way to construct a railroad from Terre Haute to St. Louis—obstinately refused for years?

Mr. WASHBURNE. Through Illinois?

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir; through Illinois.

Mr. WASHBURNE. That question is not at all relevant to the one under consideration, but I will answer the gentleman. I believe the State of Illinois has refused to grant a charter for the purpose indicated by him; but I presume he will not deny that a sovereign State has a perfect right to refuse charters, as well as to grant them. But I can tell the gentleman, however, that, after the State of Illinois shall have granted a charter to any company for the purpose of building a railroad, we shall never resort to violence to prevent the road from being made, and will never sanction a mob that tears it up after it is made; and I can tell the gentleman, further, that we shall never have a Governor of the State of Illinois who will "sympathize" with a lawless rabble in their deeds of violence and infamy.

Mr. LANE. I understand the gentleman from Illinois as condemning the policy in toto. Now, if it is wrong for a Legislature to refuse this right of way and adopt that policy, is it a greater wrong for the people of a borough or village to adopt the same policy? On the contrary, is it not a much greater wrong upon the part of a Legislature than upon the part of a village?

Mr. WASHBURNE. I am not discussing that question at all. I am not discussing the right of a Legislature to grant or to refuse a charter. That is a matter which every Legislature will judge of for itself, according to circumstances. The point I desire to make is this—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to make a short reply to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. LANE.] With regard to the refusal on the part of the State of Illinois to grant the right of way, she has done it for the interests of her citizens, and I trust she will continue to legislate for the benefit of her own citizens. I do not know why this matter is brought into controversy here, but in reply to all such interrogations, as one of the Representatives from Illinois upon this floor, I have to say, that the Legislature of that State is the best judge of what she shall grant and what she shall deny.

Mr. LANE. I desire to make one suggestion. I have no disposition to blame the people of Illinois or her Legislature, but it struck me as a little inconsistent to see a gentleman hailing from a State which has for years insisted that the community who travel across Illinois from Indiana shall go by way of Alton to St. Louis blaming the people of Erie for insisting upon a railroad company making a break of gauge at their town. Firmly and sternly has the Legislature of Illinois resisted the efforts to have a road constructed from Terre Haute to St. Louis, insisting that the company shall construct the road to Alton, and that passengers shall go by Alton to St. Louis, thus making the traveling public pay tribute to the people of Alton. The people of Erie say the same thing; they want tribute. Now, the whole policy is wrong. You cannot force travel and business out of its natural channels.

Mr. WASHBURNE. I yielded to the gentleman to ask a question, and not to make a speech.

Mr. RICHARDSON. With the permission of my colleague, I will say that, so far as this controversy between Ohio and Pennsylvania is concerned, I have nothing to do with it, and do not intend to have anything to do with it. They may settle their difficulties in their own way. But I do maintain that no gentleman upon this floor has a right to arraign the Legislature of Illinois, and try them for what they have done, or for what they have not done. That they have a right to make a road that is to pass through our State—go to Alton, if they see proper—there can be no doubt, and they have done it, for reasons that, I trust, were satisfactory to them.

Mr. LANE. It is the policy I complain of.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is not the arena in which to discuss that policy.

Mr. LANE. Then let Erie alone.

Mr. WASHBURNE, (resuming.) I do not understand that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANE] differs particularly from me in regard to the Erie difficulty, but he puts to me some question as to the abstract propriety of a State putting limitations upon the charters of railroads. Now, I think it very likely that I might agree with my honorable friend, because I am for free trade—if I may so express myself—in this matter of railroads; I am for letting them go almost anywhere where the public interests and the interests of trade and commerce demand they should go, without regard to the boundaries of particular States; and hence I do not propose to go into the line of argument which the gentleman has suggested.

I have said all that I intended to say upon this subject, and a good deal more. The great interest felt by the people of that part of the State of Illinois which I have the honor to represent in this question—an interest which is felt by all classes, and is brought home to all classes—must be my excuse for troubling the committee, as I have done, with these few desultory remarks.

Mr. OLIVER, of Missouri, obtained the floor.

Mr. MILLER, of Missouri. Will my colleague yield for a motion that the committee do now rise?

Mr. OLIVER. I will yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. MILLER. Then I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee [Mr. ORR] reported that the Committee of the Whole, according to order, had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the reference of the President's message, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.) There are a few bills from the Senate upon the table, and if there be no objection, the Chair will lay them before the House.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. EWING. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to what I presume to be a privileged question. That, however, will be for the decision of the Chair. If it be not a privileged question, I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit it. It is a motion to request the Senate to return a resolution of this House which was passed the other day, providing for the appointment of a select joint committee in reference to a proposed amendment to the Constitution, in accordance with the report of the Judiciary Committee of this body. I learn from one of the Senators, who at first entertained a different opinion, but on consultation with the Secretary of the Senate finds that it is not in accordance with custom, that it has been only customary to appoint joint committees in reference to the joint property of the two Houses—as the library and the public buildings; that the appointment of a joint select committee in the case of the affair of the steamship San Francisco was a departure from the custom of the Senate, though passed without notice—perhaps improperly—without opposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot consider the gentleman's motion as one of a privileged character.

Mr. EWING. I presume that no gentleman will make objection, under the circumstances.

Mr. HIBBARD. I object.

Mr. EWING. I move, then, that the rules be suspended, in order to enable me to submit the motion to which I have alluded. I do not see what reason any gentleman can have for opposing my motion.

Mr. HIBBARD. I should like to know what is the purpose of the gentleman in withdrawing the resolution? I do not understand it.

Mr. EWING. I knew you did not. [Laughter.] I do not make it a rule to object because I do not understand a question.

Mr. HIBBARD. It is enough for the gentleman to prescribe a rule for the government of his own course.

Mr. EWING. If the gentleman chooses to adopt a different rule, he may conform to it. If the Speaker will allow, as the gentleman does not understand the question, I will explain the reasons for the motion which I have submitted. I learn, as I said before, from one of the Senators, that the resolution which was adopted by this House, on the report of its Judiciary Committee, providing for the appointment of a select joint committee for the consideration of the proposed amendment to the Constitution, in reference to the mode of electing the President and Vice President, is not in conformity with the usages of the two Houses. I was not aware of that, and of course the committee was not aware of it. A Senator just informed me of it; he told me that, on consultation with the Secretary of the Senate, he found that the precedent of the affair of the San Francisco steamship was a departure from the custom of Congress. He also further informed me, in private conversation—whether he was correct or not it is impossible for me to say—that since the defeat of a certain bill in this House, sent from the Senate, there is not, perhaps, any general disposition there to indulge in any great stretch of courtesy to this House. I therefore hope that, as we cannot act upon the resolution laid on the table by the House, and that the select committee appointed cannot even make a report under these circumstances of embarrassment, that my motion will be agreed to.

Mr. HIBBARD. Mr. Speaker, I will say that my reason for objecting to this proceeding is, that I am opposed in principle to the whole project of the gentleman from Kentucky, in his proposition to amend the Constitution. It is not, I believe, expedient to adopt such a measure, and I do not believe that Congress will authorize any such proceeding.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] permit me to ask a question?

Mr. EWING yielded the floor.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if the resolution of which he speaks is now in the possession of the House? Permit me here, however, to state, that I am advised that the resolution of which the gentleman speaks is no longer in the possession of the House.

Mr. EWING. The gentleman from Ohio does not seem to understand my motion.

Mr. DISNEY. And I am advised that it was transmitted from this body to the Senate, and disapproved.

Mr. EWING. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] did not, perhaps, understand my motion. The resolution is not in possession of this House; and it is for that very reason that I desire to move to recall it from the Senate, at the request of the Senator himself.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman from Kentucky did not hear the latter part of my remarks. I am advised that the resolution has gone to the Senate, and been disapproved of.

Mr. EWING. I will have to call the gentleman from Ohio to order for referring to the action of the Senate. I am not so officially advised.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was going to suggest to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] that it would be probably better for him to allow the Senate to dispose of it, if they have not already done so; and then, if he choose, he can ask the House to allow him to create a special committee on the subject. I suppose that is the object which he seeks, to let the House reconsider. And if that is his object—

Mr. EWING. I do not want to have it reconsidered.

Mr. HOUSTON. I supposed that the object of the gentleman was to have the matter referred to a committee of this House.

Mr. EWING. We have had a committee already appointed.

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; but I understand they cannot act, because of the fact that the resolution appointed a joint committee of both Houses, and the Senate will not join.

Mr. EWING. The gentleman from Alabama is misinformed. I deny—as I have a right, officially, at least, to deny—that the Senate have acted upon it; for there is no such official information here. I am now acting in compliance with the advice of a Senator who once presided over this House, and in whose parliamentary knowledge I have the utmost confidence—although it failed him in that instance, so far, at least, that it is not customary to appoint a joint committee on a proposition of this sort, or anything of general legislation. I move for the withdrawal of this resolution in compliance with this advice, and in order that a select committee may be appointed on the resolution of this House which will report on that matter, which is, at least, of sufficient importance to be examined.

I am not aware that, because the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. HIBBARD], or because any other gentleman, whatever influence he may have upon this floor, or with the country, has made up his mind, and has examined the subject so fully as to have satisfied himself about it, that therefore the country and the House are precluded from further investigation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind the gentleman from Kentucky that the question is not open to debate.

Mr. EWING. I was making an explanation.

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rules is not legitimately debatable.

Mr. EWING. What is the state of the question before the House? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question pending is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky himself to suspend the rules, so as to enable him to make the motion, which motion is not debatable.

Mr. EWING. Debate has sprung up upon the subject, and I do not want it to go by the board without examination. I believe this House has integrity of purpose enough to examine this matter, after one of its most respectable committees has reported that it ought to be examined, and after this House has adopted a resolution for the appointment of a committee for that purpose. I do not believe the House will stultify itself so far as to retrace its footsteps after having ordered an investigation, and therefore I asked the House to withdraw the resolution, a request which I presumed no gentleman would object to.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to suspend the rules, and it is not debatable.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to, two thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. EWING. I now move that a message be sent to the Senate, requesting that body to return the resolution asking for a joint committee upon the subject of an amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. HIBBARD. I ask for tellers upon that motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HIBBARD and EWING appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 53.

Mr. DEAN. I demand the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CUTTING. There are two or three important bills upon the Speaker's table which ought to be taken up and referred before we adjourn.

Mr. HIESTER. I move that the House adjourn.

The question was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

So the House adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 24, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

POST ROADS BILL.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to report to the Senate what steps have been taken to execute the 11th section of the "act to establish certain post roads, and for other purposes," approved the 31st day of August, 1853; and state whether it is the design of the Department to put in operation the service provided for in said section, and if not, for what reasons.

ADMISSIONS TO THE FLOOR.

On the motion of Mr. BRIGHT, the rule yesterday adopted, prescribing who shall enjoy the privilege of admission to the floor of the Senate, was so amended as to include the Mayor of Georgetown.

PRIVATE BILL DAY.

On the motion of Mr. BADGER, the following resolution was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That, for the residue of the present session, every Friday shall be set apart exclusively for the consideration of private bills on the general orders of the day; and that on the first Friday of every month no such bill shall be taken up to which there may be objection, or the consideration of which may lead to debate.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be directed to report to the Senate upon the expediency of increasing the rates of pensions of the noncommissioned officers who have served, or who may serve, in the Army of the United States.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SHIELDS presented the petition of Charles F. Fisher, praying Congress to purchase a painting executed by him, representing the battle of New Orleans; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. BRIGHT presented the petition of Michael Nourse, late chief clerk in the office of the Register of the Treasury, praying compensation for the several periods during which he performed duties as Register under a commission from the President of the United States, and, also, for acting as disbursing agent; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CASS presented the petition of William Rees, praying permission to select ten or twelve thousand acres of public land, to be laid out as a normal settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SLIDELL presented a petition of officers of the United States Navy, and the marine corps attached to the Gulf squadron during the late war with Mexico, and now belonging to the squadron operating in the Japan seas, praying to be placed upon the same footing as those who served on the coast of California and Mexico during the war; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TOUCEY presented the petition of Hotchkiss & Lewis, the petition of Josiah Leland, the petition of A. Lane & Co., and the petition of T. Lathrop & Son, praying the passage of a law to protect patentees and those holding rights under them, against the invasion of their patents by persons in the British provinces; which were referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, the memorial of Abner Bassett and others, owners and masters of vessels, pilots, and others, praying that a beacon may be placed on Black Ledge, at the entrance of the harbor of New London, Connecticut; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NORRIS presented a petition of citizens of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, praying for a grant of land to aid in the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of Niagara; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of the heirs of H. N. Cruger, praying compensation for losses sustained by Indian spoiliations in Florida during the years 1835 and 1836; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented a petition of inhabitants of the counties of Shelby, Menomonee, and Harrison, in the State of Iowa, praying the erection of a suitable military station in order to protect them from the attacks of the neighboring tribes of Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON presented a petition of citizens of Arkansas, for the establishment of a mail route from Brownsville, via Richwoods, Clear Lake, and Bocage's Mill, to Pine Bluff, Arkansas; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a petition of citizens of Jefferson, Dallas, and Bradley counties, in the State of Arkansas, praying the establishment of a mail route from Leigh post office, via Brushy Woods, to Store's Gin; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have been requested to present a memorial very numerous signed by citizens of Maine, asking that some provision of law may be made by which those soldiers who served in the war of 1812, and were imprisoned at Halifax and Dartmoor, may be entitled to a pension. To the consideration of this memorial I ask the careful attention of the Committee on Pensions. I think there were no persons who served during that war—indeed, I think there is no class of persons whatever—who have ever rendered services to the country, and who endured such hardships, which so much affected the health of all, as a body, as those imprisoned on that occasion. There are but a few left; and I think, of all who remain, none can be found who have not infirm constitutions. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

It was so referred.

Mr. TOUCEY presented a petition of Charles P. Williams and others, owners and agents of vessels, masters and pilots, and others, praying that a beacon may be placed on Sugar reef, and buoys at the eastern extremity of Watch Hill reef, and on Wamphassoc shoal, and that the breakwater in Stonington harbor may be repaired; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FITZPATRICK presented an additional document in relation to the petition of Hugh Wallace Wormeley; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON presented a document in relation to the claim of Sally T. B. Cochrane for compensation for a horse lost by her late husband in the military service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. NORRIS, it was Ordered That the documents on the files of the Senate relating to the application of the Mutual Insurance Company of Washington for a charter, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Theodore E. Elliot, praying compensation for a keel-boat furnished the Cherokee agent for the use of the United States, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. STUART, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to which was referred the petition of Hiram Moore and John Hascall, praying the renewal of their patent for a harvesting machine, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRIGHT. The Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill to provide for the surrender of certain bonds of the State of Indiana held by the United States, have directed me to report it back with an amendment in the form of a substitute, together with a report, which I ask may be printed.

The report was ordered to be printed.

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS TERRITORIES.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask the Senate now to proceed to the consideration of the special order of the day, the bill to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not press the consideration of that bill to-day. It is a matter of great importance, and Senators have not yet had time to examine the substitute which he reported from the committee yesterday.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire, that in speaking to members about the subject for the last two or three weeks I have discovered, I think, that a large portion of them have not read the bill, and I do not know of any way of getting them to read it but by entering upon the consideration of the subject. It is not my purpose to press it to a vote immediately. I will give such time as may be necessary. We shall not get to a vote upon the bill or the amendments for some days, I suppose, and my impression is, that the sooner the discussion upon it is commenced the better it will be. I submit to the Senator that my object is to act upon it at as early a day as possible.

I find it generally to be the case with my territorial bills, that if I do not get them acted on early in the session, they are crowded over by other business at the end of the session, and are always postponed for want of time. I deem it, therefore, my duty to keep the territorial bills as far ahead as I can. I acknowledge frankly to the Senate that there are a great many territorial bills that I want to have taken up as soon as possible, before the Senate take up other matters for consideration that may override them.

Mr. CHASE. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not press the consideration of the bill this morning. As introduced originally by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Dodge.] it was the simple bill which was presented to the Senate for its consideration at the last session. It has since undergone very important changes in the hands of the Committee on Territories, and been printed and laid on the tables of Senators embodying these changes. Only yesterday the committee changed the form of the bill altogether, and proposed to create two Territories instead of one, and also changed materially the provisions upon other questions of very great public interest; and the bill thus having been changed in fact into two bills, has been only laid on the tables of Senators this morning, and I presume no one has had an opportunity to read it. It involves very important matters, and I think that when we take it up it should be with a determination to proceed with it until it shall be disposed of.

It is not probable that the Senate will be in session to-morrow, owing to a circumstance which we all very much regret, and which is within the knowledge of all the members of the Senate. The special question of privilege with regard to the right of a gentleman from Vermont to his seat in the Senate has also been made the special order for to-morrow; and it has been very desirable that all the Senators should know their exact position on the floor, and the representation of the States should be as full as possible. It therefore seems to me that the discussion upon that question should precede the discussion on this bill. Under all these circumstances, therefore, I would suggest to the Senator from Illinois whether it would not be better to postpone this bill until some day of next week, and make it the special order, with the understanding that it shall then be proceeded with?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. So far as I am concerned, I do not care how soon the debate commences, and I think the sooner the better; but in order to obviate the objection made by the Senator from Ohio, I make this suggestion: The chairman of the Committee on Territories [Mr. Douglas] is as well prepared now to deliver to the Senate his opinions on the bill as he ever will be, and I think if it were taken up, and the chairman allowed the opportunity of making his explanation, the Senate would be better informed upon it by that process than they will be by any other. If, after he shall have made his explanatory speech, gentlemen desire to postpone the bill until to-morrow or the next day, I have no objection; but I think it will facilitate it materially by permitting the chairman to have the bill taken up, so that he may express himself upon the subject to-day. I hope we shall pursue that course.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not wish to have the question put upon any point of courtesy to me. I have no speech to make. I shall wish to make an explanation of ten or fifteen minutes, in order to call the attention of the Senate to the points of the bill; and I am willing to do it whenever the bill is brought up for discussion, whether to-day, or at such other time as the Senate may determine. If the Senate see fit to take it up to-day, and postpone it until Monday, and make it the special order from day to day until disposed of, I am willing to consent to it.

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly; we desire that to be done.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall acquiesce cheerfully in any action which the Senate may take, provided they will consider the bill at an early day, and keep it up until we get through with it.

Mr. CASS. I submit, under the circumstances, to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Territories, whether it would not be better to let the bill lie over until Monday? It embraces important points, about which there will be a great deal of discussion, and many gentlemen say they have not read the bill, and are not prepared to enter upon its consideration. It seems to me, therefore, that just comity requires that in so important a measure there should be no appearance of precipitancy, nor should any effort to force any gentleman to consider it when he is not prepared be permitted. I submit, then, whether, under the circumstances, it would not be better to let it lie over until the day named, and then be taken up, so that no one can be charged with precipitating the subject unnecessarily?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It seeming to be the general wish of the Senate that it should be postponed until Monday, and made the special order for that day—

Mr. SUMNER. Say to-day week.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not wish to take it up so late in the week—I will submit the motion that the bill be postponed to, and made the special order of the day for, Monday next, and be the special order from day to day until it is disposed of.

Mr. DIXON. I hope the motion of the Senator from Illinois will prevail. I think it due to the Senate that they should have an opportunity of understanding precisely the bearings and the effect of the amendment which has been recently incorporated into the bill, as originally reported by the committee—I mean that portion of the amendment which alludes to slavery within the Territories proposed to be organized—Nebraska and Kansas. So far as I am individually concerned, I am perfectly satisfied with the amendment reported by the Senator from Illinois, and which has been incorporated into the bill. If I understand it, it reaches a point which I am most anxious to attain—that is to say, it virtually repeals the act of 1820, commonly called the Missouri compromise act, declaring that slavery should not exist north of the line of 36° 30' north latitude.

I here take occasion to remark, merely with a view of placing myself right before the Senate, that I think my position in relation to this matter has been somewhat misunderstood.

I have been charged, through one of the leading journals of this city, with having proposed the amendment which I notified the Senate I intended to offer, with a view to embarrass the Democratic party. It was said that I was a Whig from Kentucky, and that the amendment proposed by me should be looked upon with suspicion by the opposite party. Sir, I merely wish to remark that, upon the question of slavery, I know no Whiggery, and I know no Democracy. I am a pro-slavery man. I am from a slaveholding State; I represent a slaveholding constituency; and I am here to maintain the rights of that people whenever they are presented before the Senate.

The amendment, which I notified the Senate that I should offer at the proper time, has been incorporated by the Senator from Illinois into the bill which he has reported to the Senate. The bill, as now amended, meets my views, and I have no objection to it. I shall, at the proper time, as far as I am able to do so, aid and assist the Senator from Illinois, and others who are anxious to carry through this proposition, with the feeble abilities I may be able to bring to bear upon it. I think it due to myself to make this explanation, because I do not wish it to be understood that upon a question like this I have, or could have, any motive except that which should influence a man anxious to secure what he believes to be a great principle—that is, congressional non-interference in all the Territories, so far as this great question of slavery is concerned.

I never did believe in the propriety of passing the Missouri compromise. I thought it was the result of necessity. I never thought that the great Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Clay, when he advocated that measure, did so because his judgment approved it, but because it was the result of a combination of circumstances which drove him to the position he assumed; and I have never thought that that measure received the sanctions either of his heart or of his head.

The amendment, then, which I gave notice that I would propose—and which I intended to have proposed, if it had not been rendered wholly unnecessary by the amendment reported by the Senator from Illinois, from the Committee on Territories, of which he is the honored chairman—I intended to offer, under the firm conviction that I was carrying out the principles settled in the compromise acts of 1850; and which leave the whole question of slavery with the people, and without any congressional interference. For over the subject of slavery, either in the States or Territories of the United States, I always have believed, and have always contended, that Congress had no power whatever; and that consequently, the act of 1820, commonly known as the Missouri Compromise act, is unconstitutional; and at the proper time I shall endeavor to satisfy the Senate and the country of the truth of these propositions.

Mr. DOUGLAS. As this discussion has begun, I feel it to be my duty to say a word in explanation. I am glad to hear the Senator from Kentucky say that the bill, as it now stands, accomplishes all that he desired to accomplish by his amendment, because his amendment seemed to myself, and to some with whom I have consulted, to mean more than what he now explains it to mean, and what I am glad he did not intend it should mean.

We supposed that it not only wiped out the legislation which Congress had heretofore adopted, excluding slavery, but that it affirmatively legislated slavery into the Territory. The object of the committee was neither to legislate slavery in nor out of the Territories; neither to introduce nor exclude it; but to remove whatever obstacles Congress had put there, and apply the doctrine of congressional non-intervention, in accordance with the principles of the compromise measures of 1850, and allow the people to do as they pleased upon this, as well as all other matters affecting their interests.

The explanation of the honorable Senator from Kentucky shows that his meaning was not what many supposed it to be, who judged simply from the phraseology of the amendment. I deem this explanation due to the Senator and to myself.

Mr. DIXON. I am obliged to the Senator from Illinois for placing me right on that point. Surely the phraseology of the amendment which was proposed by me would not authorize any such construction as that which seems to have been given it—that it would legislate slavery within the limits of the Territory now proposed to be organized. Now, sir, the language of that amendment is, that the law itself shall not be so construed as to prevent persons from taking their slaves into that Territory, but that they shall have the same right to do so as if the law had never been passed. What is the effect of that? It only places them in the position that they would have occupied if the law had never been passed. It does not secure to them any right at all by legislative enactment here, but merely removes an obstacle which legislative enactment here had thrown in the way of the slaveholder in taking his property within the proposed limits. If it were construed otherwise, it never could have been my intention to act on the principle which is suggested; for I will here take leave to remark, that I have always believed and maintained, as a sound proposition, and expect to maintain in the discussion in this case, that the power of Congress never did exist at all over the subject of slavery, either within or without the limits of the Territories.

The motion of Mr. DOUGLAS was agreed to.

FRENCH SPOILATION BILL.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate now to take up the bill "to provide for the ascertainment and satisfaction of claims of American citizens for spoiliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801." I make the motion, not for the purpose of asking the Senate to act upon the bill to-day, but simply that some future day may be assigned for its consideration.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now ask that next Monday week be assigned for the consideration of this bill; and I give notice that I shall, on that day, ask for a vote of the Senate upon it. I do not propose to discuss it. I should hardly deem it proper or just to the Senate so to do. It is a question with which all are familiar. I desire only that the Senate shall give us a vote upon it at as early a day as possible. I ask, therefore, that the bill may be postponed until next Monday week, and made the special order for that day.

The motion was agreed to.

OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS.

Mr. CHASE. As there seems to be no other business now before the Senate, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by me some days since, as to holding Executive sessions with open doors. I am not anxious to do anything more than simply to ask for a vote of the Senate on the question.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution; which is as follows:

"Resolved, That the following rule be adopted for the regulation of proceedings in the Senate, and that so much of the 39th, 40th, and 41st rules as may be inconsistent with the rule hereby established, be rescinded:

"All sessions and all proceedings of the Senate shall be public and open, except when matters communicated in confidence by the President shall be received, and in such other cases as the Senate by resolution, from time to time, may specially order."

Mr. MASON. A resolution of similar import has been before the Senate since I have been here, and it was introduced, I think, by the predecessor of the honorable Senator from Ohio, and underwent some discussion. I doubt not Senators have their minds made up upon the subject; and therefore, to test whether or not we will go into that subject, I move that the resolution lie upon the table, and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PETTIT. It seems to me that that is precisely our rule now.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 23, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bell, Butler, Cass, Cooper, Dawson, Dixon, Evans, Everett, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Sebastian, Shields, Smith, Stuart, Thompson of New Jersey, Toombs and Tooley—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Gwin, Hamlin, Norris, Pettit, Slidell, Sumner, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Williams—14.

So the resolution was ordered to lie upon the table.

PAMELA BROWN.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill for the relief of Pamela Brown, widow of Major General Jacob Brown, deceased.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place her name upon the list of pensioners, and pay her a pension at the rate of one half of the pay per month to which her husband was entitled at the day of his death, to commence the 1st of January, 1838, and continue during her natural life.

At the request of Mr. ADAMS, the report of the Committee on Pensions was read, from which it appears that Mrs. Brown made application to the proper Department for a pension, under the fifteenth section of the act of 1812, and the act of 29th of January, 1813. Her application was disallowed under the decision of the Secretary of War, Mr. Poinsett, who admitted the evidence, but feared establishing the precedent. The case was referred to Congress. A bill twice passed the House of Representatives, but failed to be reached in the Senate. It was subsequently again referred to the Third Auditor, Mr. Gallaher, met his unqualified approbation, was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. McClelland, but by him disallowed upon the same objection which was presented by Mr. Poinsett.

The claim is based on the fact that General Brown died of wounds received and disease incurred in the line of his duty in the war of 1812. Accompanying this petition is the testimony of the physician who attended him at the time he received his wounds, and for several years afterwards; also that of Justice McLean, of the Supreme Court; of Dr. Lawson, Surgeon General of the Army; of Col. Kirby, General Brown's aid-de-camp; of the Hon. John A. Dix; the order of the Secretary of War announcing his death to the Army, and the inscription on the monument erected by Congress to his memory, written by John Quincy Adams while President of the United States, all of which sustain the fact that his days were abridged by the wounds received in his country's service.

Mrs. Brown asks the favorable action of Congress on her petition on precedents established by Congress at its last and a former session; as follows: By the act of June 23, 1836; by the act of January 20, 1853, for the relief of Elizabeth Armistead; by the act of January 27, 1853, for the relief of Margaret Worth; by the act of February 26, 1853, for the relief of Mary W. Thompson, Elizabeth V. Lomax, and Mrs. A. M. Dade; and by the act of January 27, 1853, for the relief of Mrs. Ann C. Belknap.

Mr. CASS. Allow me to express the hope that this bill will pass unanimously, as a tribute of justice to the living and respect to the memory of the dead, who was as gallant and meritorious an officer as ever bore his country's standard into battle. I knew him well when living; I knew him during his whole service in the war, and subsequently, until the time of his death; and I knew personally, as well as the fact can be known, that he never recovered from the effects of the wounds received in that tremendous contest on Niagara river, which conferred such honor upon our country, and now forms such a bright page in our history. He died poor. I hope, under such circumstances, the Senate will pass the bill immediately. It is not an act of gratitude; it is an act of justice.

Mr. ADAMS. I asked for the reading of the report to see whether there were facts justifying the making of this case different from other cases provided for at the last session. I find there are.

Mr. CASS. It is all right.

M. ADAMS. It is. In other cases the pension was only allowed for five years. The facts stated seem to have justified the committee in reporting the bill different from them, and I make no objection to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

WIDOW OF CAPTAIN GUNNISON.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill granting five years' half pay to the widow of Captain Gunnison.

Mr. CASS. Yesterday when the objection was raised by my colleague with respect to the name

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 26, 1854.

NEW SERIES.....No. 16.

of Mrs. Gunnison, I thought that by reference to a letter received from her the other day, I could ascertain what it is; but on reference to it, I find that it has only the initial of her christian name. Certainly, however, there can be no objection to saying in the bill "Mrs. Gunnison, widow of Captain Gunnison." That would not prevent the bill passing through the Department. We pass bills with similar phraseology every day. We often say "the widow and children" of A, B, and C. If we use such phraseology as I suggest, there can be no question as to the identity of the person. That is all that is necessary. I submit, therefore, to my colleague whether he will not, under the circumstances, withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDENT. There are two blanks in the bill—one in the name of Mrs. Gunnison, the other in the name of Captain Gunnison. One or the other should be filled to identify the person to be relieved.

Mr. CASS. It should be "Mrs. Gunnison, widow of Captain Gunnison." That would be a perfect identification of the person.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. The bill has to go to the House. By the time it comes up for consideration there, we can get the name of the lady, and the House can amend the bill by inserting it, or if it comes back to the Senate, it can be informally inserted by unanimous consent.

Mr. STUART. My colleague misapprehended me a little in saying that I objected to the bill yesterday. I merely made the suggestion that the bill probably would be of no value without being amended by the filling of the blank. For myself, I am very anxious that the earliest legislation possible should be had upon the subject, and I have no objection to the insertion of "Mrs." as now proposed. I think that to describe the lady as the widow of the late Captain Gunnison, designating his christian name, would be sufficient.

Mr. CASS. If the Chair will let the bill be informally passed over for a few minutes, we can advert to the register and find the christian name of the deceased.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that will be done.

Mr. CASS. I have now found the christian name of Captain Gunnison. I therefore hope that, by unanimous consent, the bill will be amended so as to read "Mrs. Gunnison, widow of Captain John W. Gunnison, late an officer in the Army of the United States."

No objection was made, and the bill was so amended.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

CAPTORS OF BRITISH SCHOONER MARY.

The bill "for the relief of Noah Miller, of Lincolnville, in the State of Maine, and for the relief of other persons," was read a second time; and,

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate proceeded to consider it, as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the payment of the sum of $10,000 to the legal representatives of Noah Miller, and to such other persons, or their legal representatives, as aided, either as boat's crew or pilot, in making prize of the British schooner Mary, and taking her into port, in the year 1814, in the Penobscot bay, in such proportion as the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine.

Mr. HAMLIN. The report accompanying this bill is somewhat lengthy, and I can, perhaps, state the substance of it much more briefly, and in much less time, than it would require to read the report. This bill has passed the Senate at least half a dozen different times, but has never been reached in the House in time for action there. The vessel named in the bill was seized by the persons to whom it is proposed to grant this money, but it was subsequently taken possession of by a custom-house officer, wrongfully and against law, and one half of the proceeds of the vessel were paid into the Treasury of the United States, when, in truth and in fact, under all the laws regulating prizes, it rightfully belonged to the captors. This bill provides for the payment of $10,000 of that sum to those who captured the vessel.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF WILLIAM WEEKS.

The bill for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of William Weeks was read a second time; and,

On motion by Mr. SLIDELL, the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposed to confirm the claim of the heirs and legal representatives of William Weeks to a tract of land containing two thousand and thirty arpents, situated in the parish of West Feliciana, in the State of Louisiana, being the same tract which was granted to him by an order of survey of the Governor of West Florida, of May 31, 1806; with a proviso that the act shall only operate as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

IRA BALDWIN.

On motion by Mr. ALLEN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill for the relief of Ira Baldwin.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to issue a land warrant for three hundred and twenty acres of land to Ira Baldwin, a Canada volunteer, to be located upon any of the unappropriated lands of the United States; and also to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay him $180, for three months' extra pay, as compensation for his services in the late war with Great Britain.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to say to the Senate that that bill passed both Houses at the last session of Congress. It passed the Senate at some late period—not the last day, but a day or two preceding the adjournment, and amidst the confusion incident to the close of all sessions of Congress, owing to some mistake, no doubt unavoidable, it failed to reach the President of the United States for his signature. The report is a brief one, and explains the reason on which the committee have placed the bill. I think there can be no doubt that this individual is clearly entitled to the relief which the bill proposes to grant to him.

Mr. WALKER called for the reading of the report of the Committee on Private Land Claims; and it was accordingly read.

It sets forth that Ira Baldwin is a citizen of the United States, born in Connecticut; but for some years anterior to, and at the commencement of the late war with Great Britain, he had resided at Kingston, in Upper Canada, and was engaged in the business of transportation, owning three river boats, and half of a schooner. Immediately after the declaration of war he abandoned his residence and business, returned to the United States, entered as a volunteer in the American service, and distinguished himself by serving with great ability on the Government vessels on Lake Superior, and also as master and pilot of a gunboat employed in the transportation of troops, military stores, and provisions along Lake Ontario and the river St. Lawrence frontier, under the direction of the Quartermaster General. His knowledge of the localities fitted him to perform such service with success. He was present at the capture of Little York, and afterwards assisted in fitting out and conducting the flotilla which transported the army commanded by General Wilkinson down the St. Lawrence river, to the French Mills. The committee refer to various proofs from officers engaged with him as to the fidelity with which he performed these services. In consequence of his bearing arms against Great Britain, his property in Canada was confiscated. The committee do not allow the claim for indemnity in consequence of the confiscation of property; but they think the petitioner clearly entitled, under the laws of 1816 and 1817, to three months' extra pay, and three hundred and twenty acres of bounty land, and accordingly report a bill granting that relief.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

SCHOONER GRAMPUS.

The bill for the relief of the widows and orphans of the officers and seamen of the United States schooner Grampus, who were lost in that vessel in March, 1843, near the coast of the United States, was read a second time; and,

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the Senate proceeded to consider it, as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to extend to the widows and orphans of the officers and seamen of the schooner Grampus, the provisions of the act of August 14, 1848, "for the relief of the widows and orphans of the officers, seamen, and marines of the brig Somers," and the act of February 3, 1853, "for the relief of the widows and relatives of the officers and seamen of the United States brig Washington, who were lost overboard in a hurricane."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF DANIEL LOOMIS.

On motion by Mr. WADE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Daniel Loomis, deceased. It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle, upon principles of equity, the accounts of Daniel Loomis, so far as he was an original contractor for making the Cumberland road, and to pay to his legal representatives any balance which may be found due.

Mr. WADE. This bill was passed in full Senate at the last session of Congress, and it has been reported upon again by the Committee on Claims, unanimously. I suppose there will be no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

FRIGATE PHILADELPHIA.

On motion by Mr. FISH, the bill reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs for the relief of the captors of the frigate Philadelphia was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct that, in consideration of the extraordinary and meritorious services rendered by Stephen Decatur, as commander of the ketch Intrepid, on the occasion of the recapture and destruction of the frigate Philadelphia, in the harbor of Tripoli, on February 16, 1804, $15,000 be paid, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, to his widow and his three nieces, Priscilla D. Twiggs, Anna P. Stockton, and Mary H. McKnight, to be distributed, one half to the widow, and the other half equally among the nieces; that $90,000 be paid to the surviving officers (except the commander) and crew of the Intrepid, or to the widows, if any, of such as are dead; and if there be no widows, then to the legal representatives of such deceased captors, who were engaged in the capture and destruction of the frigate, to be distributed pro rata among the officers and crew, their widows or the legal representatives, their assigns, or the lawful attorneys of said parties, appointed under their hands and seals, according to the rates fixed by the sixth section of the act of April twenty-third, eighteen hundred, for the better government of the Navy of the United States: Provided, That in no case shall any creditor of any deceased officer, seaman, or marine be entitled to receive any of the benefits of this act; and also, that any portion of this appropriation which may remain unclaimed in the Treasury at the expiration of the term of three years from the date of the act, shall be carried to the surplus fund.

Mr. HUNTER. Is there any report in the case?

The PRESIDENT. There is not.

Mr. FISH. The Committee on Naval Affairs

at this session did not submit a written report. The bill is precisely the same in its terms as that which passed the Senate unanimously at the last Congress. The subject has been examined over and over again in this and the other branch of Congress, and has alternately received the sanction of one and the other House, but has never been duly passed into a law, because it has not received the sanction of both Houses at the same session. A difference between the representatives of one of the principal claimants has heretofore, to a great extent, embarrassed the bill. The bill which passed the Senate at the last Congress, and which is the same as the one now reported, was framed so as to meet that difference, and suit both parties claiming as representatives of that officer. The bill passed the Senate at the first session of the last Congress, unanimously. It provides for the distribution of the valuation of the frigate in accordance with the prize act, as it is called, of 1802, with the single exception that the share of Commodore Decatur is made somewhat larger than it would be under the prize act. The valuation of the vessel is $115,000.

Mr. HUNTER. Why is the new principle introduced into this bill, as I understand it, of a distribution and division between the widow and the nieces, instead of the heirs and executors?

Mr. HAMLIN. This bill passed the Senate at the last Congress without opposition, and I think there can be no opposition to it now. There was at one time an opposition to it in the Senate, on account of a difference between the parties who are interested in the appropriation. They acquiesce, I understand now, in the distribution proposed. The parties are entitled to it; and as to the manner in which it is distributed, I do not think that we should raise technical objections when they themselves are satisfied.

Mr. BAYARD. I am in favor of this bill; but I should like to see it amended in one respect, and I will submit a motion for that purpose. The bill provides, as regards the commander of the vessel, for the distribution of the sum appropriated among certain parties. That is all proper enough. The individuals who are to receive that part of the appropriation, within the intention of Congress, are sufficiently pointed out; but when you come to the distribution of the residue of the fund among the other officers and the crew, the provision is, in the first place, that the money is to be paid "to the surviving officers and crew of the ketch Intrepid, or to the widows, if any, of such as are dead"—that is all right—"or if there be no widow, then to the legal representatives of such deceased captors who were engaged in the capture and destruction of the frigate as aforesaid, to be distributed pro rata among the said officers and crew, their widows, or the legal representatives, their assigns, or the lawful attorneys of said parties." I think the provision ought not to extend beyond the lineal descendants; therefore the provision ought not to be for the legal representatives, but for the surviving children, or their issue.

It is true there is a subsequent provision that no creditor shall receive any benefit under the bill; but it is not at least questionable whether, if the money be paid to the legal representatives of the deceased parties, (which would of course, within the meaning of the law, include their executors or administrators,) and the fund goes into their hands, a creditor may not have a right to claim it at law, although the money is not to be paid to him under the bill?

Is it not a matter of question whether, if the money were paid to the representative of a party, it would not form a part of the assets of the estate? It might be so construed. The object of Congress is, I suppose, to make a gratuity to the individual, if living; if not, to his widow; and if his widow be dead, then to his lineal descendants. I do not know whether it will extend to collaterals or not; my impression, however, would be against that. The words in the bill, "the legal representatives, their assigns, or the lawful attorneys of said parties," would extend the provision to the payment of individuals who might have advanced money upon speculation on the necessities of the parties. I will therefore move to strike out of the seventh line of the second section the words "the legal representatives of such deceased captors," and insert "the surviving children of the deceased captors, or their issue."

Mr. FISH. I accept the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I also move to make the same amendment in other parts of the section, so as to make it consistent.

Mr. FISH and Mr. BADGER. That follows, as a matter of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STUART in the chair.) The Chair understands that there is no objection to the amendment; the bill will therefore be modified accordingly.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendment was concurred in; the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF THE RUSSIAN MINISTER.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President: I discharge a melancholy duty in announcing to the Senate that the Hon. Alexander de Bodisco, the Minister of Russia to this Government, departed this life, at his residence in this District, on Monday last, and I am informed that his funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon, at three o'clock. This eminent gentleman, Mr. President, was known to all of us, officially, and, I presume, to most of us personally; and we knew him, while always devoted to the interests and the honor of his country, to have adorned the society in which he moved, by an exemplary and virtuous life.

He was the oldest member of the diplomatic corps at Washington, having resided here, as the Minister of his Government, for some seventeen years; and by matrimonial alliance in our country he had drawn around him a large and cherished circle of family connections. It was my fortune—my good fortune—to have known him well for many years; and to have been in the habitual interchange with him of those kind courtesies of society which smooth, while they adorn, our varied paths of life. By his lamented death, his Government has lost a zealous and faithful Minister, and his surviving family and connections an affectionate and devoted husband, parent, and friend. Knowing that—as a mark of respect to the occasion, as well as to the memory of the deceased Minister—Senators will desire to be present at the funeral, I offer to the Senate the following resolution:

It being made known to the Senate that the Hon. Alexander de Bodisco, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Russia to the United States, departed this life, at his residence in this District on Monday last, and that his funeral will take place to-morrow, it is Resolved, As a mark of respect to the Government of the deceased Minister, in amity with the United States, and in further respect to his memory and virtues, and to enable Senators to attend his funeral, that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it will adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. GWIN. I hope that resolution will not pass, though I am perfectly willing that a motion should be made to adjourn over till Thursday next, with the understanding that we may show our respect, as individual members of society, but not as Senators, to a foreign Minister. If Congress adjourns on the death of a foreign Minister, it will be establishing a precedent, for it will be the first time that such a resolution has ever gone on the public records. I indorse everything that the Senator from Virginia has said with regard to Mr. Bodisco, but I think we had better simply pass a resolution, that when the Senate adjourns it be to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. MASON. I stated, before I offered the resolution, that I did it upon consultation with, and with the approbation of several Senators who are older, more experienced, and wiser than I am. I confess that the form in which it has been offered met my entire approbation. The Minister of a foreign court is the representative of the Sovereignty of his country, and is accredited to the Government to which he is sent as such; and it follows, as a consequence, that he is the guest of the nation; he has a perfect immunity of his person and of his property, and he is recognized and treated as the immediate representative of the sovereign who has sent him. He is the guest of the nation. I cannot see, therefore, that we have gone further than the strictest propriety would require, in what is proposed; and if it be the first instance—and I am informed that it is, and we have made some search to ascertain the fact—in which a Minister of a foreign Government in amity with us has died at the seat of Government while the Congress of the United States was sitting, I should be gratified, for one, to set that example of respect to foreign Sovereignities.

Mr. BUTLER. I am reconciled to vote for that resolution upon a ground which has not been assigned, though I think it is a very good one. I think Mr. Bodisco, and all other ambassadors, occupy an official relation to this body. Primarily, of course, all negotiations are conducted between the Ministers and the President of the United States; but we know that their communications come to this body, and we are thus, in some measure, associated with the Ministers from abroad. In that point of view, I can see a propriety in passing the resolution.

Mr. HAMLIN. It seems to me that the resolution draws the line of distinction precisely where it should be drawn. It provides that the Senate shall adjourn over, allowing Senators, in their individual capacity, to attend the funeral if they see fit. It does not bind the Senate, and does not propose that the Senate shall attend the funeral in a body. It seems to me that the line of distinction drawn in the resolution is precisely where it should be drawn.

Mr. CASS. I regret very much that there should be any opposition to the adoption of the resolution. It seems to me to be very unexceptionable. This gentleman came here as an ambassador from one of the highest Powers in Europe, and he died in the midst of us. Nothing can be more proper, under the circumstances, as a mark of respect for his Government, than to give Senators the opportunity of attending his funeral. The Senator from Maine has just observed that that is the very purpose for which we adjourn, that we, as individuals, may attend the funeral, as a mark of respect. I like the resolution. It is a mark of respect that will be appreciated in Russia, and I should be very happy to have it passed.

Mr. GWIN. I do not object to a resolution to adjourn over till Thursday, but I wish to know if there ever has been such a resolution placed upon the records of this body. I object to making the resolution so formal. I am willing to vote, that when we adjourn, it shall be to meet on Thursday next, under the circumstances, so that Senators may have an opportunity of attending the funeral, if they wish to do so. That form will be better. I shall vote against the resolution in its present form, but I will vote for a motion to adjourn over till Thursday, with the understanding, that it is to give Senators an opportunity to attend the funeral.

Mr. SHIELDS. I agree in some respects with the Senator from California. I should be very much gratified to see the Senate adjourn over, but I will ask my honorable friend from Virginia to reconsider the latter part of the resolution. It reads thus: "Resolved, as a mark of respect to the Government of the deceased Minister." I think that, perhaps, under existing circumstances, in the present aspect of the world, that might as well be omitted. "In amity with the United States." That is true. "And in further respect to his memory and virtues." I have no objection to that. "And to enable Senators to attend his funeral." That is very proper. But I should think that something in this form would, on the whole, be better: "It being made known to the Senate that the Hon. Alexander de Bodisco, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, &c., has departed this life, therefore, to enable Senators to attend his funeral, resolved, that when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Thursday next:" because if the course proposed be pursued in relation to this deceased minister, it would be necessary to pursue it in relation to all ministers and all representatives, no matter how insignificant or feeble their Government might be. I apprehend there is no instance of a legislative assembly taking this course in relation to the death of a minister. I know of none. I should be very much gratified, however, to hear from my honorable friend from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] or from my honorable friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. Everett,] who are better acquainted with the diplomatic courtesies of Governments, as to the custom in such cases.

Mr. MASON. I would suggest to the honorable Senator from Illinois, that he knows very well that it is impossible to reconcile all shades of opinion in the language of a resolution of this kind.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the Senator permit me to ask whether it would not be better simply to announce the fact of the death, and thereupon adjourn? I think that would be amply sufficient.

Mr. MASON. I submit that the expression of respect for his Government is a term that is appropriate while the Government exists in amity with ours; and as to the expression of respect towards a gentleman occupying his position in society, it is a matter of chivalrous courtesy. And whatever may be the present position of that Government, as known to present history, we have nothing in the world to do with it. I should prefer to have the resolution pass as it is. It was prepared with some care, and not by myself alone.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senate will not desire, I imagine, to render honors in connection with an event of this character, however melancholy the event itself may be, and however much to be regretted by every member of the body, which would be considered unusual throughout the world; nor will the Senate for a moment be willing that it should fail in the bestowment of such testimonials of regret and respect as may be due to a high official of another Government, with which we are now at peace. I desire to have the light and the knowledge and experience which has been obtained by older gentlemen upon this floor to guide me. The distinguished Senator from Michigan, and the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. EVERETT,] and others, have large experience, and can inform us what is customary at foreign courts when events of this kind occur. I will gladly vote to render such testimonials of respect under the circumstances as are given elsewhere, but no more. So far as we are concerned, the matter is important only in respect to the precedent we shall establish, as this is the first instance in which a matter of this kind has come before the Senate. Oft-recurring precedents, we find, embarrass our action, and tend to the consumption of our time. We adjourn on the death of a member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives, and in some instances we have adjourned when persons who were not members have died. Such precedents, when once established, are never departed from. They grow up, and will continue. By precedents we are constrained until they become inexorable, and business of great moment is sacrificed to a questionable custom. While, therefore, we pay becoming respect, let us pause ere we embarrass our future action. We may learn from the experience which gentlemen have derived in other countries what course we should now pursue.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will offer the amendment more formally which I suggested. It is as follows:

It being made known to the Senate that the Hon. Alexander de Bodisco, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Russia to the United States, departed this life at his residence in this District on Monday last, and that his funeral will take place to-morrow: Therefore, to enable Senators to attend his funeral—

Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it will adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. BAYARD. If I understand the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, it seems to take from the resolution what should be kept in it—the diplomatic capacity of the deceased, as a Minister from a foreign Government.

Mr. SHIELDS. If there is to be any contest about the amendment, I will withdraw it.

Mr. WALKER. I call for the yeas and nays upon the resolution.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the Senator from Virginia will withdraw his resolution; we had better do nothing than do it by constraint.

Mr. CASS. It destroys the whole merit of it.

Mr. GWIN. I move to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved," and inserting, "that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Thursday next."

Mr. MASON. The resolution was intended as a mark of respect to the Government represented here by the gentleman who has died while Congress is sitting, as well as a mark of respect to his memory. I think we should pursue the course indicated by it. Other gentlemen think differently. They may be right, and I may be wrong; but I am satisfied of one thing, that there should be no discussion upon the resolution—there should be no entry of yeas and nays upon the Journal upon it. I therefore withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT. The resolution is withdrawn.

Mr. WELLER. I know the fact that a great many Senators desire to attend the funeral to-morrow, and for the purpose of enabling them to do so, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, together with a set of works illustrative of the Exhibition of 1851, in London, sent by the English Government to the Government of the United States.

The message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on the Library.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the Senate again proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 24, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. Reports are in order from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Public Lands, asked that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of petitions in the following cases, and that they be laid upon the table:

The petition of Abner R. Hill, praying for a grant of land to aid in the construction of a military academy in Alabama;

The petition of William B. Honnell and others, praying for a donation of land for the purpose of constructing an iron foundry in the State of Alabama;

The petition of Joseph Wright and others, of Mahoning, in favor of a homestead law;

The petition of citizens of New York, in favor of Dawson's homestead bill;

The petition of citizens of Warren county, Ohio, in favor of a free homestead;

The petition of sundry citizens of Richland county, Ohio, praying for law reform;

Four petitions of citizens of Ohio, praying for the freedom of public lands to actual settlers and cultivators of the soil;

The petition of William Danyrs and sixty-five others, praying for the distribution of public lands in limited quantities to actual settlers;

The petition of M. Elliot and other citizens of Ohio, praying for a distribution of land to actual settlers; and

The petition of R. C. Lyon and one hundred and fifty-eight other citizens, for the same purpose.

Mr. COBB, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House, entitled "A bill granting to the State of Alabama public lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction of certain railroads within said State," reported the same back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. C. said: The committee, after two months of deliberation, have determined to report one railroad bill. It was not their intention, however, to move that it be put upon its passage; nor was it their intention to ask that anything of so great importance should be immediately considered.

If it be the pleasure of the House to take up this bill and all other similar bills, affecting, as they do, the interests of the different States, and act upon them, although they may, every one of them, be voted down, whether we are satisfied or not we shall have to yield to the decision of a majority of the House. We have determined, however, not to move to put a single bill reported by us upon its passage, but to allow them to go to the Committee of the Whole, to take their places upon the Calendar, and take their chances for the action of the House.

Mr. LETCHER. What is the question before the House?

Mr. COBB. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be printed. Now the gentleman knows what the question is. I was proceeding to say that we have determined to ask that no bill reported by us shall be put upon its passage, and not again to submit ourselves to the charge which was unjustly made against us during the last Congress, that we put everything reported by us upon its passage, to the exclusion of other business of the House. Therefore, although this bill involves interests of very great importance to the State of Alabama, I have moved to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I desire to ask my colleague whether the bill he has reported provides for the Gerard and Mobile railroad?

Mr. COBB. It does embrace that railroad.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I desire to ask my colleague one other question. I wish to know whether he has reported other bills in connection with the one I have referred to, or whether he has allowed it to stand upon its own merits?

Mr. COBB. We have reported every bill which the Committee on Public Lands have determined to report, in one general bill. They have declined to recommend at least one half the cases for which applications have been made from the State of Alabama. But such as they have agreed to recommend, are all reported in this bill.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I give notice, then, that when the proper time shall arrive, I shall move to disconnect these bills, and to allow each one to stand upon its own individual merits. There are cases embraced in this bill that I know nothing about. The Gerard and Mobile railroad, to which I have referred, I do know something about, and I know that it has merits. I desire, therefore, that it may be permitted to stand upon its own merits, and that the others may also stand upon their individual merits. I shall therefore move, at the proper time, to disconnect these bills.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would like to ask my colleague upon my left [Mr. Cobb] what railroads he has included in the bill he has reported from the northern section of Alabama?

Mr. COBB. The Charleston and Memphis railroad, extending the whole length of the gentleman's district, is embraced.

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order. I want to know whether this debate is in order upon a motion to commit?

Mr. HOUSTON. Debate is certainly in order upon that motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion pending is to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and print.

Mr. LETCHER. But gentlemen are not discussing that motion; they are discussing the merits of the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the gentleman is certainly mistaken. I have no wish to say anything further, but I had no design to discuss the merits of the bill in the question I asked.

The SPEAKER. The motion to commit and print is debatable, and the Chair is of opinion that it opens the merits of the measure itself to discussion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to the reference of the bill. I asked a question in reference to it, because I had no knowledge of what the Committee on Public Lands had done, and I desired to know how the bill would affect that portion of the State from which I come. I have, however, no objection to its going to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be printed, and I can examine the bill for myself.

The question was taken; and the bill was referred.

DONATIONS OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to permit me to offer a resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to report to this House, as early as practicable, the number of acres of public land which has been donated by the Government of the United States, as near as may be, and for what purposes, and specifying the quantity for each purpose, and in what States and Territories.

Mr. MACE. I object.

Mr. LETCHER. I call for the regular order of business. The gentleman from New York can get all that information at the Land Office.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution cannot be entertained.

Mr. COBB. If the dander of some gentlemen had not got up, I should have asked the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution; and I believe I will risk it now, for these gentlemen are generally good-natured, although they sometimes get excited.

The following is the resolution which I desire to offer:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the propriety of so amending the post office laws as to authorize the Postmaster to pay additional compensation to postmasters where their pay is now inadequate for services rendered, and report a bill, or otherwise.

Mr. LETCHER. I object, and insist on the regular order of business.

Mr. PENNINGTON. Is it in order for me to give notice of the introduction of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Not being a joint resolution, it is not in order, or at all events, it would give the resolution no advantage.

The call of committees for reports was then resumed.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Mr. OLDS, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill further to amend the act entitled 'An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1851."

EXTENSION OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. UPHAM, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title:

"A bill granting the franking privilege to the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, and the assistant in charge of the office of said Coast Survey."

Mr. UPHAM. I think it my duty to the Treasury Department, and to the Coast Survey Bureau, to suggest to the House whether they would not be willing, under the circumstances which I shall mention, to allow this bill to pass through all its stages forthwith. I particularly request the attention of the honorable members from Tennessee and Virginia, [Messrs. JONES and MILLSON,] who, a few days since, argued very strongly against the practice of allowing bills to pass directly, in this way, through all their stages. I listened to those arguments with great respect, and a full appreciation of their force; but I suggest to those gentlemen whether the facts which I am now about to state do not constitute a sufficient ground for an exception to be allowed.

The annual report of the Coast Survey Office is at present in the hands of the binder, and in a very short time will be prepared for distribution. The documents proceeding to and from that office pass through a department of the Treasury, in the Treasury building; and, I am told by the clerk whose duty it is to frank these documents, that he is required to frank twenty-five thousand documents in the course of a year. During the last nine months, fifteen large wagon loads of such documents have left the Coast Survey Office. The chief of that office, during three quarters of the year, is absent in different, and often very remote, parts of the Union, and all correspondence to and from him passes through the Treasury office. Messengers are continually required to go to and fro, and an immense amount of laborious business is put upon one of the officers in the Treasury building.

Now, as the report is in the hands of the binder, and as it is in a few days, certainly in a few weeks, to be distributed, I ask gentlemen whether they are not willing, if it be their purpose to pass this bill at all, to allow it to go through its stages forthwith.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Let the bill be read.

The bill was then read through. It provides that the Superintendent of the Coast Survey and the assistant in charge of the office of the Coast Survey shall be authorized to receive and transmit free of postage through the mails all letters and documents in relation to their public duties.

Mr. MACE. I move that the bill be so amended as to provide for the grant of the franking privilege to the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, in addition to the officers already named.

Mr. OLDS. The proposition contemplates the giving of the franking privilege to the Coast Survey. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have permitted it to be reported to the House, from the fact that we had seen no good reason why the head of that bureau—for it is, in fact, a bureau—should not have the franking privilege as well as the heads of the other bureaus. At the same time, however, that I give my assent to the report of this resolution, I wish to say that my own opinion, and I believe that such will be the opinion of the committee, is against the franking privilege altogether; and perhaps before the session is closed, we shall propose a bill abolishing it.

Mr. MACE. I think, sir, that I would myself be in favor of the abolition of the franking privilege; but if it is to exist and appertain to sundry officers of the Government, and to members of Congress, I see no case more meritorious than that of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, to which that privilege could be extended. That is an institution for the diffusion of general knowledge throughout the whole country. By various acts of Congress we vote to its numerous public documents, which cannot be distributed unless some member of Congress will volunteer to go there and frank them. Such is the practice, and I have myself, at the instance of Professor Henry, spent days there in franking public documents for that institution.

The design has been to forward to our constituents throughout the land documents for their information. The Secretary of that institution ought to have the privilege of franking them, and not be, as now, subjected to the inconvenience of calling upon the members of Congress to do that job.

A MEMBER. Who is the Secretary?

Mr. MACE. I am told that Professor Henry is the Secretary. I do not propose to elaborate this question at all. It is a simple one. If we are to extend this privilege at all, we cannot extend it to a more meritorious case than the one I have suggested.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to refer the bill and amendment to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that they be printed. And I will say that whatever may be the propriety of the bill as reported from the committee, I can see no justice and no propriety in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE.]

The Smithsonian Institution is not part nor parcel of this Government. It is a separate and distinct institution, quartered, it is true, on the Treasury at the rate of thousands of dollars per annum; and it should be kept, I think, as distinct as possible. There is no reason for giving this institution the peculiar privilege of franking its documents over the country in preference to other institutions of learning in any part of the United States. And if you commence with this, where are you to stop? This is to be the entering wedge here at the seat of Government. This is first to be made the favorite institution for establishing the precedent to confer the franking privilege on all the institutions, perhaps, of the country. And I will say to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE,] that according to my understanding and construction of the Post Office laws, the member of Congress who franks a document weighing over two ounces, published by the Smithsonian Institution, violates the privilege conferred upon him under the laws of Congress.

Mr. MACE. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me to explain?

Mr. JONES yielded the floor.

Mr. MACE. I will state to the gentleman that the documents franked by me for the Smithsonian Institution were printed by order of Congress; and I had the same right to frank them as I had the other public documents printed by order of Congress.

Mr. JONES. If they were ordered by Congress, or by either House of Congress, then they were public documents, and came within the law. And the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE,] and every other member had a right to frank them. But the documents printed by order of the Smithsonian Institution are not included among these privileged matters which members of Congress are authorized to frank; and, in my opinion, they should not be included. I now, Mr. Speaker, move the previous question.

Mr. RIDDLE. To which committee does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] want to refer the bill and amendment?

Mr. JONES. I want to refer the subject to that committee where everybody can talk about it—the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. ORR moved that tellers be appointed; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and COX were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported 67 in the affirmative, and 46 in the negative.

Mr. FLORENCE. I call for the yeas and nays upon the pending question.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays cannot be ordered upon the question of seconding the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I move a call of the House; and then we can see who is present.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. ORR. What else can you do?

Mr. CLINGMAN. You can have a recount.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the House do now adjourn, and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HENN. Would it be in order to move an adjournment, and ask for tellers upon that motion?

The SPEAKER. The motion has been made for a call of the House, and also, by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] a motion to adjourn, and upon that motion he has demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. MEACHAM. I ask for tellers upon the call for the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DEAN and FLORENCE appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported—1 in the affirmative, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. OLDS. I call for tellers upon that motion.

The SPEAKER. It is competent for the Presiding Officer of the House to ascertain by a count whether or not a quorum is present.

The motion was then taken on the motion to adjourn, and it was decided in the negative.

The motion then recurred upon the motion that there be a call of the House; and being put, it was decided in the negative.

The SPEAKER. The chair will proceed, by a count, to ascertain whether there is a quorum present.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to lay the motion upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remind the gentleman that he cannot make that motion until the Chair ascertains whether there is a quorum present or not.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to count the House, and announced that there were 156—being a quorum.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I now ask for a recount. The Chair can order it.

The SPEAKER. The demand is pending for the previous question; and upon it tellers were demanded and ordered. The tellers will resume their places.

The tellers resumed their places; and the House being divided, the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes not counted.

So the demand for the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit to the Chair the question, whether the question is not first upon the motion to commit; and whether, if that motion be voted down, then will not be the time for the gentleman to make his speech?

The SPEAKER. The rule gives the gentleman reporting a bill the right to open and close the debate. The Chair is of opinion, however, that the gentleman from Tennessee is correct in the point he makes, and that the right of the gentleman from Massachusetts to open the debate will arise when the House shall have voted down (if that should be the result) the motion to commit.

The question was then taken; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 65, noes 71.

So the House refused to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. UPHAM. I ask to remind the House that this bill will not operate to extend the franking privilege in the slightest degree beyond that point to which it is now extended. All the documents which proceed to or from the Coast Survey Office are already franked, but they are franked to the great inconvenience of the Treasury Department, as well as to that of the Coast Survey Bureau itself. The franks have to be obtained, and are obtained, from one of the clerks in the Treasury Department, and are thence transferred to the Coast Survey Office. All communications that come to and from all the companies and parties at work on the shores of both continents, or on the shores of the gulf or lakes, have to come and go under cover of the Treasury Department. The covers there have to be removed, and the documents transferred to the Coast Survey Office.

As I have before remarked, a single clerk in the Treasury Department has this tremendous duty of franking twenty-five thousand documents every year to perform. Now I appeal to the older members of the House who have had—if it can be believed—a larger experience of this burdensome labor than the younger members have been called upon to perform—I appeal to them to say whether it is right to impose such a duty upon a clerk in the Treasury Department?

This bill does not involve the slightest increase in the expenses of the Government in the transaction of its business. But, on the contrary, the business of the Coast Survey Office would be simplified, and an absolute reduction in the expenses would take place, because it would involve a less amount of labor to procure this work done in the office where it is needed than in another department.

Mr. Speaker, will you allow me to mention the names of the specific Departments of the Government upon which the franking privilege has been conferred by single acts? It has been conferred upon the Solicitor of the Treasury, upon the Auditors of the Treasury, upon the Chief Engineer, the Commanding General, the Colonel of Ordnance, the Surgeon General, the Head of the Topographical Corps, the Commissioner of Pensions, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the Assistants Postmaster General. Now, would it not be in entire accordance with the policy of the Government to extend this privilege directly to the officials of the Coast Survey Office? As I have said, it would not add in the slightest degree to the expenses of the Government; but it would promote simplicity and facility of operation in the Treasury Department. And allow me to say, that I am instructed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to introduce this bill, altogether in consequence of an absolute, unqualified recommendation of the measure by the Secretary of the Treasury. In his finance report just issued, that officer, in that brief, terse, simple, and explicit language in which his whole report is couched, uses these words:

"In the distribution of reports, papers, &c., the Superintendent and his assistant should be vested with the franking privilege."

I speak here as the organ of the Secretary of the Treasury—little as I imagined that I ever should be the organ of the present Secretary. [A laugh.]

I beg to remind gentlemen again, that the reason why I ask this boon of the House, is because it would secure the Treasury Department and the Coast Survey Office from a very troublesome and embarrassing labor just at this moment pending over them. The annual report, as I have said, is in the hands of the binder, and in a very short time it will go forth to the people, and, therefore, what I ask is an advantage and a convenience to the Treasury Department, to the Coast Survey, and to all our constituents.

Mr. Speaker, a word has been said in reference to this franking privilege in general. Allow me to say that I differ most respectfully from the honorable chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I believe that one of the last things which the people of this country will relinquish, is the benefit they derive from the franking privilege as exercised by their Representatives and public officers.

Sir, this Government is a great educational apparatus, and its most beneficent operation is that in which it diffuses knowledge in reference to all matters that relate to public interests among the people, and this is the channel through which that knowledge is diffused.

In reference to this Coast Survey, I confidently call for the support and sympathy of every member of this House, representing a district bordering upon the Atlantic or the Pacific, upon the Gulf of Mexico, or the northern lakes. I call upon every member representing a constituency interested in the security of life and property on the waters of oceans, lakes, seas, and rivers, to do justice to the invaluable services of this most admirable branch of our Government. I know that there is no part of the organization of the Government which is dearer to the hearts of the people, which confers more immediate, more permanently and deeply appreciated benefits. There is none which has done so much to exalt the character of our nation in the eyes of the world as the Coast Survey Office, our Light-House Board, and Lieutenant Maury's invaluable and immortal services.

Mr. Speaker, I had no expectation, when I offered the bill which I was directed by the unanimous vote of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to introduce—which merely and exclusively related to the securing of a convenience to the officers of the Government, and which was reported in accordance with the express recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury—I had no expectation, I say, of being drawn into a debate. I thank the House for the patience with which they have listened to the prolonged remarks which I have thus, against my will and expectation, indulged in; and I hope that its vote will show that its members are disposed to carry out the views of the Secretary of the Treasury, and to promote the convenience of all of the Departments of the Government, as well as of the people.

Mr. WARREN. I move to lay the bill and amendment upon the table.

Mr. MACE. The gentleman from Massachusetts who reported the bill has urgently appealed to me to withdraw the amendment which I have proposed. I do now withdraw it.

There was no objection, and it was withdrawn.

Mr. WARREN. I now move to lay the bill upon the table; and upon that question demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. HIBBARD. With the leave of the House, I will make a single inquiry of the gentleman who reported the bill. It is this: Does the bill provide for the franking of all matter on the part of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey and his assistant, or of only such as pertains to the business of the bureau? If the latter be not the case, I would suggest whether the bill should not be so amended. In that form I am prepared to vote for it.

Mr. UPHAM. I ask for the reading of the bill. By it the gentleman will see what is provided to be granted.

The bill was again read through.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being read a third time, it was passed.

Mr. UPHAM. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SLAVERY IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, presented a report adverse to the petition of citizens of Ohio asking for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table.

THE WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the same committee, also reported a joint resolution making appropriations for the continuance of the work on the Washington aqueduct; which was read a first time by its title, and the Clerk being in the act of reading it through—

Mr. HAMILTON said: Mr. Speaker, the Clerk has misunderstood me. I presume it would require the unanimous consent of the House to consider that resolution. However, if there be no objection anywhere, I should prefer that course.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

Mr. HAMILTON. Then I move its reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken; and it was so ordered.

On motion by Mr. DRUM, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Robert Gilchrist, of Indiana county, Pennsylvania, for an increase of his pension, &c., and that it be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. ORR, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, made an adverse report on the petition of D. B. Huntingdon, praying for additional compensation for services rendered to the Utah Indians; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. ORR, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition of the Oneida Indians, of New York, praying payment of interest; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

On motion by Mr. ORR, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of Julia C. Lane, Louisa E. Lane, and N. E. Lane, Edward Tracy, and others, and Charles Bracker, asking that the amount of money paid by them for working lead mines in the Indian territory be refunded to them, and that the several petitions be referred to the Committee on Claims.

THE TITLE OF LIEUTENANT GENERAL.

Mr. BISSELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the Senate resolution authorizing the President of the United States to confer the title of lieutenant general by brevet for eminent services, reported back the resolution, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The Clerk read the resolution by its title.

Mr. BISSELL. Mr. Speaker, I did not exactly mean to say that it is the recommendation of the committee that the resolution be now put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. BISSELL. That course, however, I would express as the desire of my own. But I am well aware that an objection from one member would defeat that proposition; and if that were to be the case, the motion I wish to make is to refer the resolution to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the resolution was so referred.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I did not understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] as making the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, unless some gentleman should object to its consideration and passage now.

Mr. BISSELL. I understood that there was objection made, and therefore I made the motion.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I object.

Mr. BISSELL. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to object before.

Mr. LANE. I did.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would further inquire, whether it does not require a majority of the House to send a bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt of it. Ordinarily, when no objection is made to a motion of reference, the Chair remarks, "If no objection is made, it will be so ordered." He does this in order to save the time of the House. The Chair heard no objection at the time, and announced that the bill was referred according to the gentleman's motion.

Mr. TAYLOR. When objection is made, I ask the Chair whether it is not competent to take a vote of the House upon the motion?

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then I ask for a vote of the House upon the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in time, as the Chair has declared that the bill has been referred. But the gentleman can accomplish his object by moving to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred.

Mr. TAYLOR. I then move to reconsider that vote.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would respectfully ask the Chair what the state of the question is?

The SPEAKER. There is no question pending except that made by the gentleman from Ohio himself, to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. A motion was made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The SPEAKER. That is the first question.

The question was then taken, and there appearing, upon a division—ayes 67, noes 60—

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, called for the yeas and nays thereon.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. LANE. I withdraw the call.

Mr. SOLLERS. I renew the call.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Will the Chair state the precise question before the House?

The SPEAKER. A joint resolution, which will be read by the Clerk, was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] moved to reconsider that vote. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table, and upon that motion the yeas and nays are called for.

The Clerk then again read the resolution.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I understand, then, that we are to vote whether the motion to reconsider the motion by which the joint resolution was referred shall be laid upon the table or not.

The SPEAKER. That is the question.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I wish to ask a question, for the information of myself and the House. If the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table does the bill still remain with the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. WHEELER. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 100, nays 78; as follows:—

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Barksdale, Belcher, Bocoock, Boyce, Bridges, Caskey, Chamberlain, Churchill, Clark, Cobb, Colquitt, Curtis, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dean, Dowdell, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, Ellison, English, Fenton, Florence, Gamble, Giddings, Green, Grow, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lane, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsley, Macdonald, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Maurice, Maxwell, Mayall, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Orr, Peck, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rufin, Seward, Shannon, Shower, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—100.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Aiken, Ball, Banks, Benson, Benton, Bissell, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Chrisman, Clingman, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Cumming, Dawson, Dick, Dickinson, Eddy, Edmunds, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Flagler, Franklin, Goodrich, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hiestor, Hill, Howe, Hunt, Ingersoll, Kerr, Knox, Lindley, McCullough, Matteson, Meacham, Middewarther, John G. Miller, Morgan, Norton, Mordcaai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, William R. Smith, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witte, Yates, and Zollcoffer—78.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Reports are still in order from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McDOUGALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported "A bill for the relief of the heirs of Anthony G. Willis, deceased;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BENTON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee have the kindness to withdraw the motion till I make a report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. BENTON. I am instructed, by the Committee on Military Affairs, to introduce a bill for the relief of John S. Jones and William H. Russell, surviving partners of Brown, Russell & Co.

I desire to say that I agree with every word said here the other day by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] against hasty legislation. Ordinarily, it is proper that every bill should be subjected to the forms which experience has prescribed to prevent errors and mistakes. There are, however, exceptions to this rule, and I think this bill is one of them. It is a bill which authorizes the Secretary of War to audit and settle a claim arising in the Quartermaster's Department, and it orders not a shilling to be paid, but fixes a limit beyond which he is not to go. The bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. It has been considered by General Jesup, the Quartermaster General, who is the head of this Department of the Government, and a report in the same case was made by the Senate committee at the last session. Under these circumstances, if gentlemen do not think it necessary to submit the bill to the ordinary forms of legislation here, I would ask that it be put upon its passage; but if gentlemen think that it ought to go through such forms, I will not ask for a departure from rules which I hold to be so necessary.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would ask if the bill does not make an appropriation?

The bill was then read through.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, this bill must go to a Committee of the Whole House, containing, as it does, an appropriation of money, unless by unanimous consent the House suspend that rule. Is it the pleasure of the House that unanimous consent should be given?

Mr. JONES. Let us adhere to the rule.

[A message was here received from the Senate by the hands of Mr. MACHEN, its Chief Clerk, informing the House that the Senate had agreed to the sixth amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 12, entitled "An act to regulate the disbursement of the contingent fund of the Senate and for other purposes," with an amendment, and that they had disagreed to all the other amendments to said bill. Also, that the Senate had passed House bill No. 47, making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending the 30th June, 1855, with sundry amendments, and asking the concurrence of the House therein.

Also, that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles:

"An act to provide for the payment of the printing of the returns of the Seventh Census, and for the paper purchased for said printing;"

S. No. 159. "An act to provide a place for holding the courts of the United States in the southern district of New York, and for other purposes;"

And asking the concurrence of the House therein.]

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. MILLER, of Missouri. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee, when last in session, had under consideration the reference of the President's message; and upon that question the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. OLIVER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. OLIVER, of Missouri, addressed the committee on that portion of the President's message which relates to the raising of tonnage duties by the States for purposes of internal improvement. He said that when he first read this portion of the message, he was at a loss to understand what interpretation to place upon it, though he must confess that he had his suspicions that it recommended tonnage duties for harbor and river improvement. He contended that the measure recommended by the Executive, if adopted, would work a fundamental change in the legislation of this country; that it would overthrow the present system, and erect upon its ruins this remarkable, this extraordinary measure of tonnage duties. Great God! what must have been the strange insatiation that could have suggested to the Executive such a policy! What could be his apology for suggesting the overthrow of the present system, and substituting in its stead this new-fangled doctrine. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. OLIVER having concluded,—

Mr. MAXWELL obtained the floor, but yielded, for the purpose of explanation, to

Mr. KEITT. He said: I desire only to correct a mistake of the member from Missouri, [Mr. OLIVER,] and to answer an inquiry which he has propounded. When I submitted my views to the committee a few days ago on that portion of the President's message which relates to tonnage duties, I had not read either the letter or the speech of the distinguished Senator from Illinois, [Judge DOUGLAS.] Since then I have hastily read both; and I now offer my tribute to the large statesmanship and patriotic sagacity contained in both.

The member asks me if I repudiate Mr. Calhoun. Sir, this is a strange question to ask me now, while the State is still convulsively sobbing over his grave. South Carolina, sir, upheld, and with unfaltering devotion sustained, Mr. Calhoun while alive; and his death has only sanctified him in her affections. We bowed to his splendid intellect, and to his stainless honor; and he richly deserved our homage and support. South Carolina paid to him, sir, the tribute of a confiding but an intelligent and discriminating constituency; not the tribute which the mountebank extorts from the populace—yes, sir, ours was the tribute of men.

Sir, South Carolina supported Mr. Calhoun, with unfaltering consistency from his earliest entrance into politics. Like some splendid planet fashioned by the hand of Almighty God, and floating by a natural law into its appropriate orbit, Mr. Calhoun at early manhood floated into his appointed sphere, constellated around the Constitution. Mr. Calhoun was the first, I believe, sir, who announced and advocated the doctrine of tonnage duties for works of internal improvement. We differed from him—and it was almost the only difference in his long life—in that portion of his report on the Memphis resolutions in which he invoked the aid of the Federal Government for improvements in the Mississippi valley. But though we differed from him in that, the State never abated one jot or tittle of her love, reverence, and support of him. It was a difference alike honorable to the State and to Mr. Calhoun. Sir, as England's Queen said, when the loss of Calais was reported to her, "If my heart could be read, Calais would be seen written upon it;" so, too, South Carolina would say, "if my heart could be laid bare, written highest and brightest upon it would be seen the name of John C. Calhoun."

Mr. MAXWELL resumed the floor, and addressed the committee for an hour, in regard to his views of the action of Congress concerning the disposition of the public lands, and in relation to grants for the construction of railroads. His speech (withheld for revision) will be published in the Appendix.

Mr. ETHERIDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. With the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee I move that the committee rise.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole, according to order, had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the reference of the President's message, and had come to no resolution thereon.

A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of Mr. MACHEN, its Chief Clerk, informing the House that the Senate has passed an act, (No. 26) for the relief of Ira Baldwin; an act, (No. 50) for the relief of the legal representatives of Noah Miller and other persons; an act (No. 113) for the relief of the widows and orphans of the officers and seamen of the United States schooner Grampus, who were lost in that vessel in March, 1843; an act (No. 121) for the relief of Pamela Brown, widow of Major General Jacob Brown, deceased; and an act (No. 155) granting five years' pay to the widow of Captain John W. Gunnison.

Also, a message was received from the President of the United States—the Speaker having temporarily resumed the chair—by SIDNEY WEBSTER, his Private Secretary, informing the House that he did, on the 24th instant, approve and sign, among other bills, a joint resolution of thanks to General John E. Wool.

DEATH OF THE LATE RUSSIAN MINISTER.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. As the members of this House have before this been informed, the oldest member of the diplomatic corps in Washington is no more. His funeral will take place to-morrow; and to enable such members of the House as are so disposed to attend the ceremonies on that occasion, I move that when this House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. BENTON. I am gratified at the motion which the member from Virginia, on my left, [Mr. BAYLY,] has made, and at the manner in which it has been done. It is simply a motion to adjourn over for a day, and for a reason feelingly stated, and not being upon the Journal will not become a precedent, though the memory of it, and of the honor it implies to the deceased, will go into the debates, and become a part of our parliamentary history. There are reasons for this mark of honor to the deceased which have not applied heretofore, and can hardly expect to apply again. Mr. Bodisco was incorporated with our society from his long residence among us, his marriage to an American lady, our country-woman, his urbanity, and social intercourse. We have all had our social relations with him, and would be drawn, by private feelings, to-morrow, to follow the hearse instead of appearing here.

Mr. Bodisco has lived almost twenty years among us, and so lived as to have become, in all social relations, one of us. Urbanity of manners, charity, benevolence, universal kindness, were qualities in him visible to all. I mention something not so publicly known, but equally honorable, and that was, a feeling of solicitude for any jarring that took place among us, and an anxiety to compose it. I have known many instances of his kind interference—many instances of his assembling at his house, that the festive board might allay asperities which ought not to continue—and all with a delicacy and tact which almost concealed the object while accomplishing the purpose.

He had, indeed, both tact and ability; and for the great affairs of business, as well as of social intercourse, a diplomatic ability, which the happy relations existing between the two countries never called into action in the form of State papers and protocols, but which showed itself in the admirable preservation of friendly and kind relations, which he found existing when he arrived here as Minister, and which he had improved and strengthened up to the time of his death. These circumstances, and his position in the diplomatic corps—the dean of that respectable body—entitle him to this mark of respect from the American House of Representatives—the first time it has been granted, and under circumstances to prevent it from becoming a precedent.

I have mentioned some of the personal reasons—individual to the object of our regard—which command this mark of respect from us. I have others to mention which concern his country, and the eminent sovereigns who have reigned over it since our independence. From all we have experienced justice and kindness. No Russian sovereign has ever wronged our America—ever given cause for one word of complaint; and to some we are indebted for signal marks of good will. The Emperor Alexander offered his mediation to restore peace between the United States and Great Britain in the war of 1812—a noble offer, and worthy of a mighty Power.

The present Emperor accepted the place of abiter in a delicate and important matter between the United States and the former mother country, and settled a question of immense moment to us, which, growing first out of the treaty of peace of 1783, and a second time out of the treaty of Ghent of 1815, had baffled diplomacy on both occasions, and was leading to serious misunderstanding. The Emperor Nicholas settled it, and not by compromises, or qualifications, but by the rigorous application of principles.

I do not include, in our thanks to him, that the decision was in our favor—categorically and absolutely in our favor. That was a result governed by an inexorable sense of right. The thanks are due for consenting to take the trouble and the responsibility of settling such a question—a question of noncompliance with a treaty, in the delicate and important particular of indemnity for slaves carried off during the war. The same question had been found unmanageable under Washington's administration, and we had to submit to a loss—large in a pecuniary sense, and much larger in a political or belligerent sense—as seeming to sanction that mode of warfare. The second time the question arose, and after baffling our Government for twelve years, it was settled by the Emperor Nicholas; a large pecuniary indemnity was received for the past; a question pregnant with danger was settled; and exemption from such a mode of warfare may be counted on in future; and thus, from our personal relations with the deceased, and our national relations with the great country he represented, I feel myself an overpowering inclination to render this honor to the memory of the deceased, Mr. Bodisco, and doubt not that is the feeling of all that had the happiness to know him.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the Chair a question in reference to the motion made by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY.] Is the gentleman's motion simply a motion to adjourn over, or is it a resolution referring to the death of Mr. Bodisco?

The SPEAKER. It is simply a motion to adjourn over until Thursday.

The question was taken on Mr. BAYLY's motion, and it was agreed to.

THE GREAT EXHIBITION IN LONDON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report of the Secretary of State, together with a set of works illustrative of the Exhibition in London, of 1851, to which it referred, in order that such disposal might be made of them as seemed advisable.

Mr. ORR. I move to refer that communication to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There are some few Senate bills on the Speaker's table of a private character; and I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will withdraw his motion so as to let them be referred to the appropriate committees. It will not take many minutes.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The following bills from the Senate were then taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by their respective titles, and severally referred, as indicated below:

An act for the relief of J. Boyd. Referred to the Committee on Claims.

An act for the relief of Zachariah Lawrence, of Ohio. Referred to the Committee on Claims.

An act for the relief of Mary C. Hamilton. Referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act providing for the printing of the returns of the Seventh Census, and for the paper purchased for said printing. Referred to the Committee on Printing.

An act to provide a place for the holding of the courts of the United States in the southern district of New York, and for other purposes. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

An act for the relief of Ira Baldwin. Referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Noah Miller, of Lincolnville, in the State of Maine; and for the relief of other persons. Referred to the Committee on Claims.

An act for the relief of the widows and orphans of the officers and seamen of the United States schooner Grampus, who were lost in that vessel in March, 1843, near the coast of the United States. Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

An act for the relief of Pamela Brown, widow of Major General Jacob Brown, deceased. Referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act granting five years' half-pay to the widow of Captain J. W. Gunnison. Referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC PRINTING.

The SPEAKER. There is pending a motion to refer the joint resolution from the Senate, authorizing an increase of the clerical force in the office of the Superintendent of the Public Printing, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HAVEN. If the gentleman will withdraw that motion, I will move the postponement of that joint resolution until Thursday.

Mr. JONES. If the resolution be postponed until Thursday, will it not have the tendency to bring it up the first thing in order on that day?

The SPEAKER. It will take precedence on the Speaker's table in its class, whether the proposition suggested by the gentleman be agreed to or not. If the House now adjourn, the question of committing will be the first in order.

Mr. JONES. I insist on the motion to adjourn. The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House thereupon adjourned until Thursday next.

Mr. SEYMOUR, (on the 18th of January,) from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the petition of Thomas Thady, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed, and the petition and report laid upon the table.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 26, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Tuesday was read and approved.

NEW SENATOR.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, in the unavoidable absence of Mr. ADAMS, presented the credentials of Hon. ALBERT G. BROWN, chosen by the Legislature of Mississippi a Senator from that State, for the term of six years from the 4th of March last; which were read; and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to Mr. BROWN, he took his seat in the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, asking an appropriation to pay the debts of the last commission to run and mark the boundary between the United States and Mexico; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SEWARD. I am requested to present to the Senate the memorial of a large and respectable meeting of citizens of the city of New York, at which the Hon. Jacob A. Westervelt, the mayor, presided, in which they express their opinion that the present high rates of ocean postage are a very serious restriction on the mercantile correspondence between the United States and foreign countries, and a very great and unnecessary burden upon that large and useful population of the United States, the emigrants from foreign countries; that they interfere with the advancement of republican institutions in other countries; and they ask Congress to take measures for the reduction of the rates of ocean postage. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

I wish also to present a memorial, signed by twenty-eight of the thirty-two Senators, and by one hundred and one of the one hundred and twenty-eight members of the House of Assembly of the State of New York, together with the Lieutenant Governor, who is the presiding officer of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House, praying for a reduction in the rates of ocean postage, for which I ask the same reference.

I wish to present, also, two petitions of the judge, justices of the peace, and of the grand and petit jurors, and members of the bar, of the county of Washington, in the State of New York, in favor of the same object, which I ask may have the same reference.

The above petitions were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. EVERETT. I am requested to present a memorial of the Massachusetts Historical Society, praying that an appropriation may be made to defray the expenses of procuring from the archives of the British Government, especially from the State Paper Office, copies of all documents, records, and correspondence pertaining to the early history of the Colonies and of the United States. I move its reference to the Committee on the Library.

It was so referred.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, presented the petition of H. H. Maddox, praying compensation for services in taking the Seventh Census in the State of Kentucky; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BADGER presented a memorial of citizens of the city of Wilmington, in the State of North Carolina, praying Congress to make an appropriation for removing certain obstructions at the mouth of Cape Fear river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I present the petition of Dr. J. C. Walker, the President of the Fort Madison and Bloomfield Railroad Company, and of four hundred other citizens of the State of Iowa, asking for a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Fort Madison and Bloomfield railroad; and they also request that, if along any part of the route of the said railroad there should be no public lands, Congress should grant a like portion of lands as is prayed for, as an equivalent therefor, in some part of the public domain in said State. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

It was so referred.

Mr. SEWARD presented a petition of certain legal voters of the counties of Ontario and Seneca, in the State of New York, praying Congress to take such measures as will insure, in any future treaties with foreign countries, the insertion of a clause to submit international disputes to arbitration; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, a remonstrance of Francis O. Morse, on behalf of himself and others, citizens of the United States, engaged in the importation of lasts from the British provinces, against the passage of an act giving further remedies to patentees; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, a petition of citizens of Rochester, State of New York; a petition of Washington Gibbons and others; and a petition of citizens of Detroit, State of Michigan, praying the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of Niagara; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of Francis Picard, administrator of Captain Pierre Ayott, of the Revolution, praying remuneration for losses by the confiscation of property, and for advances of money for the service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, the petition of the heirs of Joseph Bindon, of the revolutionary army, praying commutation pay; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, the petition of Francis Picard, administrator of Captain Pierre Ayott, and the petition of Ezra T. Marnay, grand-child of Captain Lewis Marnay, of the army of the Revolution, praying to be allowed commutation pay; which were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, a petition of citizens of New York and Brooklyn, and a petition of citizens of New York, praying that a contract may be entered into with Christian Hansen for the transportation of the United States mails between Brooklyn and certain ports of Europe; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. CASS presented a petition of inhabitants of Shenandoah county, Virginia, praying Congress to establish a national garden for the cultivation, improvement, and sale of Irish potato seed, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. GWIN presented the petition of Richard Nosworthy, of England, praying remuneration for the destruction of six cases of his merchandise at the port of San Francisco, through the neglect of the United States custom-house officers there; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WELLER presented the memorial of Dr. William M. Ryer, praying compensation for vaccinating Indians in California under a contract with the United States Indian agent; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALLEN presented the petition of Sophia G. Dillingham, praying a pension on account of the services of her father, Elisha Dillingham, during the war of the Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEBASTIAN presented certain documents, signed by D. Cooper and J. Van Etten, counsel for Alexander Ramsey, late Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Minnesota Territory, being a review of the testimony taken on the investigation of the charges of fraud preferred against him; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BAYARD presented a memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, praying that the United States Mint in that city may not be removed; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SEWARD submitted certain documents against the passage of a bill to secure the rights of citizenship to children of citizens born out of the limits of the United States; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FISH presented a petition of citizens of West Troy, New York, praying the enactment of a law giving further remedies to patentees; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. JOHNSON presented, at the request of the President of the Senate, as he stated, the petition of William N. Couch and others, praying the establishment of a tri-weekly mail between Kansas and Platte city, Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. CLAYTON. I present the memorial of Charles D. Arfvedson, asking compensation for services as Chargé d'Affaires ad interim at Stockholm. At a former session of Congress one half of the compensation due to him for such services was appropriated and was paid to him. Only one half was allowed, because it was supposed the fees which he received as Consul at Stockholm would, together with the sum appropriated, be sufficient to compensate him. It now appears that the whole amount of fees that he received was but eighty-nine dollars. As those services were performed during the time that I was in the Department of State, I think it my duty to add my testimony to that of my successor in office, and express the opinion that this gentleman is entitled to the compensation due to a Chargé d'Affaires for the time during which he served in that capacity. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT FROM STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill to authorize the State of Illinois to select the residue of the lands to which she is entitled under the act of 2d of March, 1827, granting land to aid that State in opening a canal to connect the waters of the Illinois river with those of Lake Michigan, reported it back with an amendment.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. JOHNSON gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to amend the law relating to preëmptions upon the public lands.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to continue the improvement at the Des Moines and the Rock River Rapids in the Mississippi.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed a bill granting the franking privilege to the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, and the assistant in charge of the office of the said Coast Survey.

PRINTING OF REPORT.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that an extra number of the report of the Committee on Finance on the bill to provide for the surrender of certain bonds of the State of Indiana held by the United States, be printed. I suppose the motion goes to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was so referred.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, it was Ordered, That the memorial of the heirs of William Beatty be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and, together with additional documents relating thereto, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. EVERETT, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Selina Sumner, praying that compensation may be made to her husband, who is now an inmate of a lunatic asylum, for important discoveries in navigation, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion by Mr. DAWSON, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Robert S. Patterson and others, praying an act of incorporation for a company to construct a railroad along Pennsylvania avenue, in Washington city, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

On motion by Mr. CASS, it was Ordered, That the petition of C. B. Cluskey be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. BELL. I rise to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. That committee for several sessions past have thought it expedient to make no report on the numerous memorials and resolutions referred to them in reference to the improvement of rivers and harbors, upon the ground, as it has been supposed, that they thought it the better plan for the Senate to await the proceedings of the House upon that subject, and to take up a bill for that purpose when it should be sent here by the House. The consequence has been, that the river and harbor bill has never made its appearance here until a very late period of the session; and when that happens to be the long session of Congress, the summer is usually more than half spent before the appropriations for these great objects are made, and consequently, during the year of the long session, there can be no expenditure, and no continuation of the works in progress. For this reason these works become in some degree dilapidated before the officers of the Government can proceed in the execution of their duty. This habit has been so incessant now, that it has become a very plausible argument against the whole system; and it is contended that it is pursued in such an irregular manner as not to be worth much. The works are suspended every two years, although the appropriations may be made by Congress every other year; and this has been a fruitful cause for complaint.

The inquiry which I wish to make of the honorable chairman is, whether it is the intention of that committee to pursue the same course at the present session? If so, in my opinion it is tantamount to making no appropriation whatever. But, sir, I cannot disguise it from myself and from the Senate that it may be possible that the action of the Senate's committee, or of the Senate, upon the subject, will be no remedy for the evils of which I complain; but if we proceed actively to report a bill in reasonable time, and send it to the House, we shall have discharged our duty, and the responsibility for the passage of that bill at some day, which will permit these works to proceed, will not rest upon us but upon the House of Representatives. If we pursue this course, and the House shall pass the bill in reasonable time, the results which have been so much complained of will be obviated. If an opposite course be pursued, the million and a half of dollars spent last year will have been partially lost for the want of a consecutive application of the funds to the regular progress of the works.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I think it has been the uniform practice of the Senate, or at least of the Senate Committee on Commerce, to await a bill from the House to make appropriations for the improvement of harbors, rivers, and lakes. I am not aware that that practice has ever been departed from. If it has been, the case is not within my knowledge, nor am I aware that the Committee on Commerce propose to depart from the ordinary course at the present time. I suppose it is within the province of the Senate committee to report an appropriation bill, without awaiting for one from the House. I suppose it is equally within the province of the Committee on Finance to report appropriation bills for the support of the various departments of Government; but such has not been the practice of that committee, and such has not been the practice of the Committee on Commerce. I do not myself know of any good reason which would apply to the one case which does not apply to the other.

There are some of the great leading objects of improvement, such as the Mississippi river, the mouth of the Mississippi, upon which the Committee on Commerce have reported, and now contemplate reporting several bills. It has always been my opinion—and my action in the committee has corresponded with that opinion—that each of these appropriations should be in a separate bill, making it depend upon its own merits for its success, and not to force those improvements which are really national and meritorious to carry those which are not of that character. I have, however, always found myself in a minority on that committee in that proposition.

I have then been in favor of reporting one bill for the continuance of the appropriations for old works, leaving the new works for a separate bill. Upon that proposition I have also found myself in a minority.

I can say, then, in answer to the question presented by the honorable Senator from Tennessee, that I do not know that it is the understanding of the Committee on Commerce to take any other course than that which has usually been pursued.

Mr. BADGER. I beg to be allowed to add in connection with the subject, that I think there is a great deal of force in the suggestion made by my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL.] I think my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, must have seen the inconvenience which results from awaiting all these bills to come from the House of Representatives. As we have the unquestionable right to originate such a bill as has been referred to, why should we not originate it, more particularly when it is so highly important to the public interest that the bill should be passed at an early day, and when the state of business in this House is such as materially to accommodate its passage?

But however the case may be in regard to these appropriations generally, I wish to take this opportunity of calling the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce to a petition which I presented, and which was referred to his committee, praying for an appropriation for the purpose of removing obstructions in the mouth of Cape Fear river, in North Carolina. The continuance of those obstructions is one of the greatest outrages that now exists in this country; and if the committee refuse to report a general bill, I beg of them to take into consideration the propriety of reporting a special bill for that object. It ought to be done.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, I wish to say that my position on the Committee on Commerce has been in favor of introducing a bill into the Senate, and bringing the subject thoroughly to the consideration of the Senate; but I have to say that, if honorable Senators expect their views to be understood by the committee, it will be necessary for them to take some form, either by waiting on the committee or in writing, to let those views be known to us. I shall be very happy to receive any communication of that kind from any Senator in regard to any matter of internal improvement. I have thought it proper to make this explanation in addition to what has been said by the honorable Senators from Tennessee and North Carolina.

Here the conversation dropped.

INVALID PENSION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the payment of invalid and other pensioners of the United States, for the year ending June 30, 1855, reported the same back, with an amendment.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the committee was to strike the following clause out of the bill:

"For pensions of invalids who were wounded on board private armed vessels during the last war with Great Britain, $2,800; and the office for paying private pensioners in Boston is hereby abolished, and the said pensioners shall be paid as private pensioners are paid at other places."

The amendment was agreed to; the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

TROOPS ON THE SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives "for the relief of the United States troops, sufferers by the disaster to the steamer San Francisco," reported the same back with amendments, and asked for its present consideration.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, accordingly proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment of the committee was to add at the end of the following words, in the first section—

"That there shall be paid, under the direction of the President, to each of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, who were, on the 21st day of December, 1853, embarked at New York, under orders for California, on the steamer San Francisco, and who were on board that vessel on the occasion of her recent disaster at sea"—

the words:

and to Lieutenant Francis Key Murray, and any other officer or seaman of the United States Navy who was on board said steamship under orders,

So that there shall be paid to each his pay and allowances for four months.

The next amendment of the committee was to add at the end of the first section the following proviso:

Provided, That the amount of pay and allowances advanced to the officers and men by the authority of the President, previous to their embarkation, shall be passed to their credit, and their receipts for the same be canceled.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will state that it is the six months' pay and rations, all of which they have lost, for which the amendment proposes to give them credit. We desire to give them credit for that pay and for those rations, and not to hold them responsible or chargeable for them. I believe the House originally intended to make this provision, but it was left out perhaps by mistake. There is another amendment.

The next amendment of the committee was to add to the end of the second section, which is in these words:

"That if any such officer, non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, shall have died before receiving such payment from any cause consequent upon said disaster, his widow, if one survive him, and if not, then his minor children, if any there be, shall be paid a sum equal in amount to six months' allowance of the deceased;"

the words:

and that the widows and minor children of those officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates who perished by this disaster, or died from disease in consequence thereof, shall be allowed pensions in the same manner in all respects as if the said officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates had been killed in battle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. NORRIS in the chair.) If there be no objection, the question will be taken on all the amendments together.

There was no objection, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, by way of an additional section, which, however, has not the sanction of the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs. Before doing so, however, I take occasion to say that the sympathies of each member of that committee were as strongly in favor of the proposition which I submit as mine were. The only difference between us was, as to whether it would not be opening too wide a door for future claims. The majority of the committee thought it would, and influenced by that consideration, refused to recommend to the Senate the adoption of the amendment. I differ from them upon the subject, and therefore submit the following amendment:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Second Auditor of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain the amount of the losses sustained by the officers, (commissioned and non-commissioned,) privates, and seamen in the service of the United States, who were on board of the San Francisco at the time of the late disaster to that vessel: and that he pay the amount of the losses thus ascertained, out of any other moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

I am anxious that the amendment should be adopted, if the majority of the Senate concur with me. It does seem to my mind that the justice of it cannot be questioned for a single moment; and the magnanimity of it, I am sure, will be conceded by every one.

It is particularly hard upon the privates when, as soldiers, after serving their country for years, they have accumulated something from their hard earnings, they are sent to San Francisco, and in obeying the order of the Government, by no fault of their own, by no indiscretion on their part, for they are compelled to obey, misfortune overtakes them, and their property is lost.

Now, I submit to every Senator, whether simple, even-handed justice does not require that loss to be made up to such men.

I have heard of several cases of peculiar hardship, and I will state one to the Senate. It is the case of one whose name I will not give, but who is said to be a most reputable and deserving young man, and who is, I believe, a sergeant in the Army. After struggling for years, he had saved and accumulated from his earnings eight hundred or a thousand dollars; his Government ordered him to San Francisco; he took the little pittance which he had saved from those hard earnings, and started to obey that order, and while on his way the amount was swept from him, and he is now turned back upon the world without a solitary dollar with which to begin the conflict of life. Is there a Senator here who can find it in his heart to vote against paying that money to that individual? I feel perfectly sure there is not. But then the majority of the committee say that they would willingly provide for such a case if it should come before us on its own individual merits. They did not, however, wish to report a general amendment, which, in their opinion, would open too wide a door for future claims.

I have no doubt it will be passed; and you, Mr. President, know, and every Senator knows, that we shall have to pay this after a while, and we had better pay it now, in the beginning, because my experience here is that these things lose nothing in amount by lapse of time. A claim is preferred to-day; it is postponed from year to year; it begins at one hundred dollars, and in ten years amounts to one thousand dollars. And I have yet to learn that, in the end, any claim which had the semblance of justice was not successful. I believe it will be wise economy; I believe it will be a clear and undoubted saving in the end for us to settle this question aright now, in the beginning, when the facts are before us, and when testimony can be obtained without any difficulty. I say, sir, that by pursuing such a course we shall save a large amount of money.

But, Mr. President, I suppose we are not to be less just than our predecessors have been. When Fort Delaware was destroyed by fire the Congress of the United States was called upon to indemnify the officers and soldiers for their losses sustained by that disaster. What was then the action of the Government? Be it said to its honor, magnanimity, and justice, that, without hesitation, Congress voted to refund to each one every dollar which he had lost. I cannot for my life see any reason why we should now depart from this rule. I am not very much in the habit of regarding precedents as always obligatory, but when they are good I must say that there can be no objection to following them. Such a provision was deemed just and equitable then. If it were just and equitable at that time, it is equally so now; and perhaps it is more necessary in this case than in that. But allowing the two cases to stand on equal ground, I appeal to every Senator to say whether it is not fair and just that a Government like ours, possessing the means, with an overflowing Treasury, which wants depletion—the great difficulty being, as we are told, to get money out of the Treasury—should make up the loss sustained by those men, who, while in the service of the Government, and obeying its orders, were overtaken by this calamity.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to. Before voting upon it, I wish merely to state to the Senate that it was considered at some length by the Committee on Military Affairs, on the proposition of the honorable Senator who now submits it to the consideration of the Senate, and was rejected. It was rejected upon several grounds. I shall not undertake to state positively what considerations governed the minds of the other gentlemen upon the committee who were opposed to it. I presume they will state them to the Senate; but, so far as I was concerned, the grounds upon which I opposed it were these: I thought, in the first place, that it would open a very wide door for future claims upon the Treasury, and would lead to expenditures to which we could fix no limit whatever. I consider that those who carried with them their private property upon this occasion—property not absolutely necessary to themselves in the discharge of their duties; and it is impossible to define what was absolutely necessary beyond their everyday clothing, and the arms and equipments necessary to their service, under the impression that they were going to stay in California for a great while, or even with the expectation of coming back—did it at their own responsibility, and the Government cannot become an insurer for them.

There is no limit that you can put upon the description of losses such as those which would be embraced by the amendment. Under it almost anything may be brought in. The officers and men can open their accounts against the Government upon every description of articles, if they open upon any; and as to the equipments, the most of them are furnished by the Government, and consequently can be no loss to them.

If it is intended so to load this bill, which is designed to be a benefit to the sufferers, as to destroy the bill itself, and thus fail to give the four months' pay which is provided for, and fail even to remit the six months' pay advanced by the Government, as the Senate has agreed to do in one of its amendments, and that, too, by an amendment of so indefinite a character as that which is proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, adopt the amendment, and I think we shall have achieved very effectually that object.

The amendment was voted down in the committee. I say nothing of the strictness that may exist in regard to all approaches to the Treasury, either in this or in the other branch of Congress; but, sir, if you open the door here by the adoption of this amendment, you will lose the bill itself. Let us be content with doing a little good. We cannot do all that the philanthropy and kindness of every gentleman would prompt him to do, and if we did there would soon be no Treasury whatever.

The reasons which I have thus given are those which induced me to vote against the amendment in committee, and which lead me to oppose it here. What were the reasons which influenced other members I will not pretend to say. They can state them for themselves.

Mr. SHIELDS. The amendments which I submitted were those which the Committee on Military Affairs agreed upon. As stated by my honorable friend from Arkansas, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee was not sustained by the Committee on Military Affairs. It was before us, and was discussed to some extent. In the main I agree to that amendment. I think the officers and soldiers who suffered losses on board that vessel in consequence of the disaster, ought to be reimbursed for those losses. I think there was no difference of opinion in the committee on that subject. It was only thought a little premature, and perhaps unadvisable at this time, to comply with this general mode of relief. Another reason was that which was very forcibly given by my friend from Arkansas.

I was rather in favor of the provision at the commencement, but another reason influenced my mind. It is reported—I do not know how truly—that some of the officers of the command, who were on board that vessel, were among the first to embark in boats and leave the command on the vessel. I hope it is not true. If it be true, I do not know that I am at liberty at this time, perhaps it would not be advisable, to give my opinion upon it, but I will say this, it is a subject of military inquiry, and I hope it will be conducted as such; for I hold that a man who is placed in charge of such a command, who is the chief and leader of such a command, and who, in a moment of danger and distress, such as occurred to that vessel, abandons that command, is guilty of as much, I will not say cowardice, but misconduct, as if he deserted them in the heat of battle, and in some respects it is even worse.

I also hold, that in the embarkation of the troops on the vessels which came to the rescue of the wreck, it was wrong for the officers to be the first to leave it. I hope that matter can be explained by the condition of the officers; that they were incapable, by sickness or wounds, to superintend their commands. The privates should have been first embarked, and the captain of the company should have been the last man of the company on board the boat that carried them off the wreck; the regiment should have been first embarked, and the colonel of that regiment the last to fly from the wreck.

One of the singular aspects of this case is, that the first embarkation left the command destitute of its commander, and the whole regimental staff, commissary, quartermaster, medical officers, and all, so that, if I am correctly informed, the soldiers left behind knew not where to find provisions or medical stores. I know some of these gentlemen personally. I have had the honor to command some of them in battle. The commander of the regiment served under me at Tampico. I know him personally; and I know, also, that some of the officers who embarked in the boat which first transferred the troops to the Kilby are as brave as any in the service; but from wounds received, and from sickness incurred by exposure on the wreck, they were incapable of performing service.

My honorable friend from Tennessee [Mr. BELL] tells me that Lieutenant Murray, who is now in the city—an officer whose gallant conduct during the whole of the disaster does credit to him and to the service in which he is engaged—explains this matter, and states that the officers were on board the Kilby, not for the purpose of remaining there, but for the purpose of returning to their command on board the wreck; and during the night the Kilby, as we all know by newspaper information, was separated from the wreck.

However, this, as I remarked, will be the subject of military inquiry. I do not, therefore, wish to prejudice it; on the contrary, I hope and trust, for the honor of the American Army, for the honor of the service, and for the honor of the country, that every officer who left that command will be able to explain it to the satisfaction of the nation.

The committee considered that it might be somewhat premature to provide for a general indemnification of all the losses until we should ascertain whether the men proposed to be indemnified had discharged their duty faithfully on that perilous occasion or not. For one, I go for paying every dollar that was lost there by those men during the disaster. I am in favor of reimbursing them every dollar and every particle of property which was lost; but I never will consent to pay a man for his plate and his jewels, and his money, who left his command in the hour of distress; and, until I am fully satisfied on that point, I shall not vote for the amendment.

Mr. PETTIT. I rise to a privileged question. The hour for the consideration of the special order of the day—the case of the honorable gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PHELPS] who I see is present—has arrived. I therefore move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until tomorrow, for the purpose of taking up the special order.

Mr. SHIELDS. If my honorable friend from Tennessee insists upon his amendment, I suppose the bill will have to go over. I would suggest to him, however, that it will perhaps be better to withdraw it.

Mr. DAWSON. I will suggest to my friend from Tennessee, though in favor of the amendment, that as it may lead to an embarrassment of the bill, it had better be withdrawn, so that the bill may pass to-day to give the relief which it affords.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Under the circumstances I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the bill will be considered and disposed of to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to postpone the bill has been entertained.

Mr. GWIN. I was going on to say that I am in favor of the amendment, and am ready to vote for it now.

Several SENATORS. It is withdrawn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not desire to embarrass the bill. I believe its principle is right, and also that the principle of the amendment is right; but as Senators think that the adoption of the amendment may embarrass the bill, I withdraw it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope then the bill will be reported to the Senate and passed.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to make one or two remarks in connection with what has been said by the Senator from Illinois, so that they may go out at the same time with his.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Indiana withdraw his motion to postpone to enable the Senator from South Carolina to proceed?

Mr. PETTIT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. I saw Lieutenant Murray at his friend and relative's quarters this morning—I refer to my friend from Virginia, [Mr. MASON]—and I heard him converse very freely upon the subject of the wreck. It is due, perhaps, to Colonel Gates particularly, that I should now make the remark that I put the interrogatory to Lieutenant Murray how Colonel Gates came to leave the San Francisco and go to the other vessel? His reply was, that he is a gentleman of over seventy years of age, and it was not an easy matter, after going into the Kilby, to return; and very few were young enough to do it. Lieutenant Murray did not attribute his course to anything like a disposition to abandon the command.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am highly gratified to hear that explanation.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed; the bill was ordered to be read a third time; and was read a third time, and passed.

VERMONT SENATORSHIP.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution reported on the 16th instant from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred, on the 4th instant, the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas, the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS was appointed by his Excellency the Governor of Vermont, in the recess of the Legislature of that State, to fill a vacancy in the Senate of the United States, which had happened by the death of the Hon. William Upham, a Senator whose term of six years would have continued until the 4th of March, 1855; and

Whereas, it is understood that since that temporary appointment was made, the Legislature of Vermont has been convened at its regular session, and has adjourned without filling such vacancy: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary inquire whether the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS is entitled to retain his seat in the Senate of the United States.

The resolution reported from the committee by a majority, consisting of Mr. PETTIT, Mr. GEYER, and Mr. WILLIAMS, is in the following words:

Resolved, That the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS is entitled to retain his seat in the Senate of the United States.

A minority of the committee, consisting of Mr. BUTLER and Mr. BAYARD, dissent from the report of the committee, and submit a minority report expressive of their views.

The question before the Senate was stated to be on the resolution reported from the committee.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, in moving to make this subject the special order of the day, I did not design by any means to occupy the attention of the Senate at any considerable length in its discussion; nor do I intend to do so now; but having made the report, as the organ of the committee, they think it is incumbent on me to state briefly the position which the committee occupy.

The facts in the case before the Senate are well understood, and need not be recapitulated. In coming to the conclusion that the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS is entitled to retain his seat in the Senate of the United States, the committee have examined the Constitution and the precedents which they think bear upon the question. The committee conclude, in the first place, that the design of the framers of the Constitution was that there should be two Senators from each State in commission at all times ready for the exigencies of the public service. They came to that conclusion, first from the plain, palpable declaration and language of the Constitution itself, in these words:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote."

In addition to this provision we find that, in order to avoid anything like a hiatus, or vacancy, the framers of the Constitution provided two means for the creation of the office of Senator. Primarily, they vested the power in the Legislature, but, contingently, in the event that the Legislature did not exercise the authority, in the executive of the State, in the person in whose hands the executive authority might be vested for the time being.

The Constitution has declared that the Senate of the United States shall consist of two Senators from each State, and has provided two means, both ample, one of which must always be in existence, to keep the Senate full; for it must be recollected that no State is ever without an executive. It always has an executive, though it may not always have a Legislature. When the Legislature is in session—is in a condition to act and to exercise the primary authority—it has power to do so; but, inasmuch as the Legislature is not always in that condition, and the State always has an executive, the Constitution has conferred upon the executive the right to make temporary appointments, so that the Senate can at all times be kept full by the action of these two departments.

The question, in this case, arises principally, as it is said, upon the construction of the latter clause of the third section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States. That section, after providing that the Legislature shall appoint, proceeds to say:

"And if vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies."

That the language of the Constitution, or of any law, cannot always be read and understood literally, will be seen by reading this language twice. The intention, and not the language in all instances, must be observed. If you take this passage literally, it will be seen that there could be no appointment by the executive unless there be vacancies. The language is expressly in the plural, "and if vacancies happen" "the executive thereof may make temporary appointments," in the plural again—appointments to correspond with vacancies. I need not, however, dwell upon this wording. No one has doubted, and no one will doubt, that the executive has authority to appoint where but one vacancy happens. I notice this point in passing, for it is right before me; and it is utterly out of the question, in giving a sound construction and sound interpretation to legal instruments, always to construe them literally as the words themselves indicate. Nor, indeed, does such, at first blush, seem to be the proper impression.

But the question arises as to whether the limitation implied in the words "until the next meeting of the Legislature," applies to the contingent power of the Governor to appoint and its duration, or to the period within which he may exercise and continue to exercise that power. The question is, does the limitation apply to the power to fill the office, or to the commission of him who is the appointee? The committee have supposed that the limitation is upon the appointing power, that the executive cannot make an appointment after "the next meeting of the Legislature," but that the force and effect of the appointment, the commission and the office, continue until the primary authority, the Legislature, lays its hand upon the subject and exercises that authority, or until the senatorial term, the end of the six years, shall have passed by.

The committee are further of opinion that the language in regard to the power of the executives of the several States to fill vacancies is neither perspicuous, definite, nor concise; that it is subject to two interpretations; that it may be and might have been in the beginning fairly and justly interpreted, either according to one or the other of two views. It may be interpreted so as to limit both the appointing power and the duration of the office; or, on the other hand, in may be interpreted so as to be applied, as the committee propose to apply it, to the extent of time within which the appointing power may be brought into requisition, or may be exercised.

What, then, is the difference between these two interpretations? When two such interpretations may be put upon this language, without doing violence to the Constitution, or to the organization of its powers, we may well inquire what was the object of the framers of the Constitution; and we may well see what would be the result of one interpretation, and what of the other. By giving the former interpretation, that both the power and the office terminate upon the meeting of the Legislature, you give to the phrase a harsh and severe construction, which does not conduce to the service or benefit of the public, but absolutely to deprive the States of the service of a Senator; for in all cases, if you consider the language literally, so as to terminate both the power to appoint and the office of the appointee, at the meeting of the Legislature—for it is out of the question to torture the word "meeting" to mean dissolution, or end, or rising, or adjournment—you in the first place violate what was the plain and palpable intention of the framers of the Constitution. They designed that there should always be two Senators from each State in commission; but by this harsh interpretation you are compelled, every little while, and in every State in a few years, where a hiatus or vacancy in the Senate occurs, to demand that the Senator who holds an executive appointment shall take his hat and walk out at the moment when the Legislature meets. It may be some days before the Legislature will elect. They may not, perhaps, elect during their whole session, and then, when a man is elected, it will take him some days to get here.

Mr. BADGER. How long would it take for a man to come here from California?

Mr. PETTIT. As it was in the olden times it would take months; but according to the present rate I believe a man can come in thirty days.

Sir, we must also consider what was the condition of the country when the Constitution was adopted. Then our country was sparsely settled; there were no railroads, no steamboats, and the slowest modes of travel were used. Men coming from Boston probably had to make a long and tedious journey in order to reach the seat of Government; and no doubt Senators and Representatives came on horseback from Georgia, Tennessee, and Kentucky. In that view of the case, then, it would have been apparent to the framers of the Constitution that, under the harsh construction against which I contend, the Senate might be for a long time without a full representation of the States. We are to regard this question as though our country were now in the situation in which it was at the time of the adoption of the Constitution; and by that means we shall get back into the feelings, and judgment, and intention, of those who framed that sacred instrument; and that will explain to us fully that matter.

Well, sir, by this interpretation, as I have said, you distract the public service; you have not your men in commission all the time; and the Senate is not composed of two Senators from each State, as the Constitution provides that it shall be. The Constitution expressly provides that the Senate shall be composed of two Senators from each State, and, for the purpose of having at all times that provision carried into effect, provided two means of appointment, one or the other of which is at all times capable of sending a Senator here. If the Legislature is not always in session, the perpetuity of the Executive of the State exists forever, in one hand or another, and is at all times ready to fill the hiatus.

I have contended that this would be the harsh view, the harsh construction of the provision of the Constitution. It is contended for, I know, by some gentlemen; but it seems to me that it is one not in accordance with the spirit or intention of the framers of the Constitution. The public convenience, the public service, and the public interest are served by a different construction, and would not be served by this.

Now, what is the other view? What is the consequence if we take the milder view which the committee have taken of this question? By it we promote the public service; we carry out the spirit and intention of the framers of the Constitution; we live up to its very letter, as nearly as we can; we carry out the provision which says the Senate shall be composed of two Senators from each State. While I do not feel bound by the precedents of the Senate as much as by the precedents of cases adjudicated before the judicial tribunals, they are still entitled to great consideration and respect. The Senate have heretofore interpreted the Constitution as the committee interpret it now, upon more than one occasion. If the opposite construction prevail, at the meeting of the Legislature the Senator here holding his seat under Executive appointment loses his seat. The Senate has, uniformly, in twenty, thirty, or forty instances, or perhaps more, decided that the office does not terminate upon the meeting of the Legislature, but continues beyond the meeting. This was decided first in the famous case of Mr. Smith, of Maryland. That resolution has been read and reread, but I will read it again.

The Senate, on the 6th of June, 1809, after full consideration and deliberation, passed this resolution:

"Resolved, That the Hon. Samuel Smith, a Senator appointed by the Executive of Maryland to fill the vacancy which happened in the office of Senator for that State, is entitled to hold his seat in the Senate of the United States during the session of the Legislature of Maryland, which, by the proclamation of the Governor of said State was to commence on the 5th day of the present month of June, unless said Legislature shall fill such vacancy by the appointment of a Senator, and this Senate be officially informed thereof."

I read this, not because it is a resolution fully covering the case of the honorable Senator from Vermont, but because it expresses the deliberate judgment of the Senate that the office does not terminate upon the meeting of the Legislature. That they have resolved and re-resolved. There are thirty and forty, perhaps there may be one hundred instances, where Senators have been appointed by the executives of their States, and come here and held their seats until the meeting of the Legislatures, and until their successors were elected and came here and took their seats. My own case furnishes an illustration of this practice. I came here on the 18th of January, at the middle of the last session of Congress. My predecessor [Mr. Cathcart,] had been appointed by the Governor of the State to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Governor Whitcomb. It was not proposed to turn him out of the Senate as soon as it was known that the Legislature met. I hold that we are compelled here to take official notice of the meeting, and not of the adjournment of the Legislature, for that is a matter that caprice may determine; but the constitution, or a permanent law of each State determines when the Legislature shall meet. But I need not refer to my own case. Indiana has had two or three other instances of the same kind. Mr. Hanna was once appointed; Mr. Tipton was elected to succeed him, but did not come here for three or four months after his election. There are a great many instances of the same sort. Many gentlemen have been appointed to fill vacancies, and have continued, in every instance, I believe, to hold their seats until their successors appeared and were qualified. In at least fifty cases the Senate has thus given to the clause of the Constitution in question the construction which the committee give it, that the office does not terminate upon the meeting of the Legislature.

This is the mild and benignant construction—one calculated to promote the public service, and not to injure it. And when two constructions can be given—I care not whether it be upon the bench or in a legislative body—the one detrimental to the public service, and the other promotive of the public good and the public weal, the latter ought always to be adopted. Such has been the judgment of the Senate heretofore. Then, sir, the committee think that they are justified in coming to the conclusion at which they have arrived; first, because it seems to be justified by the language of the Constitution itself, and then, it being subject to two constructions, they have the precedence of the Senate for their guidance.

It is idle to say to me that upon any philological principles it can be shown that the word "meeting" means "end." The resolution of the Senate, in the case of Mr. Smith, of Maryland, said he might hold "during" the session of the Legislature. The committee have said very tritely, in their report, that you cannot construe "meeting" into "end," "dissolution," or "adjournment." The Constitution does not say that the appointee shall hold his office until the next adjournment of the Legislature; but if the limitation applies to the appointee, it is "until the next meeting of the Legislature." We think, then, that we are justified in our construction from the text of the Constitution itself; from the precedents, and the construction heretofore given it by the Senate, and from our construction being promotive of the public service, and not detrimental to it.

Sir, I have pursued the subject longer and further than I had intended. I shall now leave it entirely to the consideration of those who feel more interest in it than I do, and who are, perhaps, abundantly better able to manage the matter. I shall not detain the Senate longer.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to take a prominent part in this discussion. The question before the Senate resolves itself into a very simple proposition, and I think it would not be very much improved by an amplification of the discussion. The papers on the table disclose the fact that the Committee on the Judiciary were divided—that the honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] and myself differed from the majority of the members of that Committee. I have placed my reasons for that dissent in writing. I do not choose, now, at least, to go fully into the subject. I may restate them, however, in a different form hereafter; but the state of my voice will not allow me to do so now; nor do I know that it is very desirable, for two reasons. I think the Senate will come to a very intelligent conclusion on this subject, by reading the Constitution and the precedents; and I know that my friend from Delaware is very fully prepared upon the subject, and therefore I yield the floor to him to conduct the discussion in reply to the honorable Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, before proceeding with the debate on this question, differing as I do, to teo celo, from the reasoning of the honorable Senator from Indiana, and the views of the majority of the committee, I should like to know whether the special order in Executive session, at two o'clock, is to take effect? If so, I cannot, of course, conclude my remarks by that time.

Mr. BADGER. I would suggest to the Senator that we may postpone this subject till another day.

Mr. GWIN. I hope not. We can postpone the other subject until to-morrow.

Mr. BADGER. I thought the other was important to-day.

Mr. GWIN. No, sir; we can take it up to-morrow.

Mr. CHASE. The Senator from Delaware is indisposed, and would proceed with great personal inconvenience to himself to-day.

Several SENATORS. Then let us postpone the subject.

Mr. CHASE. I trust the Senate will at once acquiesce in a motion to postpone the subject until to-morrow, or such day as will suit the convenience of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BADGER. To-morrow will be private bill day.

Mr. CHASE. Say Monday.

Mr. GWIN. We have a special order for Monday.

Mr. CHASE. I move to postpone the further consideration of the subject until Monday, and to make it the special order for that day.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope that will not be done; for the bill of the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOWD] is already the special order for that day.

Mr. CHASE. Then I move to postpone this subject until Tuesday. This will not interfere with the special order of Monday, unless the Senate choose, because that subject is the special order for Monday, and from day to day until disposed of. Unless the Senate shall choose to proceed with the consideration of this matter on Monday, and settle the question as to the right of the honorable Senator from Vermont to a seat, the other bill could be taken up, and proceeded with from day to day.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the subject will be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. BADGER and Mr. CHASE. To-morrow is private bill day.

Mr. PETTIT. Perhaps some other Senator may wish to go on to-day.

Mr. BAYARD. I should be perfectly willing to proceed to-day if I supposed that the debate could be closed to-day; but the suggestion which I made was with reference to the fact that there is an existing special order in Executive session at two o'clock. If that order shall be executed, and properly it ought to be, then of necessity this debate cannot be closed to-day; for I certainly cannot conclude my remarks by two o'clock. I will not promise to conclude at any time. I think that the questions here involved are very important; not perhaps in reference to the particular case, but because I think the constitutional provision has been departed from in a variety of cases, and I wish to show what is the extent and force of the precedents which have existed in this body, and to endeavor, so far as my own views go, to place this matter upon some principle which may be acted upon hereafter as well as now.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator from Delaware that if he is willing to go on to-day, we can devote to-day to the consideration of this case, and postpone the other special order.

Mr. BADGER. I can state to the Senator from Virginia that the Senator from Delaware greatly prefers not to go on to-day.

Mr. HUNTER. I did not understand him so.

Mr. BADGER. He is willing to go on, of course; we are always willing, but we sometimes have our personal preferences. I hope, therefore, the subject will be postponed until Monday; and I will add another suggestion why it should be done. I do not see how the subject is to be disposed of to-day. Some of us have not made up our minds upon the question. Some of us wish to listen in order to be convinced. Some of us do not yet understand the subject thoroughly, and are not prepared to decide for ourselves. I confess I am in that situation. I hope the subject will be postponed until Monday.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope not. There is already a special order for Monday.

Mr. BADGER. Then suppose we say Tuesday.

Mr. CASS. The Nebraska bill is the special order for Monday, and from day to day, until disposed of. Then, if you do not make this subject the order of the day for Monday, it will be thrown over for an indefinite period. I think it is one of those questions which should supersede all others. We owe it to ourselves and to the Senate to dispose of the subject as soon as possible.

Mr. PETTIT. Undoubtedly; it is a question of privilege.

Mr. BUTLER. I concur with the honorable Senator from Michigan. I think, as a question of privilege, by parliamentary rules, this will take precedence of all others; and I think we might well take it up to-morrow, notwithstanding the order of the Senate that we shall take up private business on Friday. If it takes precedence of all other questions, we can consider it to-morrow. It would, to be sure, postpone private business for a week, but that is all.

Mr. BADGER. What would be gained by that?

Mr. BUTLER. My friend from Delaware informs me that he cannot be here to-morrow, and of course I yield to every personal consideration he may urge; but one thing is very certain: this subject has been for a long time pending, and I say, for one, that it would give me very great pleasure to receive on this floor, the honorable Senator from Vermont; but I am perfectly satisfied that if he retains his seat here it will be in violation of the Constitution of the United States; and in that point of view I could not consent, if there was an important question pending, and it was likely to approach a tie in the Senate, to the reception of his vote; but I should protest against receiving it until this question should be decided. This shows the importance of deciding a question of privilege of this kind, that we should know who are competent voters in the Senate.

Mr. CASS. It is the first question which should come before the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir. In the English Parliament they always take up such questions first. I have looked at the books, and I know it to be so.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think, from what I understand, that the claimant to the seat is ready to proceed. My colleague can speak on some other occasion. If the claimant [Mr. PHELPS] would take the floor, my colleague would have an opportunity of being heard fully on a future occasion, when he will be in better health.

Mr. CHASE. There is a special order in Executive session for two o'clock to-day. The hour approaches. It is perfectly obvious that no Senator can take the floor and do justice either to himself or to the subject during the time which now remains. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] is entitled to the floor. He is indisposed, and would proceed with great personal inconvenience to-day, and under such circumstances, I have never known in this Senate, an appeal addressed to the courtesy of the Senate in vain. We have always agreed to a postponement, upon the application of a Senator under similar circumstances, of any question, to a day which would suit his convenience. That day in this case is Monday. I therefore insist upon my motion to postpone the further consideration of the subject until Monday.

Mr. CLAYTON. If my colleague desires to follow the Senator from Indiana in the debate, of course we all agree that he should do so, and select his own time. I do not so understand him. I understand him to be willing that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PHELPS] shall proceed with his argument, leaving him to reply. If that is the understanding, I would suggest that the claimant for the seat should go on now; but if my colleague has the slightest desire to proceed to-day, I should certainly insist upon his right to do so, or if he should desire to follow in the debate before the claimant for the seat.

Mr. SEWARD. Let the Senator from Delaware say what he does desire, and we shall grant it.

Mr. CHASE. The Senator from Delaware, who is entitled to the floor, does not desire to speak in preference to any other Senator who wishes now to occupy the floor. If there is any Senator who desires at present to speak, I will withdraw the motion; but if there is no Senator who desires now to speak, I shall insist upon it. I do not understand any other Senator as indicating a wish to occupy the floor at this time.

Mr. BAYARD. So far as my own personal convenience is concerned, I am perfectly willing to proceed now; but I do not wish to go on to-day with one half of an argument, and leave the rest of it for a subsequent day next week. My inquiry was directed to that matter. There is a special order assigned for two o'clock to-day in Executive session. My inquiry was, whether that special order necessarily caused the Senate to take up that subject at that time.

Several SENATORS. Not at all.

Mr. BAYARD. But you cannot close the debate to-day. There are other Senators who desire to debate the subject.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move to suspend the further consideration of the present order of business, for the purpose of proceeding to Executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion now before the Senate is to postpone the further consideration of this subject until Monday.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the whole subject lie upon the table, giving notice at the same time that I shall call it up whenever I can—not to-morrow, because the gentleman from Delaware may not wish to speak to-morrow—but I shall call it up on Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. BRIGHT, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. GWIN. I desire to move to take up from the table for consideration the message from the House of Representatives announcing the appointment of a committee, to act jointly with such committee as may be appointed by the Senate, to take into consideration the propriety of recommending an amendment of that portion of the Constitution which regulates the mode of electing the President and Vice President of the United States. It was on my motion that the message was ordered to lie upon the table. My motive in making it has been misunderstood in the House of Representatives. It is supposed by some members of that body that the intention was to show disrespect to them. It is scarcely necessary for me to say that such was not my intention. The motion was made because it was necessary for us to go into Executive session at the time. Not having listened to the reading of the resolution then, I thought it was a different proposition from what it is.

I am not prepared to say that I am opposed to the proposition to change the mode of election; I therefore move to take up the message now, in order that a motion may be submitted to authorize the President to appoint a committee on the part of the Senate. I hope I shall not be put on it as chairman, because I cannot serve well in such a position.

The motion was agreed to.

The resolution of the House being then under consideration,

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 26, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Tuesday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report from Mr. Campbell, the present Commissioner on the part of the United States to settle unpaid claims between this Government and citizens of Mexico, stating that, after investigation, he (Mr. Campbell) had ascertained that fifty thousand dollars would be required to liquidate these unpaid debts; and recommending that an appropriation of fifty thousand dollars be made for that purpose.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, the communication and accompanying report were referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the debate on the President's message is to be closed to-day, at one o'clock. My colleague [Mr. ERRINGER] has the floor, and unless the House go into committee now, he will lose the opportunity to make a speech. I therefore move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put and agreed to; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee, at its last sitting, had under consideration the reference of the President's message, and on that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ETHERIDGE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I am aware, sir, that in an assembly of this kind, silence commands itself most forcibly to those who have taken but little part in public affairs; yet, sir, there are times, no doubt, when the most exacting will excuse a mere expression of personal opinion. I hope—I trust, it is so now. It has been but two days since the Committee on Military Affairs reported back to the House, with a recommendation that it should pass, the joint resolution of the Senate, reviving the grade of Lieutenant General in the Army, and authorizing the President, under circumstances therein mentioned, to confer the rank, specially by brevet, upon either of our Major Generals who rendered eminent services in the late war with Mexico. Certain indications on the part of the House, at the time that report was made, have caused me to desire, thus early, to make some remarks which, otherwise, I should have deferred to a much later day.

And in saying that which I propose to say, I am not unmindful of the forced connection this subject has had with the political events of the last two years, and of the difficulty of considering it with that delicacy and moderation which will avoid arousing some of those feelings which the past so naturally awakened.

I do not expect to remove opinions and prejudices which some have heretofore formed, and to which they are committed by the unalterable records of the country. I prefer rather to address myself to those who have not, heretofore, been committed for or against the measure, and whose favorable and impartial consideration I may hope for, without being met by a repetition of those arguments and objections, which have become so much weakened by time and attending circumstances.

I am gratified to know, that upon the result of our action in the matter now before us, nothing of vast or immediate public moment can depend. The resolution does not involve the great questions of peace or war—of progress or expansion. Even the hackneyed political controversies of the day are left untouched; for, decide it as you will, the people and the Government will move on in the same continued order and harmony, undisturbed and unaffected by the results of your action.

I do not, admit, however, that the proposition is without great merits. It is necessarily connected with a very important arm of the Government, having for its object the additional encouragement of those whose responsibilities are always so great in time of actual war, and which, if adopted, cannot possibly be tortured into an injury to any person, or to any interest whatever. Yet, sir, I feel myself appealed to by other considerations, which, while they do not affect me personally, the promptings of my heart will not permit me to disregard.

If our assent to the resolution involved a new principle; if, by its passage, we were to commit ourselves to a policy which, in form or effect, is without any precedent, or violative of the letter or spirit of that Constitution which declares that "no title of nobility shall be granted," I, too, would take my stand with those who oppose its adoption. But, in my opinion, there is no conceivable objection to this particular resolution, which does not apply to every former act of the Government having for its design an acknowledgment of that high sense of gratitude which has always been considered as due to those who have rendered important services to the country.

You have often awarded to the meritorious and the brave, medals and other tokens of regard, which a proud soldier estimates next only to his life or his good name, but never except to those who had first exhibited that true courage and moderation which alone can give luster to the profession of arms.

To your victorious chieftains have you voted those good swords which are awarded only to honor and bravery, but never until their own had first flashed in the light of victory on many a renowned and successful battle-field; and but recently, when your armies were performing prodigies of valor, and achieving, in the very heart of an enemy's country, that series of brilliant victories which at once startled and astonished the world, you did not permit the courier who brought you the glad tidings to return, without instructing him to say to your armies, that they "deserved well of the country."

Events of a still more recent occurrence may be pointed to with confidence, as a justification for the unanimous adoption of the resolution. It has been but a few brief months since might have been seen at anchor in the Bay of Smyrna the sloop-of-war St. Louis. At the same time might have been observed, on board that sloop, an unobtrusive and intelligent, a chivalrous and humane officer, who up to that hour had been a stranger to all distinction, and wholly unknown to fame. No doubt, sir, he had often sighed for an opportunity to win in his department of service, by the exercise of that daring and courage which "stirred within him," some of that renown, securing which, in other days, had covered our infant Navy with imperishable glory.

When, in the recent war with Mexico, our land forces were creating heroes, heralding victories, and partitioning an empire, he was compelled to repose in inglorious ease, and endure all that "heart-sick faintness of the hope delayed" which falls so like a blight on the heart of the aspiring and the young. More than this, he saw from afar the extinguishment of the flame of war; he beheld the triumphal return of those who had won the names of heroes; he heard the plaudits of grateful millions who came to welcome the conquerors home, and saw other names enrolled in the book of fame beside the few "which were not born to die." But his name was not there. The fields had all been won, and the era for the performance of great deeds had passed by.

Suddenly, however, an emergency arose which enabled him to connect his own name with his country's fame. A political refugee from Hungary, who had sought and found here that political liberty which had been denied him abroad, and who by his declaration of intention to become a citizen had thrown himself upon our protection, was forcibly seized and imprisoned by the tools and minions of Austrian despotism.

You and the world are familiar with the courage and intrepidity; the promptness and judgment which were exhibited by the officer in command; a courage and resolution which brought Martin Koszta back in triumph to your shores, while it extorted from the courts and counsellors of Europe that respect and admiration which all men pay to true greatness and true courage.

But, sir, this achievement did not stop here. Its entire importance did not consist in the mere liberation of the enslaved; this was but the beginning of great public results, which were speedily to follow. It made plain and familiar a somewhat obsolete page in the book of American diplomacy; it awakened a slumbering world to a new reading of the laws of nations; and it demonstrated the great fact that the American people would announce in the very heart of Europe, and at the doors of despotism and power, the popular truths of our Government, which have ever been fostered and cherished by our people.

What was the effect of the liberation of Koszta here? And what was the response which went up from the people? What was done by the Executive Department? And how have you shown your appreciation of it? Why, sir, the people, without a conference, rendered a verdict of hearty, prompt, and enthusiastic approval. Your President, after careful advisement and deliberation, instructed his Secretary to say, that he fully indorsed and approved the conduct of the officer; and that Secretary, fully aroused to the importance of the subject, immediately gave it an elaboration commensurate with his great abilities, which, if it did not fully satisfy every one of the entire correctness of his arguments, caused a very general acquiescence in the great conclusion to which he arrived.

But, sir, what did you do? I mean, what was done by the House of Representatives? Were we content to rest the matter where the Executive, the Secretary of State, and the opinion of the public had placed it? No, sir; you, too, must seek an occasion for testifying your admiration of the achievement, and of that lofty patriotism and love of fame which led to its consummation.

We must not forget, sir, that on the very day that the President's message and accompanying documents were submitted to the House, and before any member could have had time to examine the celebrated letter of Mr. Marcy to Chevalier Hülse-mann, a member from New York rose in his place, and offered a series of resolutions, having for their express object the compliment of a sword and the thanks of Congress to Duncan N. Ingraham, for his gallantry and good conduct in the release of Martin Koszta. What more was done? Its immediate adoption would have prevented an occasion for the exhibition of all that learning and patriotism which the subsequent discussion of the subject so properly elicited. Though no objection was offered, it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who very promptly responded, and reported a substitute which embodied the thanks of Congress, and the marked compliment of a medal, to be prepared and presented under the supervision of the President.

Up to this time no objection had been made; yet, sir, members could not permit the favorable opportunity which the subject presented to pass unimproved. I listened with great interest and attention to much that was said; and I know not now which most to admire, the impulses which prompted members to speak, or the learning they respectively displayed. Those who took a part in that most interesting debate, showed that they had trod to advantage "the gladsome paths of jurisprudence," and their arguments would have awakened admiration within the classic precincts of Westminster Hall. It was a noble offering of patriotism most disinterested, and learning most profound.

The honorable and gallant gentleman from Virginia, (I mean, of course, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs,) who was all the time at the head of the column, gave so many indications of his comprehensive judgment, his appreciation of national fame, and total disregard of self, that I confidently hope to find him rallying to the aid of those who propose this last compliment to one of the most distinguished sons of his native State.

I have felt myself justified in making this allusion to the case of Captain Ingraham, because I regard the principle of the two propositions as identical. The difference consists alone in the number and weight of the reasons which may be urged in behalf of the respective measures. The one is a well-merited tribute to the rising hopes and prospects of early manhood; the other to that old age which, like the ancient oak, is "still steady amid the elements."

It has been urged, and it will be so again, as an objection to the resolution, that it is designed as a personal compliment to General Scott; that it is special and limited in its character; and that so soon as the President has once confirmed the rank of lieutenant general by brevet, the resolution expires by its own limitation, and becomes forever thereafter wholly inoperative and void. This, I admit, is so; and it is for this very reason that the resolution is designed as a personal compliment to General Scott, and that the compliment is as distinguished as it is merited, that I am in favor of it. If the resolution were general in its nature, and designed to create a permanent grade, I should feel very little concern about it.

I know that the President may, by the terms of the resolution, confer the rank of lieutenant general by brevet on either of the major generals who participated in the war with Mexico; but I am very confident that the President will so use the power we thus propose to give him as to do no violence to his own personal wishes, or the general public sentiment of the country. I am willing, most unhesitatingly, to trust him to make the discrimination. I have good reasons for believing, and I do believe, that the President has never signed any commission with more real satisfaction than he will derive from commissioning General Scott a lieutenant general by brevet.

Sir, it would be an interesting spectacle, and especially so, no doubt, to the political friends of the President, to behold him, in obedience to the will of Congress, the general desire of the Army and the people, and his own wishes, conferring this well-deserved honor on a gallant soldier, whose youth, manhood, and old age have all been so freely given to the whole country—one who, for nearly half a century, has borne your banner so wisely, so bravely, and so triumphantly. It will be more than creditable to the Representatives of the people, and a proper commentary upon our free institutions.

I would refer you, sir, to the last presidential election, not for the purpose of complaining of the result, or of criticising the causes which produced it. I allude to it, not only because it has a proper connection with the subject, but for the reason that the result is itself an argument against many of the objections which have been interposed against the adoption of the resolution.

I will admit, sir, that the candidate of the Democratic party was all that his most ardent friends claimed him to be—a gentleman of learning and accomplishments—a politician of experience and ability; but he did not possess that popular reputation which might have previously designated him as the most probable candidate of his party. His reputation, up to that time, was much less national than some of his older and more distinguished rivals for the nomination.

At the head of the Whig column stood Winfield Scott, better known to the American people than any living man of the age; one whose connection with the military operations of the country since 1812 was such as to make his name (if fame alone could do so much) at once a tower of strength and an augury of success. With some, sir, it had become a fixed opinion, that the verdict of the people would always be, in favor of those distinguished military heroes who, like General Scott, could unite the gentle qualities of the good with that renown and fame which has so many charms and fascinations, alike for the young and the old.

In the embittered contest which followed, members of your own party, sir, vied with each other in studied and impassioned eulogies upon the public services of the Whig candidate for the Presidency; and in their public discourses urged no objection whatever to his election, other than that it would be a triumph of Whig principles, and a defeat of their own. The result showed a victory of the junior over the older officer. The victor of many a hard struggle for his country, found himself vanquished in this last great contest for himself. You, sir, claimed the result to be a triumph of principle—a claim which it is not now necessary for me to admit or deny—but it was further alleged to be most complimentary to the intelligence of American people, and a proof of their devotion to certain political measures, as they had rejected the greatest living soldier of the age, and conferred on a junior officer the highest civil honor in the world.

Then, if this be so, and as the resolution is inoperative, so soon as the rank of lieutenant general by brevet has been once conferred, where can be the danger or impropriety, as the resolution can never be revived until the people, through their Representatives, shall desire it? They may never, perhaps, desire it; never, certainly, until worth and valor, sanctified by age, shall all combine to make the demand.

Again: it has been repeatedly urged that to empower the President to confer the rank of lieutenant general by brevet is violative of that part of the Constitution which declares that "no title of nobility shall be granted." This objection I should not regard as worthy of an answer did I not know that it is relied on by those whose judgment and integrity of purpose I am bound to respect. I cannot think, however, that they have examined the question otherwise than very superficially. What, sir, is a title of nobility? We who have been reared under a free Government, and cultivated all the prejudices so natural to those who despise distinctions founded on anything but real merit, are compelled to look abroad for examples to illustrate properly its meaning. We have never recognized any nobility, save that which is "of nature's own creating." In this country, "virtue alone is true nobility." It ever has been so, and I trust it ever will.

We are strangers to that nobility which, in all ages, has blended itself with "the divine right of kings," and which has been regarded as a necessary appendage to royalty—I mean that falsely-called nobility which rests on conventional distinctions in society, and which confers privileges without at the same time imposing corresponding responsibilities or duties. This was the kind of nobility which the authors of our Constitution so wisely resolved to root out and destroy. They were familiar with its existence and its evils, and prescribed the remedy. The "nobility" mentioned in the Constitution was, at the time of the adoption of the latter, in full operation in Great Britain, where its crushing evils were so very palpable as to make our ancestors desire to avoid it forever. The people of England, during our colonial dependence, recognized the title of duke, which was next only to the rank of prince. There was also the title of marquis, next below the rank of duke; the title of earl, next to that of marquis; viscount, next below an earl; and baron, next below a viscount.

It is very difficult at this time to ascertain all the ancient prerogatives of the various titles I have mentioned. They were all, however, derivable from the Crown, and none of them, either directly or indirectly, from the people. They were special marks of royal favor—were mostly hereditary and sometimes confined to particular localities. Testing this resolution, then, by any one of these requirements, the objection that it creates a "title of nobility" will appear quite absurd. The resolution simply restores an office which was abolished by Congress in 1799. This is proposed to be done by the ordinary course of legislation, and certainly Congress may create the office of lieutenant general as readily as that of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, or collector of customs. The resolution does not permit the President to confer the rank of lieutenant general without the consent of the Senate. The President, certainly, may nominate a lieutenant general as readily as a collector for the port of New York. Should General Scott be nominated by the President, he will have to pass the same ordeal as the distinguished successor of Mr. Bronson; yet it has never been alleged, among the many things which have been said of Mr. Redfield, that his commission had made him either a "very hard" or a "titled nobleman."

The grade of lieutenant general is no recent invention. It has been recognized in military organizations for more than a century; it was a part of our military system during our revolutionary struggle for independence. The old Continental Congress, on the 15th of November, 1776, adopted the following resolution:

"That the rank of naval officers be to the rank of officers in the land service, as follows: Admiral as a general, vice admiral as a lieutenant general, rear admiral as major general, commodore as a brigadier general," &c., &c.

Thus recognizing the grade of lieutenant general as then already existing, and as a part of our military system. The President is, by the Constitution, "commander in chief of the Army and Navy;" yet the grades of major and brigadier general are still preserved, as would also have been that of lieutenant general, but for the act of March 3, 1799, by which it was abolished. That act provided:

"That a commander of the Army of the United States be appointed and commissioned by the style of general of the armies of the United States, and the present office and title of lieutenant general shall thereafter be abolished."

It also proves that the grade was not destroyed by the previous adoption of the Federal Constitution. It may be said of this act of Congress, that it was contemporaneous with the Constitution. The wisdom which formed the one enacted the other; yet it remains for this generation to make the discovery that the Congress of 1799 was legislating to abolish a military office which, according to the present interpretation of the Constitution by those who oppose this resolution, never, in fact, could have existed.

If, sir, it be true that civil government is, at best, but a necessary evil, resulting from the fall of man and the introduction of sin into the world, it is just as certain that armies are necessary evils, consequent upon the establishment and preservation of that Government. The manifest necessity of armies and army organization being admitted, it cannot be necessary to go into an argument to prove the propriety of superiority and inferiority of grade, to secure proper discipline and efficiency. A standing army here or elsewhere is but little less than a despotism. Its existence can be maintained only upon the principles of subordination to rank, and obedience to those whose powers depend upon grade. Importance must be attached to each, and neither should be weakened, even by indirection.

In addition to all this, there is nothing so well calculated to promote and encourage that efficiency, which has thus far characterized our Army; as the hope of that preferment, which would not exist but for the various grades, by which the humblest soldier in the ranks may ultimately be enabled, by merit and perseverance, to reach far beyond the command of a regiment.

No one seems to have been more impressed with this fact, or to have urged it with more zeal than the present Secretary of War, who, in his recent report to the President, uses this language:

"Patriotism, or a sense of duty, will not, in time of peace, fill the ranks of an army; nor will pay alone be sufficient to develop all the elements of efficiency. The hope of advancement is the foundation of professional zeal and success, and this incentive should exist in the Army as well as in civil life."

Then, sir, if this title were new, if it were wholly unknown to our military organization, as it is below that of the commander in chief, and subordinate thereto, I would be willing to favor it, as furnishing an additional incentive to those in subordinate positions to seek that promotion which depends on merit alone.

To those who so recently honored themselves in doing honor to Captain Ingraham I would, before I conclude, make a confident appeal. You have shown that you know how to value that national pride which is but an aggregate of that patriotism which is diffused so generally among the people. It is nowhere to be found except in those countries where the people love their Government for its blessings, or can point to the annals of the past for those great deeds and great achievements which history loves to record, and which genius so often embodies in song.

That national pride is worth more in preserving constitutional liberty than ten thousand "towers along the steep." If properly fostered and encouraged, it will achieve more than, without it, your armies and navies ever can achieve. Without this national pride, your fleets and armaments will but destroy that freedom they were created to preserve. It has already given you historians to record your great achievements. It has aroused the children of sensibility and of song. It has caused genius to impart more than the imperishability of marble to the great men, and great achievements of those who have gone before us, and is now erecting on the banks of your own Potomac, and in sight of the National Capitol, the loftiest monument which gratitude has ever raised to commemorate the virtues of mankind.

The aged minstrel who had lived until bigotry had "named his harmless art a crime," when he found himself a voluntary exile in a foreign land, even in extremity of ill, could point "with all a poet's ecstasy" to the past achievements of his kindred. He could still sing—

"Of good Earl Francis, dead and gone,
And of Earl Walter, rest him God!

* * * * *
And how full many a tale he knew—
Of the old warriors of Buccleugh."

And though his own, his native land, gave him no greeting but oppression, and no shelter but the elements, yet, sir, the remembrance of what that country had been, could arouse burning maledictions for those who dared deride the land of his sires.

The long line of great men who arrested the world's gaze, amid the throes and convulsions of our revolutionary struggle, have all, all, long since passed to "The deep, damp vault, the darkness, and the worm."

Yet, sir, their places were well filled by the heroes and the statesmen who shared the perils of the ensuing war; but, alas! they too have mostly yielded to that destroyer which is the common leveler of all distinctions. Within a few years you have mourned a Jackson, an Adams, a Harrison, a Calhoun, a Taylor, a Webster, and a Clay. Your columns are now shrouded in the solemn drapery of woe for the lamented King, whose virtues you have so recently essayed to commemorate. The illustrious Senator from Michigan still lives. The able and venerable representative from Missouri is with us, combining the energies of youth with the wisdom of age. Your Commanding General yet lives, ready in his old age to wield that good sword which has so often leaped from its scabbard at the call of patriotism and of duty. The two former, who have so long worn the honors of high civil trust, are among those who desire this last mark of respect to that soldier of the nation, whose perilous and faithful services they have observed through almost half a century. I readily take my stand with them. I yield to none in my admiration for Captain Ingraham, yet I would not accord all the honors to the rising and none to the setting sun.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion, and allow the committee to act upon the pending resolutions in reference to the distribution of the President's message.

Mr. WARREN. I withdraw the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The resolutions will be reported to the House.

The first resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress at the present session as relates to foreign affairs, together with the accompanying correspondence in relation thereto; to the claim of the subjects of Spain for losses in the case of the schooner Amistad; marking the boundary between the United States and the British possessions in the Northwest, as designated in the convention of the 13th of June, 1846, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to this resolution, moved by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY.]

The amendment, to come in after the figures "1846," was read, as follows:

"And so much as refers to the Guano trade."

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. In conformity to an understanding with the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means I do not wish to press that amendment, and I withdraw it. If the subject is one proper for legislation it goes there as a matter of course.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am willing to leave the resolution as it stands. Without compromising any other committee by an opinion of my own, I take it for granted that the resolution just read carries with it everything which legitimately belongs to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. This subject is now undergoing investigation between the two Governments, and therefore I think it ought not to be referred by express resolution.

Mr. BAYLY. I do not acquiesce in the criticism of the gentleman at all, that because it is a subject under negotiation therefore it should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; but I withdraw the amendment.

The second resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying papers as relates to the existing tariff, and recommends a revision and change of its provisions; so much as relates to the condition of the Treasury, the finances of the Government, to the public debt and its payment, the estimates of receipts and expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year, be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The resolutions have been read through twice in committee; and as I suppose there are no amendments to be offered to any of them, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I prefer that they should be read through, because if they are not, gentlemen will not give that close attention which should be given to the subjects embraced in these resolutions. It is a matter of some importance that they should be read; and perhaps some gentlemen here may desire to offer amendments.

The resolutions were then read, as follows:

3. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying papers as relates to the condition and operation of the Army of the United States, and recommends the increase and modification of the same; also, all recommendations for new arsenals, forts, magazines, and barracks, together with the report of the Secretary of War, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

4. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying papers as relates to the Navy of the United States, its condition and operation, and recommends an increase of the same, together with the report of the Secretary of the Navy, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the enlargement and modification of the present judicial system of the United States, and to the prevention of frauds upon the Pension Bureau, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to our intercourse with Indian tribes, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

7. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the Post Office Department, and its condition and operation, together with the report of the Postmaster General, be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

8. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to commerce and tonnage duties, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

9. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the public lands, their survey and sale, the extension of the present land system over the Territories of Utah and New Mexico, the extension of the preemption principle, and free grants of land in aid of the construction of railroads, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

10. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the District of Columbia, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

11. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the survey and construction of a railroad from the river Mississippi to the Pacific ocean, be referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. McDUGALL. I supposed when a special committee was raised in this House upon this subject, the design was that it should not merely take charge of a particular bill, but that the whole subject should be referred to them. When a committee was raised for this special subject, I supposed that the part of the President's message having reference to this subject would be referred to them at the same time.

Mr. HOUSTON. The House raised a special committee upon this subject since the resolutions were submitted, and the subject has been referred to it; there is no use in making the reference proposed here. I am willing that this resolution should be stricken out, although I believe it would be better if the committee here designated were to take charge of this subject. I am willing, however, to let this resolution be stricken out, and let the subject go to the special committee.

Mr. McDUGALL made a remark totally inaudible to the Reporter.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think so; and for this reason a special committee has been raised to consider this subject; and I suppose it would be no injury to the subject to have one of the standing committees also take the matter into consideration. I suppose, however, the special committee will give it that sort of consideration which the friends of the measure may desire; and I have no objection to its disappearing from the list of resolutions.

Mr. McDUGALL. I want the matter distinctly understood, and I therefore adhere to my motion in the form in which I made it, that the resolution remain as it now stands, with the exception that the words "Committee on Roads and Canals" be stricken out, and the words "special committee" inserted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman will specify the committee already raised upon the subject, so that it shall not operate to raise a new committee.

Mr. McDUGALL. I have no objection to that, and will so modify my amendment.

Mr. HAVEN. As I understand the proposition of the gentleman from California, it reaches the precise object I desire to accomplish. I hope the words "Committee on Roads and Canals" will be stricken out, and that the words "special committee of thirteen already raised" will be inserted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The "select committee of thirteen."

Mr. HOUSTON. The matter has already been referred to that committee, and I can see no object to be accomplished by the resolution in this form.

Mr. HAVEN. I think it will be better to adopt it in this form.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now desire to hear the resolution read as amended, so that the committee may understand distinctly upon what they are voting.

The resolution as proposed to be amended was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the said message and accompanying documents as relates to the survey and construction of a railroad from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean, be referred to the select committee of thirteen, heretofore raised by the House upon that subject.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon agreeing to the resolution as amended; and being taken, the resolution was agreed to.

The next resolution was read by the Clerk, as follows:

12. Resolved, That so much of the said message and accompanying documents as relates to the public buildings and grounds, be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose that that resolution, as it now stands, would carry to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that subject I have in view. If it does not, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the subject. That part of the report of the Secretary which relates to the purchase of some building in New York, instead of renting buildings, as is now done, should be referred to that committee, if the present resolution does not carry it there.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama propose to amend the resolution?

Mr. HOUSTON. No, sir; I will not make any motion. I only desired to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the subject.

The resolution was then agreed to.

The next resolution was read, as follows:

13. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the subject of patents, the operations of the Patent Office, and the modifications of the existing patent laws, be referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Is an amendment to that resolution in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is open to amendment.

Mr. CLINGMAN. For the purpose of saying a word upon the subject, I move to amend the resolution by adding at the end of the resolution the following words: "with instructions to consider the expediency of so amending the patent laws as to prevent the extension of patents, in any case, to a period beyond fourteen years."

Mr. Chairman, my object in moving this amendment is, under the five minutes' rule, to call the attention of the committee and of the House to the subject. It is one of considerable moment, and is at the present time attracting a good deal of attention in the country.

During the last Congress I made several attempts to induce the Committee on Patents, by conversation with the chairman and other members of that committee, to report an amendment to the patent laws to that effect.

When our existing patent laws were made, fourteen years were considered a sufficient length of term. We now live in a fast age; and it is to be presumed that a patentee may make as much now in a period of fourteen years from his patent as he could have done in twenty or thirty years at the time of the organization of the Government, and I therefore think that the original limit should be strictly adhered to.

The principle of the patent laws is such that you stop all inventors—you stop, in fact, the progress of the mechanical mind of the country, in a certain direction. Of course, the natural right of the case is for every individual to exercise his skill in making inventions, and turn them to good account. But, by the existing patent laws, you say that the mechanical mind of the country shall stop for a period. Well, the object of that is to give an advantage to an inventor. It is said, that when a man has made an invention, it is his property, and he ought to make something out of it, and that, but for the patent laws, he would not make anything out of it, because any one else might adopt it.

Now, I am willing that we shall give some advantage to inventors; but the real question is, how far are we to go in that direction? I believe that the Government of Great Britain allows no extension beyond fourteen years. But how is it with us? Why, the Commissioner of Patents is allowed to extend patents beyond fourteen years, under certain restrictions. How does the matter in fact stand before him? Some party who has a great interest in a patent goes before him; evidence is taken upon one side; able counsel are employed to present the case, and even if the Commissioner is honest, in nine cases out of ten, like a judge and jury who have heard the counsel and witnesses on the one side, he is liable to be misled; and if he is not a thoroughly honest man, he is almost sure to grant the extensions.

I wish to say, to prevent misconception, that I am entirely satisfied with the course of the present Commissioner of Patents, as far as I know it. The only case I know of, in which Congress has been asked to go beyond his decision, is one which excited my astonishment. I allude to the report of the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office of this House on the Colt patent extension. I read the decision of Mr. Mason in that case. It stated facts and laid down principles which, it seemed to me, were conclusive. I afterwards saw in the New York Herald what purported to be the report of our Committee on Patents and the Patent Office. I read it over, and thought it probably a quiz. It never occurred to me that any committee of this House would make such a report as that. I came up here, sent to the document room for the report, read it, and asked other members to read it as a matter of curiosity. There is not one plausible pretext in it for the extension of that Colt patent. Every single fact stated is against it, and every reason—if there be a reason given—is against it.

When that Colt case comes up on private bill day, it will perhaps be discussed; but I think the time has come when we ought to stop all these extensions beyond fourteen years. If the invention is a valuable one, in all probability the inventor will be remunerated, and if he is not, why, it is usually his own fault.

Now, I was applied to the other day to give my aid in getting a patent extended, and I was told that the inventor had had a patent for fourteen—or perhaps for twenty-one—years, and had not been able to make anything out of it. Well, if so, that is the very best reason why it should go into the hands of the public. It is as old, I believe, as the time of the earliest fables that the dog which could not eat hay should not lie by it to keep the ox from it; and hence, when a man has had a patent for—

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was taken on Mr. CLINGMAN's amendment, and it was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move the Committee do now rise and report the resolutions to the House, with the recommendation that they do pass.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. ORR) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the President's message, and had come to a series of resolutions thereon, which it recommended do pass.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call for the previous question on the adoption of the resolutions which have just been reported.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was then put, and the resolutions were adopted.

STEAMSHIP SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the proceedings of a public meeting in the city of Philadelphia in reference to the disaster which befell the steamship San Francisco; which were referred to the joint special committee on that matter.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The SPEAKER. Reports are in order from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOUSTON. Debate will close on the deficiency bill in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to-day; and if it be the pleasure of the House, I should like to have it disposed of this evening. I therefore move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put; and, on a division, there were—ayes 62.

Mr. WALSH demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. McMULLIN and VAIL were appointed.

The question was taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 56.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, in the chair.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now take up the deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that that is the business now in order, having been already taken up; and on this the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PERKINS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CRAIGE. I desire to know how debate is to be regulated in reference to time?

Mr. HOUSTON. As I understand the question of the gentleman from North Carolina, the answer is, that the general debate closes in an hour after the bill is taken up, and then five minutes' debate ensues on such amendments as may be offered; and if the debate occupy more than his evening hour—to-morrow being private bill day—it may throw the bill over to another week.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, it will be recollected by the House that when the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was in sitting, the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] at the request of the gentleman from New York, yielded the floor. As this gentleman [Mr. SMITH] is still desirous of making some remarks, I feel great pleasure in surrendering to him the floor.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, addressed the committee, at considerable length, advertising to the New York controversy, and regretting that it should have been introduced into the House of Representatives.

He gave a succinct history of its causes, from 1847, when a resolution approving of the Wilmot proviso was introduced into the Legislature of that State. He was one of those who delighted to sustain our public men; and it was a matter of deep regret to him that Mr. Marcy should have fallen under the ban of any portion of the Democracy of the country—and still more so those of his own State. He paid a high compliment to the ability and integrity of the Secretary of State. He supported the Administration, especially vindicating the conduct of the President of the United States. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remark that the time allotted for debate has expired, and the Clerk will now proceed to read the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON took the floor.

Mr. CUTTING. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit me, for a moment, to refer, without reading, to the records of the proceedings at Baltimore, which are contained in the Union?

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. NICHOLS. I object.

Mr. CUTTING. My colleague from New York [Mr. WESTBROOK] undertook to deny what I stated upon this floor. I hold in my hand the Union—not the National Intelligencer—in which is contained the proceedings of that convention—not editorially—but as regularly reported in the Union paper of that day. By that it will appear—

Mr. NICHOLS, (interrupting.) I rise to a question of order. I understood the Chair to decide that it could not be read except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did so decide.

Mr. NICHOLS. I object.

Several MEMBERS. "Too late," "too late."

Mr. NICHOLS. I objected at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the objection, but holds if the gentleman objected in time the paper cannot be read.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. It is a matter of universal interest to the House, and I hope it will be read.

Objection was made, and the paper was not read.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to make a statement to the committee. There are several gentlemen who wish to propose amendments to this bill now before the committee. I supposed that everything of that kind would be prepared by this evening; but some of the committee have informed me that matters have been so recently submitted to them, that they will require, at least, until to-morrow morning, to pass upon them. I therefore ask that the committee rise, that we may spend the remainder of the evening in receiving reports from committees. I make that motion.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee (Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 49, being a bill to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER announced that reports from committees were next in order, and commenced calling for reports from the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. FAULKNER, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred a petition to indemnify the State of South Carolina for moneys expended for the United States, in the war in Florida with the Seminole Indians, be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that the same be laid upon the table.

Mr. FAULKNER also, from the same committee, reported "A bill for the relief of William Hawkins;" which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOGOC. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back Senate bill for the relief of Joseph Gideon, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the bill just reported to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. OLDS. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. MIDDLESWORTH, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed:

In the case of Charles M. How, of Benton, New Hampshire, praying for compensation for military services as heir of Abraham Safford; and

In the case of Stephen Hoyt, and other heirs of Stephen Hoyt, senior, deceased, of Bradford, in the State of New Hampshire, praying for a grant of land in California for services rendered by said deceased in the Revolution.

Mr. VAIL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an adverse report upon the memorial of the defenders of the city of Baltimore in 1814, praying for one hundred and sixty acres of land; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VAIL also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of George W. Gibson; which was read the first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VAIL also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Parmelia Slavin, widow of John Blue, deceased; which was read the first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

lowing cases; which were severally ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed:

In the case of William Murray, of Halifax county, Virginia, praying for a pension;

In the case of William A. Webster, praying for a pension;

In the case of Margaret Bowne, asking for bounty land for military services performed by her late husband, Gabriel H. Bowne, in the war of 1812; and

In the case of John Mitchell, for arrearages of pension, praying that his pension may be increased to twenty dollars per month, from the 15th of May, 1847, to the 1st of January, 1850.

Mr. STRAUB, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Alton Nelson."

Mr. STRAUB, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the following petitions; which were severally ordered to lie upon the table:

The petition of Horatio Fitch, praying to have certain arrearages of pensions paid over which have been withheld from him;

The petition of Abigail Southworth, and Rosalind Peters, praying for a pension;

The petition of Charles H. Painter, praying for a pension as an invalid on account of disability from sickness while in the mail service of the United States.

Mr. DENT, from the same committee, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and the bill and report ordered to be printed:

"A bill entitled an act to provide a pension for Champion, of Genesee county, State of New York."

Mr. D. also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the following petitions; which were severally ordered to lie on the table, and the report to be printed:

The petition of Emanuel P. Stedman, of Penton, Addison county, Vermont, asking compensation for services in the revolutionary war.

The petition of Robert Ham, of Somerworth, in the State of New Hampshire, praying for a special act granting him back pay or pension money, from September, 1814, to March, 1851.

The petition of John W. Cameron, of New York, a lieutenant in the war of 1812, praying for a pension.

The petition of Benjamin A. Branhan, for an increase of pension.

Mr. CHRISMAN, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the petition of John Mills, of Haverhill, in the State of Massachusetts, praying a pension for his services in the war of 1812; which was ordered to lie upon the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. MACE, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Sarah K. Jenks and the legal representatives of Hartshorn R. Thomas, in the matter of the brig Jane."

Mr. READY, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Gilbert C. Russell."

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Commerce, made an adverse report on the petition of James Irwin; which, together with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California;'" approved March 3, 1851.

BOUNTY LAND.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported "a bill giving further time for satisfying claims for bounty lands, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. H. said: The bill, Mr. Speaker, is drawn up in pursuance of the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions. It extends for five years longer that act, which expired last June. The exigencies of the case seem to demand its immediate passage.

The bill, which was then read through, provides that the act to provide for satisfying claims for bounty lands for military service in the late war with Great Britain, and for other purposes, approved July 27, 1842; and also the two acts approved January 27, 1835, be revived and continued in force for five years from June 26, 1853. The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. HUGHES, from the same committee, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and, with the report, ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Thomas C. Green."

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the same committee, reported "a bill to confirm to Hercules L. Dousman his title to farm lot No. 32, adjoining the town of Prairie du Chien, in the State of Wisconsin;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. L. said: I am requested, Mr. Speaker, by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. EASTMAN,] to make the motion that the bill I have just reported be put upon its passage. It relates to a piece of land which has been in the peaceable occupation of the present holder, and those from whom he holds, fifty years. It merely confirms his title.

There was no objection, and the bill was read through. It provides that the title of Hercules L. Dousman to a piece of land containing one hundred and thirty acres, more or less, be confirmed, and that a patent shall issue therefor as in other cases; provided that the bill only operates as a relinquishment on the part of the United States of her title to said land.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the gentleman will explain the character of the previous title, and the necessity for the confirmation by the United States of the existing one.

Mr. LANE. Let the report be read, and the gentleman will be satisfied on the points he has mentioned.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the gentleman will make the explanation himself.

Mr. LANE. I will state, if it be desired, that when the posts were relinquished by the British Government and the Government of the United States, there was a provision in Mr. Jay's treaty which gave to settlers the right of property, possession, and conveyance; that Jean Marie Quéré laid off this piece of land in 1796, the time when those posts were given up; and that he was in peaceable possession of it in 1820. Commissioners were appointed by the Government of the United States to adjust such land claims, and before them it was proven that this Canadian Quéré had been in possession of the tract referred to from 1796 to 1820. Upon the map of the Commissioner this piece of land is marked as confirmed to Mr. Quéré, from whom Mr. Dousman derives his title. For some cause or other—it was believed by the committee to be a clerical error—the land is not returned to the Government as confirmed by the commission, although on the plat it appears that Dousman, and those from whom he derives title, has held peaceable and quiet possession of the land from the year 1796 to this time. And we propose to confirm their title, relinquishing the right of the Government.

Mr. HILLYER. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. LANE,] that I think it would be a more regular and proper mode to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole House. I do not know what question may become involved in the discussion of it, and I am not prepared now to take formal action on the question presented by this bill. I hope, therefore, that it will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and printed.

The question was taken, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LANE. I am directed to present Senate bill No. 76, and to recommend its passage without amendment.

Mr. HILLYER. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana not to put the bill on its passage. There can be no objection to its being referred.

Mr. LANE. Then I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and printed.

It was so ordered.

Mr. LATHAM. I rise to a privileged question.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his privileged question.

Mr. LATHAM. A bill was reported to this House by the Committee on the Judiciary, and it was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed. I now wish to move to reconsider the vote by which it was so referred. There are doubts of its being taken up now; but I want to have the bill in my control, so as that I can bring it back before the House, and state the nature and character of the bill after it shall have been printed, and that the members of the House shall have had an opportunity of examining it. If the bill continue where it is, the whole provisions of it will become perfectly futile and void, as I will be able to show to the House at the proper time. I therefore, sir, move to reconsider the vote by which it was referred.

THE SPEAKER. The motion will be entered, and will lie over.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman from California, that if his motion to reconsider be entered, the bill will not be printed, and members cannot have an opportunity of seeing it, unless some special act be passed to that effect.

Mr. LATHAM. I think I can state sufficient reasons why the bill should be put upon its passage, if it be passed at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. There can be a special order of the House to the effect that the bill shall be printed; and if it be true, as the gentleman from California states—as I presume it is—that there are substantial reasons for putting it on its passage, it can be done.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. LATHAM. I move that the vote be reconsidered, and that the bill be printed.

Mr. BOCKOCK. The order of the House was that the bill be committed to the Committee of the Whole, and printed. I suggest to the gentleman from California, [Mr. LATHAM,] and to the Speaker, that the gentleman can move to reconsider so much of the action of the House as ordered the bill to be referred, without affecting the order for printing.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the effect of the motion.

THE SPEAKER. The House does not consent. Objection has been made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WALSH,] The order to print has already been made by the House. If it be the wish of the gentleman from California, and the pleasure of the House, the motion to reconsider will be entered, and be considered hereafter without affecting the printing.

Mr. LATHAM. Then I make that motion.

THE SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider the reference will be entered.

BOUNTY LAND BILL.

Mr. HUGHES. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill in reference to bounty lands was passed to-day, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was taken upon the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

SAN FRANCISCO SUFFERERS.

Mr. BISSELL. Is the Chair through with calling reports from committees?

The SPEAKER. For to-day.

Mr. BISSELL. I wish to inquire whether a bill which originated in this House, providing for the relief of the sufferers of the San Francisco, has been returned from the Senate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it has not.

Mr. BISSELL. If I understood the messenger aright, it has been brought in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that it has been returned.

Mr. BISSELL. I ask, by the unanimous consent of the House, that the bill be taken up and considered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is that the first bill upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. JONES. Then I object to its being taken up now.

Mr. BISSELL. Then I move that the House proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is reminded that reports from select committees have not been called.

AARON STAFFORD AND HEZEKIAH JOHNSON.

Mr. HENDRICKS, by the unanimous consent of the House, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, the following bills; which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Aaron Stafford, of the State of New York;" and

"A bill for the relief of Hezekiah Johnson, of the town of Bridgewater, in the State of Vermont."

EXTENSION OF THE PENSION AND BOUNTY LAND LAWS.

Mr. HENDRICKS also, by unanimous consent, reported back from the same committee the following bill; which was read in extenso:

"A bill extending the provisions of the pension and the bounty land laws now in force, so as to include surgeons who served in the Mexican war for a period not less than six months under contract with the commandants of the regiments."

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage. I think if the House would hear a brief statement in regard to the merits of this bill, that they would consent to pass it.

Mr. HAMILTON. I object.

Mr. LANE. I move that it be referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and that it be printed.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill in relation to invalid pensions; which was read the first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTY LANDS.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to report back the following bill, with three amendments:

"A bill to amend the third section of the act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the service of the United States."

The propositions of this bill are perfectly plain, and every gentleman upon this floor can understand them at one reading. I think it is important that the bill and amendments should be adopted. If the House does not desire to send the bill to a Committee of the Whole House, I will ask that it be put upon its passage. I will state to the House in a few words the character of the bill.

The Commissioner of Pensions has decided that a certain class of widows cannot get the bounty land, which was intended to be given them by the law of 1850. The bill, as introduced, was intended to remove that difficulty, and to give the widows of those who served in the war of 1812 their bounty land, and to remove the construction which the Commissioner of Pensions placed upon the law of 1850. That law provides that they should have one hundred and sixty acres of land, if their husbands died in battle. It was clearly the intention of the law to give lands to widows according to the services rendered by their husbands. The Commissioner of Pensions construes that act to mean that the husband must have died in battle to give to the widow a land warrant.

The first amendment which I have reported, is to extend the provisions of the law of September 28, 1850, so as to give those who may have served less than one month bounty land. The bounty land act of 1850 provides that those who enlisted and served for a period of more than one month and less than four months shall have forty acres of land. The first amendment I propose is to change that law so as to give the soldier, the volunteer who entered into service, a bounty land warrant, whether he served one month or less.

The second amendment which I propose to the bill, is to extend the law of 1850, so as to provide that where the soldier has died without leaving any widow or minor children, that his adult children shall receive the bounty land for his services.

I think that right; and that the bill, with the amendments I have reported, should be passed. I hope it may be put upon its passage now. If it goes to the Committee of the Whole House, or to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, its final passage is endangered; but if there is a general desire on the part of the House to send it there, that it may be printed, and more carefully considered, I will not oppose that disposition of it.

Several MEMBERS. Send it there.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before I take my seat I desire that the bill and amendments may be read.

Mr. BISSELL. In the confusion which prevails it is utterly impossible to understand the purport of the bill. I have, however, heard enough to satisfy me that it is a bill of some importance, and should receive mature consideration. I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will hear the bill read before he makes that motion.

The bill and amendments were then read in extenso by the Clerk.

The bill provides that upon the death of an officer, musician, or private, entitled by existing laws to bounty land for his services, but who shall not at the time of his death have received such bounty lands, a warrant for such land shall be issued to his widow, provided that she is unmarried at the date of the application: and provided, further, that if her husband was killed in battle she shall receive one hundred and sixty acres of land.

The first amendment makes a mere verbal alteration.

The second amendment provides that a warrant for such bounty land shall be issued to those entitled to receive it notwithstanding the term of service may have been less than one month.

The third amendment provides that when there shall be no widow or minor children competent to receive such bounty land, the adult children shall be entitled to receive it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The bounty land law of 1847 provides that upon the death of a soldier of the Mexican war entitled to receive such land, it should go first to the widow, then to his children, then to his father and mother, and then to his brothers and sisters.

If the soldier of the war of 1812 be dead, his widow may, under certain circumstances, get the bounty land. Under other circumstances your Commissioner of Pensions has decided that she cannot get it. If he left minor children, they may receive the bounty, but his adult children cannot receive it. Now, my judgment is, that if either class of children should be exclusively provided for upon the death of the father, it should be the adults.

When the soldier of 1812 left his home to serve his country, his children were left to aid in providing for the family. Their services at home enabled the father to go into the camp and field. They are now adults, and by the law of 1850 they cannot receive bounty land for the services of their deceased parent. Now I want to remove this inequality—this injustice—at once, and I do not want to endanger the passage of so just a provision by sending it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The bill does nothing but what I have said; it is plain in its provisions, and the language is not ambiguous.

It extends the law so as to give bounty lands to the adult children of soldiers of the war of 1812 in cases in which those soldiers have left no widows or minor children to take the lands.

The amendments go further, and provide that if a soldier entered the service of the United States and served the country, although it may have been for a less period than one month, he shall receive forty acres of land. That, sir, is right. The man who enlists, who leaves his home and abandons his business, ought to receive bounty land, even though the service may not have been to the extent of one month, the period prescribed in the law of 1850. Sickness may have caused his discharge; the war may have closed, so that he could not longer serve. His home and business have been abandoned, and the camp and field entered. He should receive the bounty of the Government provided for the soldier.

I think, also, that the construction put upon the law of 1850 by the Commissioner of Pensions is not justified by the spirit of the act, though it may be by the language used. The law intended to give land warrants to all widows of soldiers, whether their husbands died in battle or not; and I want to see that construction of the Commissioner removed.

If, however, it is the general desire on the part of the House to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, so be it. I have no feeling about this matter except a desire to see right done. I think these amendments ought to be made, and made at once.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There are, perhaps, some provisions in this bill which it would be right and proper to pass; but there are others which I believe the House will concur with me in thinking ought not to be passed. I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] will himself admit that if one of the amendments he has proposed is right and proper in itself, it is still defective and needs amendment.

The gentleman provides, by one of these amendments, that in case of the death of the soldier, leaving no widow nor minor children, then his adult children shall come in and be entitled to the benefits of the bounty land law. But I ask the gentleman what he proposes to do for the minor children of the child of the dead soldier who have been left fatherless and motherless? If we should extend the benefits of the bounty land law any further to the descendants of the soldier, it should be to his orphan grandchildren in preference to his adult children.

Mr. HENDRICKS, (interposing.) I think the gentleman from Tennessee does not understand the character of the amendment that I have proposed. He asks what would become of minor children and orphans? I reply to him, that the amendment does not give the adult children land warrants if there are any minor children. If there be a widow, she takes the land; if there are minor children, they take it; but if there are neither of these, then the adult children are to have the land.

Mr. JONES. I understand all that perfectly; but the gentleman does not seem to understand the point which I make. In case the soldier leaves no widow nor minor children, but leaves adult children, and some of these adult children have died, leaving children who are the grand-children of the soldier, they are not provided for by the amendment proposed by the gentleman.

One objection to extending the law to the children of soldiers of the war of 1812, which does not apply to the extension of it to the children of soldiers of the war with Mexico, is, that in the war with Mexico, most of those who went into the service were young men, and a very large proportion of them were unmarried; those who were married were young, and their children were young, if they had any. But the war of 1812 took place forty-odd years ago, and the children of the soldiers in that war have, some of them, become old men and old women.

Many of the children have died, and their children, perhaps eight, ten, or twelve in number, are in all probability scattered over as many different States of the Union. You must prove the heirship of every one of them; and when you have made out the entire proof, there will be to divide among those eight, ten, or twelve children, forty acres of land. That amount of land will only pay the agent for the prosecution and securing of the passage of the claim. I cannot see the necessity for that provision of the bill at this time. I doubt not that there are those upon this floor whose fathers were engaged in the war of 1812, and who would, if this bill pass, come in under that amendment. It may be that there are to be divided among eight or ten, some forty, eighty, or one hundred and sixty acres of land. There are various provisions in the bill and amendment, and they require consideration. I move, therefore, that they be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. The objection urged by the gentleman from Tennessee, it seems to me, should not be entitled to great weight in this House. I would place a land warrant, could I do it for military service, in every family in this Union; so that, if unfortunately our country should be again involved in war, when the tocsin sounded there would be a rallying to the call. I have in my possession several applications from the children of deceased soldiers, who became of age after they had made the application, and before the papers were completed. Is there any propriety or justice in excluding those applicants from the benefits of the bounty land law?—and yet they are excluded. It does seem to me, as we have adopted the system of rewarding the soldier, that we should extend this law so as to include all the children of those deceased.

Mr. BISSELL. Because we have adopted the policy of rewarding our soldiers liberally, should we not have any discretion? should there be no limit to our bounties? should we have no discrimination? We shall evince none if we pass this bill. I agree with its friends in one particular, and that is, that if it does not pass now, it never will pass in this House. It is an important bill. It proposes very important alterations in the bounty land law. There is more in it than is at first seen. It substantially, as is remarked by a gentleman near me, makes these bounty lands hereditary, in the form of pensions and otherwise. I insist that the bill shall be printed and laid upon members' desks, in order that, by comparing it with the original act, its bearing, its extent, its effects may be seen. I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] that the bill should be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. As that motion has been already made, I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I understood that the motion which was first made was to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole House. I did not understand that there was any other motion made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] moved that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Yes, sir, inasmuch as it is a general bill.

Mr. ENGLISH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then put on referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having it printed; and it was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was so referred, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, have all the committees been called?

The SPEAKER. Yes, all the committees have been called for reports.

THE ERIE RAILROAD QUESTION.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I desire to call up the resolution introduced some fortnight ago calling for information in relation to the obstructions to the mail, and so forth, at Erie. I wish to call that up.

The SPEAKER. It is the first proposition in order, committees having been called. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested to inform this House what information, if any, has been received in the Post Office Department, in relation to the obstructions to the transportation of the mails of the United States on the route between Buffalo, New York, and Cleveland, Ohio, through the town of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania, and what measures have been taken, if any, by the Executive, to secure the uninterrupted transportation of the mails on said route.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I wish to amend the resolution, Mr. Speaker, by adding a clause, "that he be also requested to furnish copies of such communications as may have been received on this subject." I move that amendment, and on it demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio modify the resolution in this form?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; I modify the resolution, so as to insert a clause of that kind, and I move the previous question.

The Clerk reported the resolution as amended.

Mr. ORR. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Upon that motion I call the yeas and nays.

Mr. HENN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for tellers upon the motion to adjourn.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 83, noes 70.

So the House, at three o'clock and thirty minutes, adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 27, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

POPE'S NUNCIO.

The PRESIDENT. This is the day set apart exclusively for the consideration of private bills. The Chair, however, will ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to present a message from the President of the United States, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 23d instant, calling for a correspondence in relation to a mission from Rome.

On motion by Mr. WELLER, the message was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. CASS. I desire to say a word, with the permission of the Senate, personal to myself, in connection with that matter.

The PRESIDENT. It will require unanimous consent. If there be no objection, the Senator can proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. CASS. I understand this morning that a New York paper—the Express—I may say, too, with that unjust bitterness to a political opponent that seems to make part of its character—has come out with some very strong observations against me, to the effect that I had thrown aspersions upon the character of New York, connected with some expected tumult in relation to the gentleman to whom the President's message relate. Mr. President, it seems to be hardly necessary, yet I will say that I never dreamed of throwing aspersions upon the character of the city of New York. It is a most unjust and iniquitous assertion. All that I said was, that the papers of New York had that morning brought us an account of a considerable assemblage of people who went down to the river, supposing that the Baltic was going to sail, to attempt probably some act of violence on this gentleman. That is all I said, and I am no more responsible for that than for any other report which comes to us in the papers. Whether it was true or false, I did not know, but it came to me under the semblance of truth and authenticity, and I have never heard it contradicted that there was such an assemblage. I have merely risen to acquit myself in this respect.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to ask the Senate to be excused from serving on the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can receive no proposition of a general nature without the unanimous consent of the Senate. The day has been set apart, by a resolution of the Senate, exclusively for the consideration of private bills. If there be no objection, however, the Chair will receive the proposition of the Senator from Mississippi.

No objection being made, the honorable Senator was excused.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask the attention of the Senate to the resolution which has been passed.

The Secretary read the rule, as follows:

Resolved, That, for the residue of the present session, every Friday shall be set apart exclusively for the consideration of private bills on the general orders of the day; and that on the first Friday of every month no such bill shall be taken up to which there may be objection, or the consideration of which may lead to debate."

Mr. HUNTER. I do not know that the rule has been so construed as to include within it the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that the rule provides that the whole day shall be devoted "exclusively" to the objects mentioned.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to ask of the Chair, whether, under the construction given to the rule, it is not in order to make a report of a private bill?

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not think that it was the intention of the Senate to give such a construction to the rule as to require that the whole day shall be set apart for private business. If the rule be construed, however, to mean the contrary, I give notice that I shall move to amend it so that we may have the regular morning business in the first hour.

The PRESIDENT. By the unanimous consent of the Senate the resolution may be so amended.

Mr. BRIGHT. I was going to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate so to amend the rule.

The PRESIDENT. It will be done, if there is no objection.

Mr. BADGER. If it is the general sense of the Senate that that alteration shall be made, I shall interpose no objection. I will only take the opportunity of saying, that if it be done the resolution will fail of the effect intended by it. If we permit the morning business to be taken up, every Senator knows that the object of the rule may be prevented by consuming the whole day in discussing a question in regard to a general matter. Why, we disposed of the whole day a short time ago in discussing a question as to some affront which it was said had been offered, or was about to be offered, to Monseigneur Bedini. If a matter of that kind, or any other collateral affair, comes up for discussion on a Friday morning, the whole day may be consumed in its discussion, and thus the object of the resolution may be lost. I trust it will be inflexibly adhered to.

Mr. BRIGHT. In the case which the honorable Senator from North Carolina cites, a majority of the Senate can control the subject. It is not so when you make a rule, because that becomes imperative. I think the rule should be so amended as to give the Senate the usual morning hour.

The PRESIDENT. It is only a resolution, not a rule.

Mr. BRIGHT. The resolution makes a rule, however.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will suggest to the honorable Senator from Indiana to let us try the working of the resolution as it is construed by the President. If it works badly it may then be amended. I was about to act upon the principle of bringing in business this morning, but I will waive doing so.

Mr. BRIGHT. I was about to do so myself; but if it is the sense of the Senate I am willing to yield.

Mr. WELLER. Do I understand the Chair to decide the question whether it is in order to report from one of the standing committees a private bill?

The PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair that is excluded by the resolution. The resolution provides for the consideration of private bills which are on the Calendar; the making of a report is, therefore, excluded.

THOMAS MARSTON TAYLOR.

The first bill on the Calendar was the bill for the relief of Thomas Marston Taylor, by which it is proposed to authorize the proper accounting officer of the Treasury to allow to him, in the settlement of his accounts as a purser in the United States Navy, for such deficiency as he shall show to exist by reason of his making deposits of Treasury notes in the Phoenix bank, at Charlestown, Massachusetts, subsequent to the month of April, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and also such reasonable and proper expenses as he has actually incurred and paid, in prosecuting any suit brought to enforce the supposed priority of the claims of the United States over other creditors upon the assets of the bank in the hands of trustees.

It appears by the facts of the case, that at the time the deposits were made the bank was in good credit; that it had the full confidence of the citizens of Charlestown and Boston, and that no suspicions were entertained as to its solvency; that it had been selected in 1837 as one of the deposit banks of the Government; that most of the funds delivered to the pursers at that station were Treasury notes, which could not at the time be disposed of for cash without discount and loss to the Government, and which discount the pursers were not permitted to make; that in 1842, and previously to the deposit being made, Purser Joseph Wilson, then also stationed at Charlestown, had made a representation to the Government of the difficulties attending the disposition of the funds intrusted to the pursers at that station, and obtaining permission from the Secretary of the Navy to make an arrangement with the Phoenix Bank for the exchange of Treasury notes, so as to make them available at par; that Purser Taylor was informed of this permission given to Purser Wilson, and of the arrangement made by him in pursuance thereof with the bank; and supposing that the directions of the Secretary were intended for all the pursers at that station intrusted with similar funds, he considered himself authorized to make a similar arrangement with the bank—he having, as he states, no other alternative by which to obtain current funds to discharge the claims against the Government; that at the time of the failure of the bank in October, 1842, which was sudden and unexpected, it having maintained its credit up to the day of its failure, Purser Taylor had, as appears by the certificate of the receivers of the bank, on deposit therein, the sum of $12,523 58, of which he has since received from several dividends of the effects of the bank the sum of $9,392 68, leaving a balance still due of $3,130 90. As the deposits made by him were made and credited in his official character as purser of the United States Navy, he was advised by counsel, after the failure of the bank, that it was a question worthy of judicial investigation whether the Government, as a privileged creditor, under the act of Congress, might not recover the full amount of the claim, and he accordingly applied and obtained permission from the Government to prosecute the claim, in the name of the United States. He employed counsel to bring and conduct the suit; and, after full argument of the case, the court decided that the claim was not within the act of Congress.

Congress granted relief to Purser Wilson under nearly similar circumstances in 1848, and hence the committee reported favorably in this case.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that this is a dangerous precedent. It is proposed that we shall not only insure disbursing officers against the effects of their own improvidence in making deposits, but pay them the expenses of suits which they may institute for the purpose of recovering the money. That surely is a step further than we have ever yet gone.

Mr. FISH. Mr. President, the disbursing officer in this case was acting under the directions of the Navy Department. It was at a time when the credit of the Government was low. The Government was without cash funds, and could only place funds in the hands of its disbursing officers by means of Treasury notes, which were several per centum below par at the time. In order to dispose of those notes, which were drawn in large sums, without a discount, under the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, (Mr. Upshur, I think,) Purser Wilson was authorized to deposit these Treasury notes with this bank, which agreed to allow him the full face of the notes on condition of their deposit with the bank, and the use of the funds which might remain until the whole amount should be withdrawn.

Purser Taylor, at the same station, acting upon the faith of that letter, made the same deposit, and continued it until the very sudden and unexpected failure of this bank. Supposing then that the funds, being Government funds, were entitled to that priority which the Government claims, he, under advice, instituted legal proceedings to test that question. The bill now proposes to pay him, as Congress has already paid Wilson; and, inasmuch as the suit was instituted by the advice of the Department here, to pay his costs in that case. It appears to me to be a very simple and meritorious case.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to ask the Senator from New York if it appears from any of the papers in the case that the money was deposited under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. FISH. It appears clearly that Purser Taylor deposited the money on the faith of the letter written by the Secretary to Wilson. They were together at the same station, both suffering from the same difficulty. Wilson wrote a letter to the Department, and obtained Mr. Upshur's direction to make the deposit. He did so, and Taylor acted under the same authority.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

FRANCIS B. STOCKTON.

The bill for the relief of Francis B. Stockton was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the proper accounting officer to pay to him the sum of $67 57, being the amount of losses sustained by him by reason of his making his deposits of public money in the Phoenix Bank, Charlestown, Massachusetts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received, by Mr. McKean, its Chief Clerk, announcing that the House had passed a bill giving further time for satisfying claims for bounty land, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

CORNELIUS M'CAULLAY.

The bill for the relief of Cornelius McCaullay was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Cornelius McCaullay, of Philadelphia, the sum of $751 13, in full for morocco and other materials furnished by him in the year 1834 to the then Secretary of the Senate, for use in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. HUNTER called for the reading of the report of the Committee on Claims, and it was accordingly read.

It appears from the report that the memorialist was a manufacturer of fine morocco in the city of Philadelphia, in 1834. He was called upon by one Isaac Hozier, representing himself as an agent of Walter Lowrie, then Secretary of the Senate, and requested McCaullay to furnish a certain quantity of morocco for covering the chairs in the Senate. Mr. Hozier exhibited a letter of Mr. Lowrie, authorizing him to make the purchase. Mr. McCaullay accordingly furnished the goods, shipped them to Mr. Lowrie, and when about to draw for the amount, Mr. Hozier again came to Philadelphia with another letter from Mr. Lowrie, and ordered an additional quantity of skins. Before he had completed this order, he suspected fraud in Hozier, and went to Washington, and was there informed by Mr. Lowrie that it was a hard case that he should be wronged out of his just claim, but that the price of the goods had been paid to Mr. Hozier. Under these circumstances, as the goods were furnished for the Senate, and the claimant was defrauded by the fraud of an employee of the Senate, the committee think him entitled to relief.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, it seems to me that, in this case, there is no sort of claim for this amount. The Secretary of the Senate contracted with Mr. Hozier. He paid Hozier all that he ever contracted to pay him; but it seems that Hozier, in dealing with McCaullay, failed to pay him. Are we to follow all these transactions, and see that nobody loses, either directly or indirectly, on account of any connection with Senate contractors? All was done that the Senate could do in the matter. Mr. Hozier, who was the contractor, was paid. Mr. Lowrie, our Secretary, had nothing to do with McCaullay. He was not bound to inquire into the facts of the transaction, or to know from whom Hozier bought the skins, or whatever was furnished. It was enough for him to know that Hozier furnished what he had contracted to furnish, and that he was paid for it. Other persons who dealt with Hozier, any other creditor of Hozier, might as well come here and demand to be paid from the Government. It seems to me that if we go beyond the contracts which we make, and pay persons who are the creditors of our contractors, when they may happen to fail, there will be no end to the demands which will be made upon us.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have a very distinct recollection of this case, for it was before the Senate at the last session of Congress. Mr. Lowrie employed Hozier to do the work at a stipulated price. After employing him, he had nothing further to do than to see that the work was well done and paid for. Hozier employed this gentleman in Philadelphia, but he had no contract with the Secretary of the Senate. The Secretary made a contract for the goods, and they were furnished by the man with whom he contracted for them.

If that be the fact, I can see no obligation, legal or moral, resting upon the Government to pay this individual. It was his duty to look for payment to the person to whom he furnished the goods; for they were not furnished, as I understand, to the Secretary.

The Secretary employed a person to perform a certain contract at a certain price; and that person, in order to fulfill his contract, purchased certain articles from this gentleman in Philadelphia. There was no contract between the Secretary of the Senate and the person who furnished the articles, and hence I can see no obligation, either legal or moral, on the part of the Government, to foot the bill.

This question was thoroughly examined before the Senate, on a similar report, at the last session, and the case, if I recollect aright, was then decided in the negative. I am therefore surprised to see it renewed at this session. It seems to me that when the facts are understood, there can be no doubt in the minds of Senators that the claim is not well founded, and ought not to receive the sanction of this body.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I think my friend from Alabama is somewhat mistaken in saying that the case was thoroughly examined before the Senate at the last session. It came up for consideration, but a single objection threw it over.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The identical objection which is now raised was then made—that the contract was with a third party.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I admit there was an objection, but I do not think that it is a fact that the case was so thoroughly examined or discussed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It may be that it was not thoroughly discussed, but we reached this point; and if my recollection is correct, the gentleman who pressed the claim, became perfectly satisfied that it had no merits, and it was withdrawn from consideration.

Mr. BRODHEAD. That is not my recollection, and I had the bill in charge.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It so struck me.

Mr. BRODHEAD. My recollection of the case is this: It was presented to the Senate by a memorial, which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and a favorable report was made from that committee by the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE.] The bill came up at the last session on objection day, as it is called, and a single objection put it over; but it was not discussed, and I think the records will attest the truth of my remarks. The case, therefore, now comes up for the first time, for a thorough examination in the Senate. I am one of those who think it is a proper claim.

This man Hozier was one of the employees of this body. He practiced a fraud upon Mr. McCaullay, in Philadelphia. The then Secretary of the Senate says so. Are we to employ men to go about the country and obtain goods for us by fraudulent means and by false pretenses? When we have used the goods, is there no moral obligation on the part of this body or of the Government to pay this man for them, who has been confessedly defrauded by one of the employees of this body? The Secretary of the Senate says this claimant was the only manufacturer of these goods to be found at that time in the country. Mr. Hozier went to him with a letter from Mr. Lowrie, the then Secretary, who was the accredited agent of this body. He obtained these goods, and they were sent, not to Hozier, but to the Secretary of the Senate. The Secretary received them, and appropriated them to the use of this body. Now, is there no moral obligation on our part to pay for them? It is admitted that the claimant has never been paid. Why should he not be paid?

Sir, there was gross negligence, if there was negligence anywhere, on the part of the then Secretary of the Senate, and he admits it. He admits that there was a fraud practiced by Hozier upon McCaullay. Mr. McCaullay acted under the belief—a belief inspired by the letter which Hozier had from the then Secretary—that he was selling these goods to the Secretary of the Senate, for the use of the Senate, and not to Hozier. I have a right to say so, because he shipped them to the Secretary. And hence it seems to me there is a moral obligation on the part of the Senate to pay for them. This man, it is true, claims interest, but that the committee have refused to allow. I think, however, it is nothing more than just, under the circumstances, that the principal sum should be paid.

Mr. BADGER. Were the committee unanimous in their report?

Mr. BRODHEAD. There was one exception, I believe.

Mr. CHASE. I do not know of any exception.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I am obliged to the Senator from Ohio for the correction. The committee were unanimous at this session, but at the last session I believe there was one dissenting voice. I have stated the case in brief. The question is, whether this body will take advantage of the fraud of one of its own employees. For my part, I do not feel disposed to do so, and I hope the Senate will agree with me.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, if I understand the facts, Hozier was no otherwise an employee of the Senate than any other person who contracts to furnish materials. Any person who is a contractor for the Government—for instance, the contractor for furnishing bricks on the Capitol extension—is as much an employee of the Government as Hozier was of the Senate. Mr. Lowrie was Secretary of the Senate, and he employed Hozier to do this work. In order to do it, the latter contracted with this man in Philadelphia, who should have looked to Hozier for payment. Mr. Lowrie was not responsible to McCaullay, but to Hozier, with whom he made the contract. When he furnished the materials which he had contracted to furnish, Mr. Lowrie was bound to pay him, without inquiring whether he had paid his debts which he had contracted elsewhere or not.

But what is the evidence? There is no evidence in the case, as I understand, but that of the claimant himself. I presume that if there were any contract, it would appear somewhere upon the books kept by the Secretary of the Senate. I should think that some evidence of the contract could be found. If it should be found, by reference to the books, that the contract was made with Hozier to furnish materials, it is surely no concern of ours where he bought them, or whether or not he paid the persons from whom he bought them. All that concerns us is to know whether we paid the man from whom we engaged the materials. If we did, as it seems that we did, then all has been done which we were bound to do. There is no obligation, as the Senator from Alabama has well said, either legally or morally, to pay this third person, with whom we had nothing to do.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Perhaps I made too broad a statement when I said that this claim was thoroughly investigated by the Senate during the last session. I know that I never heard of the case until the last session. I did not know before that there was such a claim in existence; and my knowledge of it was derived from what occurred in the Senate at that time. It was backed then by a favorable report from the Committee on Claims, and hence favorably commended itself to me. But there were some exceptions to the payment of the money, and the claim underwent more or less investigation—sufficient, certainly, to impress on my mind a strong conviction that it should not be allowed; and I was certain, when this case came up this morning, that it was the same one which had been under consideration at the last session.

Although I may not be strictly accurate in stating all the facts, I am perfectly sure that the case was investigated at sufficient length to satisfy the Senate that the claim was not well founded, and that the Government was not legally bound to pay it. I will not undertake to say that I understand the case in all its ramifications; but, according to my recollection of the facts as detailed then, and as stated in the report now, my impression is, that we reached at the last session the very point which is now made, that the contract was with a third party, and the Government was not responsible for the amount; and on that ground objection was then made, and the case was postponed.

Now, sir, just look for a moment at the consequences to which the allowance of this claim will lead. Suppose a mail contractor on one of the great routes North or South should employ a stage driver, or any other person, to carry the mails for him; that the Government pays the contractor; but he becomes insolvent, and refuses to pay his stage driver, or any other individual in his employ: will gentlemen undertake to say that the Government of the United States is bound to pay the stage driver and other persons having such claims. Sir, for my life I cannot see the difference between that and the case under consideration. As the gentleman from Virginia has said, there is not a contractor who may not be considered in the same light as this individual, if he be regarded as an employee of the Government.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand that Hozier was an upholsterer in this city, not an officer of the Senate.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. He was the person who got the contract here; and to execute his contract he sent to Philadelphia, and agreed with a gentleman there for certain materials. That gentleman has lost his money. That I regret; but if the Senate pays a claim of this kind, we shall be opening a very broad door for applications to this body and to Congress for claims which, if allowed, will bankrupt the Treasury. I know nothing of the case but from my recollection of it as it was discussed at the last session, and from hearing the report now. Recollecting it as I did, I made the broad statement that it had been thoroughly investigated. It may not have been fully discussed, but I know it was examined into, and the point now under consideration was made, and on that point the case was withdrawn, if I understood it correctly; and I did not presume that it would ever be brought back into this body, because I thought it seemed to be the general impression of the Senate that the claim was not a well founded one.

Mr. WELLER. This bill ought not to pass, for this claim ought not to be allowed. It seems to me to be such a flagrant case that no one can contend that there is any justice in it. It appears that certain articles were wanted for the convenience of the Senate. The Secretary went, as he very naturally would, to an upholsterer in this city, and contracted with him to furnish those articles. The Secretary obtained them from the upholsterer, and paid for them; but it now turns out that the upholsterer cheated the merchant in Philadelphia from whom he obtained the articles. That is the case. Are we bound to make good the deficiency of the upholsterer? We directed the Secretary to obtain the articles, and he paid for them. If the upholsterer from whom he obtained them cheated the merchant from whom he purchased, there is no legal or moral obligation resting upon us to pay him. It seems to me there is no room for discussion in this case.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I desire merely to say that I cannot of course have any knowledge whether this claim is well founded or not; but it is sufficient for me to know that it is reported as a good claim, unanimously, by a standing committee of this body. Therefore I, for one, conscious of my inability here to reexamine the decision of that committee upon this private claim, believing that the committees are instituted for the express purpose of making these investigations upon private claims, because they can do it much more satisfactorily, and have a much better opportunity of arriving at a just result, shall vote, as I habitually do, in support of the unanimous report of the committee. But I will certainly do it, when, upon the statement made by my friend from Pennsylvania, it appears that, so far from this being a clear case against the claim, there is at all events a prima facie case in favor of the claimant. This is not the case of a contractor with the Senate going and purchasing articles for the purpose of carrying out his contract, and then failing to pay the seller. The contractor went with a letter from the Secretary of the Senate to the person who furnished the articles to him.

Mr. HUNTER. I shall be very glad if the Senator from North Carolina will produce that letter.

Mr. BADGER. If the honorable Senator from Virginia had attended to what I said, he would have seen that he must apply to the gentleman who reported this bill. I say this is the statement which he makes. I do not call upon him to show the letter. I do not call his veracity in question about the fact. He reports this bill, and states to me that these are the facts.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not call the veracity of any one in question; but I am not aware that there is any such statement.

Mr. BADGER. That is what the Senator from Pennsylvania stated just now. I am not speaking of the report, I am speaking of the verbal explanation given of the bill by the Senator from Pennsylvania. If I understand him correctly, that is what he stated.

Mr. BRODHEAD. What I stated was this: At the last session this bill was reported by the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] who was specially instructed to examine the case. In his report I find this language:

"In 1834, he was called upon by one Isaac Hozier, representing himself, and believed to be, an agent of Walter Lowrie, Esq., then Secretary of the United States Senate, who requested him to furnish a certain quantity of morocco, to be used for covering the chairs in the Senate Chamber. He says a Mr. Hozier exhibited a letter of Mr. Lowrie, authorizing him to make the purchase, and stated that he could draw on Mr. Lowrie for the amount."

That is the statement of the memorialist, as given in the report of the honorable Senator from Ohio. The memorialist deposed to the truth of the facts set forth in his memorial, and other testimony is introduced in order to show that Mr. Lowrie was in the habit of authorizing the upholsterer to make purchases of materials as his agent. Mr. McCaullay produced several original letters of J. K. Boyd, who succeeded Mr. Hozier in doing the upholstery for the Senate Chamber, in which Mr. Boyd distinctly claims to act under the instructions of Mr. Lowrie, Secretary of the Senate. Mr. McCaullay brings these letters in corroboration of the statement that this man brought a letter to him, and was not a mere contractor. If he had been a mere contractor, the articles would have been sent by Mr. McCaullay to him, and not to the Secretary of the Senate, to whom they were in fact sent.

Mr. BADGER. Do the committee report that they are satisfied the statement made by the petitioner is correct?

Mr. BRODHEAD. They do.

Mr. BADGER. Then it is just as I stated. I have got no letters to produce; I am urging no claim; I am acting as a member of the Senate on the report of a committee.

The case was referred to the committee to examine the evidence, and to report whether the evidence supports the claim and the facts in the petition. They say it does. I shall not undertake to reexamine what they have reported. If what they have reported be true, so far from this being a baseless claim, I think it is a palpable and just claim on the honor of the Government. It seems that this man, who was authorized to contract for this work, came with a letter from the Secretary of the Senate to the manufacturer, to purchase articles for the benefit of the Senate. The seller of the articles sold them, and they were sent to the Secretary, and were used by him for the benefit of the Senate. Is it right for him, then, to turn round and say to the party, "This man, who carried the letter was the man with whom I have made a contract, and you must look to him for your money?" It seems to me that this is a plain case, calling for relief.

Mr. WALKER. There seems to me to be some confusion of ideas here in regard to the facts presented, or the source whence the information or testimony comes. The Senator from Pennsylvania has read the first part of the report. I will read it again:

"The memorialist states that he was a manufacturer of fine morocco in the city of Philadelphia."

Bear in mind this is the statement of the memorialist.

"In 1834 he was called upon by one Isaac Hozier, representing himself, and believed to be, an agent of Walter Lowrie, Esquire, then Secretary of the United States Senate, who requested him to furnish a certain quantity of morocco, to be used for covering the chairs in the Senate Chamber. He says Mr. Hozier exhibited a letter of Mr. Lowrie"—[this is what the claimant says Hozier did]—"authorizing him to make the purchase, and stated that he could draw on Mr. Lowrie for the amount."

The first peculiarity is that he did not draw on Mr. Lowrie for the amount. But now, after having got at the source of the testimony and the testimony itself, bearing in mind where it comes from, that it is based on the representations of a man who turns out to be fraudulent, and of the claimant himself, let us come to the testimony of Mr. Lowrie, for he, in plain terms, contradicts the whole statement. The committee give his statement in these words:

"Mr. Lowrie states that he engaged Hozier to furnish the morocco, and paid him for it; that shortly afterwards, Mr. McCaullay called, and produced satisfactory evidence that he was an industrious and worthy man; that he had furnished the materials, and had not been paid for them, Mr. Lowrie adds: 'He was, perhaps, the only manufacturer but that it was not then within his power to afford relief, in the United States at that time who could make the article required; and, after much labor, the efforts of his skill and industry were taken from him by the fraud of another.' This statement is dated January 23, 1850."

Now, when we come to arrive at the fact whether there was privity of contract between the Senate and Mr. McCaullay, we must refer to the only one who can give correct testimony on the subject, and that is Mr. Lowrie. He denies in express terms that there was any privity of contract. He expressly says that he contracted with Hozier for the delivery of the morocco, and that he paid Hozier for it.

Mr. Lowrie, from the expressions which he uses, evidently regrets, as all must do, that Mr. McCaullay did not receive the money; but can we come forward and undertake to be guarantors or insurers for every individual who may perpetrate such a fraud? I regret exceedingly the vote which I shall have to give on this subject, but I do conscientiously believe that this bill involves a precedent which it would be very dangerous to establish. I know of so many cases of equal hardship that I cannot see how it can be possible for the Senate to stop here if they take this step.

Mr. BADGER. If there is any confusion of ideas upon the subject of this case, I have not fallen into them; and my friend from Wisconsin has not met the ground upon which I say the prima facie case is made by the report, independently, too, of the weight that I attributed to the opinion of the committee. He says that this is, in fact, the case of a contract made by the Secretary of the Senate with Hozier; that the purchase was in fact one made by Hozier to enable him to carry out the contract. There is no doubt, no question, about that at all, because if it had not been so, it would have been impossible for any man in the world to say that the claimant is not entitled to relief. But the ground upon which the committee place the bill, as I understand from their report, and from the verbal statement of the honorable Senator who reported it, is this: that Hozier came to the claimant with a letter from Mr. Lowrie to him, [Hozier,] in which it was stated that he was authorized to make the purchase, and that he might draw upon Mr. Lowrie, the Secretary, for the money. It was an act of imprudence on the part of Mr. Lowrie to give such a letter. It was calculated to mislead, and did mislead, the man who furnished the articles, and who supposed that he was furnishing them to the Senate, that Hozier was a person acting for the Senate, and that he was to be paid by the Senate. Now, as I mentioned, the only matter upon which any doubt can be raised is, is this statement true? The committee say they have looked into the evidence brought to support it, and that it is true. I am not going behind that report. If I cannot have sufficient respect for the unanimous report of a committee of this body, who say they have ascertained that fact correctly, I think it is idle to come here.

Mr. CHASE. My colleague, who is upon the Committee on Claims, reported this bill last year. It has undergone the careful revision of the Committee on Claims this year, and the committee are unanimously in favor of it. I am very glad to see the care and determination with which the Senators from Alabama [Mr. FITZPATRICK] and Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] guard the Treasury. It is very highly commendable in them. But I do not think that this case will form such a precedent as they seem to be of the opinion it will.

We rest the case upon this simple ground, that Mr. Hozier bore a letter from the Secretary of the Senate to this mechanic in Philadelphia, and upon the strength of that letter obtained the goods. It is true the letter is not in existence, but the statement in respect to the representations made by Mr. Hozier to this mechanic, which appeared before the committee, satisfied them of its existence once, and they so reported to the Senate. When the goods were actually applied to the use of the Senate, this individual came here and asked for their payment. He was then told that Hozier had absconded, and he could not be paid. But the Secretary went on and used the goods for the very chairs on which we sit, and now the mechanic asks for the payment of his bill. I think he ought to be paid. I do not think it will form any dangerous precedent.

I trust the Senate will act upon it without further discussion; for the value of the time which we are consuming in the debate is more than the whole amount of the appropriation.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from North Carolina says, if I understand him, that we should not go behind the report of a committee; that we ought to take it as conclusive.

Mr. BADGER. I did not say anybody was bound to do so. I simply said I would do it.

Mr. HUNTER. If it be a good rule for the Senator from North Carolina, it is certainly good for the rest of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. I think it is a good rule. Other gentlemen may differ from me.

Mr. HUNTER. A rule is either good or bad. If this rule is good for the Senator from North Carolina, it is good for the rest of the Senate; and I say if that be the case, it is useless to consider bills reported from a committee at all. We had better pass them all in a lump. But the Senator from North Carolina carries this doctrine a little further than I have ever heard it carried before. We are not only, according to him, to take up the conclusion, and vote for the bills reported by committees, but we are to be governed by no other reasons; and although they may show us that a bill was reported without evidence, or upon principles which we may deem improper, we are not to consider those principles or examine that evidence, because he says he will not go behind the report; and he will not only not go behind it, but he will not enter into it. Sir, in this case it is evident that he has not read the report. First he got up and based the case upon this letter, and it turns out that the letter is not in existence. What evidence have we that any such letter ever existed? None at all but the oath and statement of the man who makes the claim.

Mr. BRODHEAD. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, he is mistaken. In the report of the committee he will find the following:

"William Root swears that he was the salesman of McCaullay at the time, and has continued to be so; that Hozier represented himself as acting for Mr. Lowrie, Secretary of the Senate, and by such representation obtained the goods."

There is also other testimony quoted in the report to the same effect.

Mr. HUNTER. That Hozier so represents himself, but not that they saw the letter. If there had been any letter authorizing Hozier to buy for the Secretary of the Senate, is it to be supposed that this man would have slept on his claim so long? That would have been a sufficient voucher. He had nothing to do but to produce it. Take the testimony as it is given here, that this man was deceived—probably he was—and that Hozier deceived him; but did Hozier deceive that man on account of any fault of the Senate or of the Secretary of the Senate? And is the Senate bound to foot the bill? Surely not. The only testimony, or at least the main testimony, then, which we have, and upon which we are called to act, is the affidavit of the claimant himself. Will the Senator from North Carolina say that he does not choose to consider whether it is proper to rely upon the testimony which the claimant may bring in his own case? Surely we ought to require something like proof of the facts before we undertake to act upon them. And, sir, how does he undertake to help it out? Not by proving that Mr. Lowrie was in the habit of authorizing Hozier to purchase for him and for the Senate, but that he was in the habit of authorizing another man, Mr. Boyd, to purchase for himself and for the Senate. That is the sort of proof upon which we are called to act. Does any man believe if Mr. Lowrie had given Hozier a letter by which he was authorized to purchase these materials for the Senate, a letter which Hozier could have exhibited in Philadelphia, that this man would not have come forward when the facts were fresh, and the loss recent, and applied to be paid? Sir, if he had done so he would have been paid. The letter would have been sufficient ground upon which to have rested the claim; but nothing of the sort appears here now—nothing at least sufficiently proved; and now, years after the transaction, when Mr. Lowrie, I suppose, is dead—when there is nobody here to make known to us the real state of the facts—the case is brought forward, and it is proposed that we shall pay upon such a statement as this.

Mr. BADGER. My friend from Virginia seems to have become quite animated on this subject. He is very right in doing so. He is at the head of the Committee on Finance, and, as such, holds for this body the keys of the Treasury. He says that I have not read the report, and that I first began by referring to the letter. I endeavored to explain to the Senator, if he had listened to me, that I was not speaking about the report, but about the verbal statement made by the Senator who reported the bill. That is what I said, and how does he answer it? He says that the letter is not produced. He says that I hold the doctrine that if the committee were to make a report which, upon its face, shows no just claim, I would go for it. I have not said so; but I said this, and I repeat it: I have always abided by, and always will abide by, the conclusion of a committee when they make a report of an existing state of facts, they having had the evidence and come to the conclusions to which they supposed the evidence justified them in coming. When that is the case, I will not undertake to be wiser than the committee in coming to a conclusion. That is what I said, and I repeat it.

But I said, further, that in this case, according to the statement of the honorable Senator, there was a prima facie case. The Senator from Virginia says that if there was a letter, it would have been produced. Sir, we do not know that. There have been many letters in the world which cannot be produced. This man says he had a letter. The fact is proved by persons who were employed by him in his business, that Hozier applied to him, and represented himself to be an agent of Mr. Lowrie, the Secretary of the Senate; and the committee, upon the whole, were of the opinion that, putting the circumstances together, it was a fair and reasonable conclusion that the statement that there was such a letter was true; and is it not? I ask you, sir, is not that a reasonable conclusion? Hozier goes to the claimant for the purpose of purchasing the articles for the Senate. It was natural that he should take a letter; it was proper that he should take a letter; it was reasonable that he should take a letter; it was reasonable that the person to whom he applied would expect him to produce some evidence if he sustained that relation to the Secretary of the Senate; and what it is reasonable to presume he would have done, upon the facts proved that he represented himself to be the agent of the Secretary of the Senate, the claimant says he did; and Mr. Lowrie does not deny it. Mr. Lowrie says, in point of fact, that Hozier was a contractor; but he does not say that he did not authorize him to apply to the claimant. He does not say that he did not give him a letter to apply to him. He says not one word to contradict the statement which the committee say they infer to be true from the collateral circumstances in addition to the statement of the claimant. That is the case.

Now, the honorable gentleman from Virginia will, of course, govern himself by what rule he pleases. He may deny and dispute the report of every committee upon every claim, small or great. He stands here to discharge his high duty upon his own responsibility. I do not pretend to dictate to him. I have no right to do so. I will, however, pursue the course that I have suggested. I will have sufficient respect for the intelligence and known integrity of the gentlemen composing the Committee on Claims, who say that on sitting down quietly in their room, they have examined the testimony in the case, and think certain facts are borne out. I do not require the evidence in this case to be sufficient to convict a man upon a capital offense. I shall be content upon my own responsibility, while I neither dictate nor advise any other man to pursue the same course, to vote for the claim as the committee have reported it.

Mr. WALKER. It does seem to me to be strange that the honorable Senator from North Carolina should look at this case in the way he does. Not only is it asserted here that Hozier was a fraudulent man; not only is it the fact that he is now suspected and now asserted, but Mr. McCaullay says himself that, before the execution of the order, he suspected him. According to the report of the committee—

"He says, a Mr. Hozier exhibited a letter of Mr. Lowrie, authorizing him to make the purchase, and stated that he could draw on Mr. Lowrie for the amount."

Take the statement up to that point; and if he had contracted with the Secretary of the Senate through Hozier, as his agent, when he had furnished his materials, would it not have been a natural business transaction to call on Mr. Hozier for a draft on Mr. Lowrie to get the money? Certainly. Was any draft drawn? No. Why was it not? Here is the explanation, as again stated in the report of the committee:

"He accordingly furnished the goods, and shipped them to Mr. Lowrie. When he was about to draw for the amount—"

Note this:

"Mr. Hozier again came to Philadelphia with another letter from Mr. Lowrie, and ordered an additional quantity of skins."

Now, recollect this is the statement of McCaullay.

"Before he had completed this order, he suspected fraud in Hozier, and went to Washington to get his pay."

He did not call upon Mr. Hozier for the draft; but suspecting him, before the order was executed, came on to Washington.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. Hozier was not to make the draft.

Mr. WALKER. Yes, sir, that is McCaullay's own statement. The report continues:

"When he was informed by Mr. Lowrie 'that it was a hard case that he should be wronged out of his just claim,' or words to that effect; but that the price of the goods had already been paid Mr. Hozier, who had disappeared."

This same person calls in witnesses to prove his statement, and it seems we are to found our actions upon that statement and the depositions of witnesses, who would probably state the facts as strong as possible in favor of Mr. McCaullay. Mr. Lowrie says he engaged Mr. Hozier to furnish the morocco, and paid him. Under such circumstances it is astonishing to me that we should be called upon to make good the loss of Mr. McCaullay.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD called for the yeas and nays on the question of ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Brodhead, Chase, Everett, Fish, Foot, Pott, Seward, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, and Wright—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Benjamin, Brown, Cass, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Hamlin, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Slidell, Stuart, Toombs, Walker, and Weller—21.

MARY E. D. BLANEY.

The next bill considered as in Committee of the Whole was the bill for the relief of Mary E. D. Blaney, widow of the late Major George Blaney.

The bill authorizes the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to Mary E. D. Blaney, widow and administratrix of the late George Blaney, the sum of one thousand one hundred and fifty-six dollars and sixty-eight cents, being for interest on money belonging to her, and withheld by an erroneous decision of officers of the Government.

Major Blaney was an officer of the corps of United States topographical engineers, and for several years previously to his death, in 1835, he was employed in superintending the erection of the fortifications at Oak Island and Cape Fear river, in North Carolina, and was required to act as disbursing officer, and as assistant commissary of subsistence at those points, for which he claimed commissions and compensation to the amount of $6,401 48, which was disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury. It appears that at the time of his death, he had on deposit in the bank of Fayetteville, North Carolina, to his credit, $3,182 55, of which amount $2,438 12 was claimed as his private funds, and for which he gave a check to the petitioner. On presentation of the check, payment was declined until the Department had been consulted. The acting Secretary of War directed that the money in the bank, standing to the credit of Major Blaney, should be carried to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, which was accordingly done.

After the decision in the parallel case of Major Delafield, in 1844, where the legality of similar charges was brought before the circuit court for the district of New York, and sustained by Judge Betts, (which decision was confirmed by an equal division of the bench of the Supreme Court,) the charges of Major Blaney were allowed by the accounting officers, so as to leave a balance to his credit of $1,606 50, which sum was paid to the petitioner on the 15th March, 1847. On this sum, so withheld for a period of nearly twelve years, interest, amounting to $1,156 68, is claimed.

The petitioner urges, "in behalf of herself and her orphan children," that her case is not the ordinary one of a debt due by the United States for services performed, but one in which money belonging to her was forcibly taken by a high officer of the Government and applied to the public use, and "wrongfully and illegally withheld from her" for a long period of time.

The petitioner also prays the passage of a law directing that such further allowances be made in the accounts of her late husband, as come within the rule laid down in the decision of the Delafield case. These appear to consist of charges for additional compensation for services as assistant commissary of subsistence at Oak Island and Cape Fear river, at $20 per month, amounting to $2,744, and a difference of $210 45 between the sum claimed and that allowed for disbursements at Cape Fear river.

As these items have been rejected by the accounting officers, after a careful revision of the subject, subsequently to the decisions in the cases of Major Delafield and General Gratiot, and have decided that "the duty [of acting assistant commissary of subsistence, for which the charges are made] constituted an essential branch of the extra service assigned him, for a faithful performance of which, on his part, the regulations provided a specific compensation, in the form of a per diem or commission," the committee did not perceive any good grounds for a special allowance in this case, so far as the extra compensation is concerned; but they were of opinion that, under the circumstances of this case, the claimant is entitled to interest on the amount withheld by the Government.

No amendment being offered, the bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

DANIEL WINSLOW.

The Senate next considered as in Committee of the Whole, the bill for the relief of the sureties of Daniel Winslow. It proposes to release Daniel Winslow and James N. Winslow, and their legal representatives, and the real and personal property of each, from all judgments, and from all liens and incumbrances of judgments in favor of the United States, obtained against them in any district court of the United States, as security for Daniel Winslow: the costs of the suits, however, are to be first paid by the Winslows.

On the 29th September, 1846, Daniel Winslow as principal, and the only party in interest, and David Winslow and James N. Winslow as sureties, entered into contract with the Chief of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing to deliver at the navy-yard in Charlestown, Massachusetts, eighteen hundred barrels of navy beef, between the 1st of January and the 15th of June, 1847, at the price of $7 87½ per barrel.

The regular business of Daniel Winslow and of his father had been that of packing beef for forty years; and, upon an average price of navy beef for twenty-five years next preceding the year 1846, the contract would have afforded a moderate profit only. Daniel Winslow entered into the contract as a part of his regular business, and not on a speculation. In November, 1845, the year preceding the contract, he was able to pack beef at $7 per barrel, but soon after the execution of the contract, in the fall of 1846, prices began to rise, and in October, of that year, beef was worth $8 to $8 25 per barrel; in December, from $11 to $12 per barrel; and in January and February, 1847, it went up to $13 50, and soon after to $14 and $15 per barrel. It is stated that this rapid and unusual advancement of prices was induced by the progress of the Mexican war, and the occurrence of the famine in Ireland, which produced an extraordinary and unlooked for demand for provisions for exportation.

It further appears that Mr. Winslow, with the view of fulfilling his contract, whatever might be the consequences to himself, continued to purchase all the cattle he could obtain, until the actual cost of the beef reached $12 per barrel, making a loss to the contractor of $4 12½ upon each barrel, or about thirty-three per cent. He had not the capital required to enable him to overcome these difficulties; and, after having furnished about three hundred and fifty barrels, he failed, and became hopelessly insolvent. In furnishing the residue of the beef embraced in the contract, the United States paid $8,061 75 more than the contract price—having paid from $12 94 to $14 50 per barrel: and for that sum, with costs and interest, judgments have been rendered, by consent of parties, to satisfy which the entire property of the aged father of the contractor, consisting of a small homestead farm, has been set off to the United States. The object of the petition is to relieve this property of the surety, and avoid the necessity of turning an aged and venerable family, chargeable with no fault, houseless and penniless upon the world.

Believing this to be a case of unusual hardship, the committee are anxious to afford relief, if it can be done upon safe and equitable principles.

In cases of contracts like the present, the committee thought the following rules might be safely observed: 1st. Where the contractor enters into the contract in good faith, with a reasonable assurance, founded on competent knowledge of past and present prices of the article contracted to be furnished, that the contract can be performed by him in strict accordance with its terms; and, 2d. Where the rise in prices is such as could not have been foreseen or anticipated by prudent persons acquainted with the business; and, 3d. Where the contractor performs his contract in good faith, and with due skill, energy, and diligence, to the extent of his means and ability, that then an equitable case arises for relief.

In this case the Government suffered no other loss than the failure to realize the entire profits of a good bargain. The beef which the contractor failed to supply was purchased at its fair market value. The Government paid no more than individuals were paying at the time for the same article; and the contractor not only did not make a profit on the quantity furnished by him, but, on the contrary, he lost not merely his time and trouble, but a large amount of money, by which he was rendered insolvent. He appears to have used every effort in his power faithfully to fulfill his contract, and was prevented by circumstances wholly beyond his control, and which could not have been foreseen. He does not, however, ask to be remunerated for his losses; but that his sureties, to whom no fault can be attributed, shall be saved from utter ruin, after he has sacrificed his entire property, and from which the Government has derived a benefit.

Relief was granted by Congress to the sureties of Peter Yarnell, in 1844, under similar circumstances.

Mr. WALKER. I am not opposed to the bill; but I have an amendment which I desire to offer to it, and which I think ought to be adopted. It is to add the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the provisions of this act shall also apply to the benefit of Sylvester Pettibone, of Wisconsin.

The case thus designed to be provided for by the amendment is of this kind. This old gentleman, Mr. Pettibone, is a resident of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. About the time of the difficulty spoken of in the bill, his nephew was arrested for passing counterfeit coin of the United States. The facts of the case, which are all within my knowledge, in relation to the passage of the money, are these: Certain counterfeit quarter eagles had got into circulation; suspicion fell upon the nephew of Mr. Pettibone. He was arrested; and it was proved that one of those pieces—one quarter eagle—had been passed by him. Under the state of alarm in which the young man was found, he called upon his uncle, Sylvester Pettibone, to become his bail. Without any hesitation, and really without much consideration, the old gentleman became the bail.

Now comes something most mysterious in the case. The nephew has disappeared; he has gone to some place unknown to the old gentleman. He has not been heard of, so far as I have any knowledge, within the city where he then lived, from that day to this. Every inquiry, every exertion has been made to produce him, but all has been a failure. The old man does not to the present moment know where he is. The bail bond of this young man with the old gentleman named in the amendment was sued upon by the United States, and judgment was obtained against him as surety to the amount of something over $3,000. He lives in the immediate vicinity of Milwaukee, and has about seventeen acres of land upon which his dwelling is situated. It is all the property he has in the world. His contiguity to the city, however, makes it valuable; and at the sale under the execution upon the judgment of the United States, it was bid off at the amount of the judgment and costs. The time for redemption under our statute has expired, and it leaves this old man, who is now something like seventy-two years of age, without the first farthing on the face of the earth for the support of himself and a numerous family. He has made application to the Treasury Department for a stay in the matter, asking its indulgence for a little while longer in order that the subject may be brought to the attention of Congress, and that it may be ascertained whether they will not relieve him. The Treasury Department has postponed taking a deed for the property, though the equity of redemption has expired, with the view of seeing whether Congress will not do something for his relief. The officers have also, as I am informed, directed that the property shall not be disposed of in the mean time by the United States district attorney, or any other authority.

So the matter lies awaiting the action of Congress upon the subject, if Congress is disposed to take any action in the premises. The amendment, however, proposes more than the old gentleman asks for. He has said to me, as one of his representatives, that if Congress, or the Government, will let him off by paying the costs and five hundred dollars, he is willing to do it. All the injury which the Government has sustained was the passage of one quarter eagle by the nephew of the old gentleman. He has lived a long life of industry. He is a temperate, worthy man. He is somewhat incapable of attending to his own rights; and I have thought when this bill was pending, that I would ask the indulgence of the Senate to consider this proposition.

Now, if it is deemed proper by the Senate to hold this old gentleman for some part of the amount, I am willing to put a provision in the amendment that he may be relieved by paying costs and $500, as he proposes; but at present the amendment stands as an entire acquittance to him under the provisions of the bill to which it is offered. It merely provides that he shall pay the costs. I believe they now amount to something over $300. If he deserves punishment, that will be a sufficient punishment. If the Government seeks pecuniary advantage from the transaction, he is willing to pay $500 and the costs. I will, however, hear what may be said by others. If it is desirable, I will change the amendment so as to require the payment of $500.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will inquire of the Chair whether the amendment is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state, in reply to the Senator, that when the amendment was offered he was under the impression that it was not in order, and referred to the rules of the Senate to see if the principles of parliamentary law were modified. The experience of the present occupant of the chair, as the Senate is aware, is but little. His impression, however, is, that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. WALKER. If it is decided to be out of order, of course it is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion by Mr. BRIGHT, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

HODGES AND LANSDALE.

The bill for the relief of Hodges & Lansdale, and the legal representatives of Rinaldo Johnson and Ann E. Johnson, deceased, was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRIGHT. There are several cases of that class. The Senator from Maryland, who has them in charge, is absent; and so is the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], who is opposed to them, and who is prepared to make an argument against them. At the request of the latter gentleman, I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

BOUTON, WRIGHT, AND FISHER.

The bill for the relief of Richard M. Bouton, George Wright, and the widow of Marvin W. Fisher, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to each of the parties $5,000, as full compensation for the past use of their machine for making and charging percussion caps in the arsenals of the United States, and also for the full, free, and undisturbed use by the Government of the machine, together with the patent right or rights to the machines or improvements.

On the introduction of percussion caps into our military service a few years ago, the country was entirely dependent upon caps of foreign manufacture. Mr. Richard M. Bouton, in January, 1842, at the request of the commanding officer at Watervliet arsenal, New York, applied himself to the study of their manufacture, and after several years, constructed and put in operation a machine. Since 1845 it has been in successful operation in that arsenal and the arsenal of the navy-yard in this city. It has greatly decreased the price of caps and the time necessary to make them. The Committee on Military Affairs think, that from the saving of time and labor and expense to the Government, the inventor should be rewarded for the discovery. However, there are two other claimants, Fisher and Wright. The machine of Mr. Fisher was in use in 1844, in the Washington arsenal, and has since been in successful operation there. Wright ingeniously combined the two former machines. The committee recommend the appropriation as something in the shape of a benefit and as a reward to the claimants for their skill and inventive genius, and as an encouragement to others; and also in recognition of some of the benefits which the Government has derived from the free use of the invention.

Mr. BRIGHT. As the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is not present to explain the bill, I move that its further consideration be postponed until Friday next.

Mr. WALKER. I hope not, unless the Senator is disposed to make serious opposition to it. If he is not, no benefit can arise from the presence of the Senator from Illinois. The subject has been well considered, and we can act upon it. This compensation should be made.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have nothing to say upon the merits of the bill. I only know the facts as they were disclosed by the reading of the report; but there is not a quorum of Senators to vote upon the bill if the yeas and nays should be called.

Mr. CHASE. I hope the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana to postpone the further consideration of the bill until next Friday will be agreed to. It involves the consideration of rights of rival patentees.

Mr. WALKER. I think not; if I understand the reading of the report, the bill provides for the benefit of all the claimants; is it not so?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It proposes to give $5,000 to each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is entitled "A bill for the relief of Richard M. Bouton, George Wright, and the widow of Marvin W. Fisher."

Mr. BRIGHT. I think the bill had better be laid aside until Friday next.

Mr. WALKER. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHIELDS] is now present.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope the Senator will explain the bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. It relates to an invention for the making of percussion caps. There are three different parties who claim compensation for it. The subject has been carefully examined by the Committee on Military Affairs. The amount which it appropriates is quite inconsiderable, and it is distributed among the original inventors. The first two made separate inventions; but the third person has combined the two—

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Fisher.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. Fisher has combined the two, and made it much more beneficial. The invention has been thoroughly examined by a board of scientific officers, and the Department has recommended the appropriation of a larger sum. The committee, however, have made the appropriation very low and reasonable. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Do I understand the Senator from Illinois to say that the appropriation is sanctioned by the Department?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does it recommend the compensation?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The amount of the appropriation in the bill is below the estimate of the Department.

Mr. SHIELDS. It is.

Mr. BRIGHT. Let us vote upon the bill.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The provision of the bill is to pay to each of the parties $5,000—that is $15,000, a pretty large sum.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not know whether the sum is large or not; but the Committee on Naval Affairs reported a bill at the last session giving one of the parties $30,000.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I would rather that the subject should go over until Friday next. I confess that I do not understand it, and I do not understand why this sum of $15,000 should be paid.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have not one particle of interest in this matter; but it has been before Congress for three sessions. Last session the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs reported a bill giving $30,000 to one of the patentees. I took occasion to arrest it, and to have it referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. We then had the invention examined by a board of officers. It is an invaluable invention, and cannot be compensated by $5,000 or $20,000, or $50,000; but these inventions were made by men in the service of the United States, and the United States was entitled at the time to the benefit of their talents and labors. After a full consultation with the head of the Engineer Department, and the head of the Ordnance Department, the appropriation has been reduced to this small amount.

Mr. BRODHEAD. One reason why I ask that the bill may go over is, that there is not a quorum present; and in voting away such large sums of money from the Treasury it seems to me that we ought to have quite a full Senate. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until Friday next.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was then reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I still think it had better go over until Friday. There is not a quorum here.

Mr. SHIELDS. There is a quorum. Let us have a vote, and we can ascertain. The honorable Senator seems to have some peculiar objection to the bill.

Mr. BRODHEAD. No, sir; but when we pass a bill of this kind there ought to be something like a full Senate present. If there is a quorum here I have no objection to acting on the bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. There is a quorum. Let us have a vote.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Very well; I can object to the third reading of the bill to-day.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the bill will have its third reading at this time.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope it will be read a third time.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I object. The rule is that a bill cannot be read twice on the same day, if objected to.

JOHN G. MACKALL.

The bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John G. Mackall, deceased, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the parties $4,450 as indemnity in full for the loss of buildings destroyed by the enemy during the late war with Great Britain.

Mr. BRIGHT. I should like to hear some one explain the provisions of the bill. It belongs to a class of cases which have been voted down here, time and again, to my knowledge. I do not desire to say anything upon the subject, but I would like to hear it explained. I move to postpone its further consideration until Friday next, when there will, perhaps, be some one here to explain it.

The motion was agreed to.

URIAH PREWITT.

The bill for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Uriah Prewitt, deceased, was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the parties to locate, on any unappropriated public lands in Louisiana, the quantity of four hundred and twenty-four acres; and that on obtaining a proper certificate of the location from the local land office, and under the instruction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a patent shall issue to them.

Mr. WELLER. I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will state what the bill provides for. If I am not mistaken in the name, it proposes to provide for a family who had a head-right in Louisiana for six hundred and forty acres of land. They had been in possession of the property for a great many years, and were evicted from it by a previous Spanish claim. Upon a survey by the United States Land Office it turned out that three or four hundred acres were taken from them by a previous Spanish claim. Under these circumstances, they ask for permission of Congress to locate their head-right in any other part of the State.

Mr. WELLER. With that statement of the case, I withdraw my request for the reading of the report.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

JACOB GIDEON.

The bill for the relief of Jacob Gideon was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Third Auditor of the Treasury to examine his claim arising under a contract with the late Board of Navy Commissioners, dated July 15, 1842, and to allow him such actual damages, if any, as he shall satisfactorily prove that he suffered, in consequence of the abrogation of the contract by the construction given by the Secretary of the Navy to the act, entitled "An act to reorganize the Navy Department of the United States," approved August 31, 1842; and it also proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum so awarded, with the limitation, however, that the sum so allowed shall not exceed $1,000.

On the 15th of July, 1842, Mr. Gideon entered into a contract with the Board of Navy Commissioners to supply them with the blank-books, blanks, &c., for the use of that branch of the Navy Department for the ensuing year. On the 31st August following, the act abolishing the "Board of Navy Commissioners" was passed. On the 5th September, Mr. Gideon was informed, by Commodore Warrington, "that the change of the board into bureaux would make no alteration or change in his engagement for books," &c., and on the same day an order was given for a quantity of blank-books, for the Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography. On the 10th of September, Mr. Gideon was informed that the Secretary of the Navy had decided that his contract was "abrogated by the law abolishing the board." On the same day he addressed a communication to the Secretary, stating that he was then engaged in the execution of sundry orders under his contract, and unless allowed to complete the work, he should be subject to heavy losses. To this appeal he received no answer until the 8th of November, when he received a note from the Secretary, adhering to his previous decision. Under these circumstances, he claims that, as he had made a good and valid contract with the authorized agent of the Government, and had, at considerable cost, made arrangements to fulfill the same, and was at all times prepared to do so, and while proceeding in good faith in its execution it was abrogated by the agent of the Government, without any default on the part of the contractor, he is not only entitled to be remunerated for the damages he suffered, but to be paid the amount of profits he would have realized by the fulfillment of the contract. He lays his damages at $2,000. The committee do not recognize the right of a public contractor to prospective profits on an unexecuted contract, and therefore they did not sanction an allowance in the nature of damages beyond the loss actually incurred by the contractor by reason of his having entered into the contract.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the bill will have its third reading at this time.

Mr. BRIGHT. I object.

WILLIAM G. RIDGELY.

The bill for the relief of William G. Ridgely was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRIGHT. That is one of the cases which I ask, in behalf of the Senator from Delaware, may be passed over. I therefore move to postpone its further consideration until Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM G. WILLIAMS.

The bill for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Captain William G. Williams was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust and settle the accounts of the late Captain William G. Williams, of the Corps of Topographical Engineers, and to allow the amount of certain vouchers alleged to have been lost in consequence of his having been killed in the battle of Monterey, not exceeding $300, the balance appearing against him; and that the three months' extra pay allowed by the act of July, 1848, be paid to his widow or orphan children.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment; and was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill will now have its third reading.

Mr. BRIGHT. I object.

CHILDREN OF MICHAEL EVERLY.

The bill for the relief of the children of the late Lieutenant Michael Everly, a revolutionary officer, was read a second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the children of the late Michael Everly, of the Pennsylvania continental line, the amount which would have been paid him from the 3d of March, 1826, to 17th of March, 1827, under the act of May 15, 1828, if he had lived to that date.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STUART in the chair.) If there be no objection, the bill will now have its third reading.

Mr. BRIGHT. I object.

Mr. FOOTE subsequently said: The Senator from Indiana who objected to the third reading of the bill for the relief of the children of the late Lieutenant Everly has withdrawn his objection, and I hope, therefore, that the bill will now be read a third time, and passed.

Mr. BRIGHT. I withdraw my objection to the third reading of this bill; but I will state that I have objected to the third reading of several bills for the reason that there seemed to be no Senator present who could vouch for their correctness. I have objected to the reading of no bill when a Senator was present to explain it, but I think it proper to object when no Senator is willing to state that he knows the bill to be correct; and I shall continue that course.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

THE FLEURIAU CLAIM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill upon the Calendar is one "confirming a certain land claim in Louisiana, known as the Fleuriau Claim."

Mr. WALKER. Is that a private bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is upon the list of private bills.

The bill was read a second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to confirm the claim of the heirs, assigns, and legal representatives of Charles J. B. Fleuriau, or Floriau, to a tract of land described in a petition, or request, addressed by Joseph Villars Dubreuil to the Governor and Commissary of Marine, of the Province of Louisiana, on the 1st of June, 1763; with a proviso that the act shall be held and taken only as a relinquishment on the part of the United States.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The report on this bill is perhaps longer than Senators would like to hear read, and if they will indulge me I will state, in a very few words, the nature of this claim.

The object of the bill is to confirm the title of some forty or fifty planters of Louisiana to the plantations on which they live, and which have belonged to them, and those under whom they claim, for one hundred years. The difficulty that has occurred is this:

The original title, under which these parties claim, was issued by the officers of the French Crown on the 1st of June, 1763. It appears that the province of Louisiana was ceded to Spain by a secret treaty on the 3d of November, 1762. That treaty was only made known in Louisiana on the 21st of April, 1764. So that the grant was made by the officers of the French Crown while the officers of France were in possession of the territory, and while they were acting, as they believed, by virtue of the authority vested in them as the colonial officers of the French Government. That treaty was kept secret between the two kingdoms, and was only disclosed in 1764.

Since that period the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the grants made by the officers of the Government which were de facto in possession of the country, were made without title, and that the persons claiming title under such grants cannot uphold their claims against the Government of the United States. The consequence has been that parties who purchased in good faith from officers who were de facto officers of a Government, in apparent authority, with the right to make these grants, have been deprived of the property on which they and their ancestors have lived for three generations. The object of this bill is to confirm the title to these parties.

The lands consisted, in a great part, of swamp lands. By the proofs before the committee it appeared that some twenty or thirty miles of levees have been built around the lands by the proprietors; that they have established them into sugar plantations; that they have steam-draining machines upon them; and that, in fact, the whole value of the lands has been derived from the labor and capital of the persons who are settled upon them. Under these circumstances, it appears to me that the simple statement of the facts will suffice to secure for the bill the favorable consideration of the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

THOMAS PEMBER.

The bill for the relief of Thomas Pember was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers to adjust the accounts of Thomas Pember, and to pay to him the difference between the compensation of a captain's clerk and that of a purser while he acted in the latter capacity on the steamer Vixen, from October 23, 1848, to June 20, 1850, and while acting in the same capacity on the ship Electra, from July 1, 1847, to February 28, 1848.

Mr. MALLORY. This bill, which was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, fully explains itself. Mr. Pember, the captain's clerk on this occasion, there being no purser, was called upon by the commander of the vessel to perform the duties of that office. He did so faithfully, and he has the certificates of his two commanders testifying to the faithfulness with which he discharged his trust. This bill proposes to pay him the difference between the salary which he actually received as captain's clerk and the pay of a purser. It is following the precedents which have been set in numerous other cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

SAMUEL MICKUM.

The bill for the relief of Samuel Mickum was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers to pay to Samuel Mickum $580 50, being the difference between the pay received by him as a messenger in the Navy Department and that received by the messengers in the other Departments, from November 20, 1839, to June 30, 1851.

Mr. BRIGHT. Is there a report in this case? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there is no written report.

Mr. MALLORY. The bill came from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I can explain it. Mr. Mickum is peculiarly the messenger of the Secretary of the Navy; and while he receives but $650 per annum, he performs duties as responsible, if not more responsible, than those of other messengers who receive $700. Mr. John Y. Mason, while Secretary of the Navy, made an earnest appeal to the Finance Committee to increase the salary of this officer. Mr. Graham and Mr. Kennedy made the same recommendation, and now Mr. Dobbin concurs with them. The committee have presented no written report.

Mr. WELLER. The difficulty is that this bill is retrospective and goes back to 1839.

Mr. MALLORY. It provides for the payment of $580 50, which is necessary in order to make the salary of this messenger equal to that of others in the same department within this period.

Mr. WELLER. The bill goes back to 1839. Now, if the incumbent was not satisfied with his compensation, he ought long since to have resigned, and no doubt other persons would have accepted the office at the salary fixed by law. I cannot see how he can with any propriety hold office from 1839 to 1851, and then come here and ask that an act shall be passed increasing his salary retrospectively during that whole period. It is possible, it is quite likely, that his present pay is insufficient, and I should be disposed to increase it; but I might at the same time be unwilling to go back and pay him increased compensation from 1839 to 1851.

Mr. MALLORY. In 1845, as I before stated, Mr. John Y. Mason, then being Secretary of the Navy, made an appeal to the Finance Committee of the Senate to increase this compensation. His letter to Mr. Evans, of Maine, then chairman of that committee, is in these words:

"I have the honor to invite the favorable attention of the Committee on Finance to the salary of the principal messenger in this Department, who receives but $650 a year, while the messengers in all the bureaus of the Department receive $700. On the 13th of December, I called the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House to the subject, but it appears to have escaped his notice. The services of Mr. Mickum are rendered to my entire satisfaction, and I recommend that an addition of $50 a year be made to his salary from the date of his appointment, viz: November 20, 1839. This would require the sum of $281 25 to the 30th of June, 1845, and the substitution of $1,100 for $1,050 in the civil appropriation bill now before the Senate."

Mr. Kennedy in 1852 says:

"I have read your memorial and the papers accompanying it, and have no hesitation in bearing testimony to the faithfulness and promptness with which you have discharged the duties required of you."

The propriety of increasing the salary is strongly recommended by Mr. Kennedy in this letter. Mr. Dobbin, the present Secretary of the Navy has written a still stronger letter upon the subject, which is among the papers. Mr. Mickum has been induced to hold on to this office with the salary of $650, under the almost positive certainty of having it increased every year.

The addition of $50 a year will place him on an equality with the other messengers in the same Department. It is simply on this principle of equality that the bill has been reported.

Mr. ADAMS. I understand there are other messengers doing the same kind of service, who receive but $500 a year, while this individual receives $700. I do not know that there is any propriety in putting one messenger higher than another in point of salary, though it has been done by law. I may say, however, that the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform have in contemplation a general bill with reference to the organization and compensation of the persons employed in the several Departments; and hope to be able, by obtaining information from the various Secretaries, to do justice to all the Government employees, as nearly as they can. This gentleman is doubtless a meritorious man; but I have no doubt from the communications which I have received, that there are others in the same condition, who ought to be put upon the same footing.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator mistakes the purpose of this bill. It is not for increasing the salary of this officer to that of others of a similar grade—that has already been done; but it is to pay him the difference between his former compensation and that which other officers of the same class received, for a certain time. It will not be included in such a bill as the Senator speaks of as about to be reported by the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform. This is a meritorious claim. It has been urgently recommended to Congress by every Secretary of the Navy who has been in the Department during the last twelve years.

Mr. WELLER. Under that statement I shall go for it; but I throw the responsibility upon the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BADGER. I take it all. I understand the claim, and I can assure the Senate that it is perfectly right.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

HIRAM PAULDING.

The bill for the relief of Hiram Paulding was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers to audit the accounts of Hiram Paulding, a captain in the Navy, and to pay his expenses (not exceeding $963 92) in the entertainment of the foreign officers and people who visited the frigate St. Lawrence, under his command, at Southampton; and also $2,690 for entertaining the officers of the Governments of Bremerhaven and Stockholm, in the years 1848, 1849, and 1850.

Captain Paulding was assigned to the command of the new frigate St. Lawrence, by the Secretary of the Navy, in the year 1848, and ordered upon special and independent service, having reference to the then political difficulties on the continent of Europe. The difficulties in regard to Holstein and Schleswig, and a general revolutionary movement throughout Germany, and the pending struggle between Austria and Hungary, seemed to call for the presence of a naval force in the northern part of Europe. Under this order, the St. Lawrence arrived at Southampton in December, 1848, where she was received, as the representative of the United States, with distinguished honors by all classes of people. The municipal authorities visited the ship, and presented to Captain Paulding an engrossed resolution, sealed with the seal of the borough of Southampton, passed by them unanimously, inviting the officers to a banquet. Upon the landing of the first boat from the ship, the British flag from the pier-head was lowered and that of the United States hoisted in its place, and every mark of kindness and honorable welcome in their power was exhibited while the ship lay there. It was the first opportunity our naval officers ever had of accepting similar attentions from the authorities or people of Great Britain upon their own soil. Captain Paulding regarded these demonstrations not as mere idle or personal civilities, but as designed to express towards the Government of the United States those kindly feelings and generous sympathies of the people of England which it is manifestly our interest to cultivate, and which he did not feel himself justified to disregard.

In return for the civilities thus extended to his flag and officers, Captain Paulding received the visits of the authorities and people of the borough on board the ship; and the expense attending the courtesies thus extended was defrayed by the purser of the ship as a proper expenditure in behalf of the Government, under the orders of Captain Paulding, and amounted to the sum of nine hundred and sixty-three dollars and ninety-two cents.

The ship next proceeded through the channel to the North sea, to Bremerhaven, the port of Bremen. Here the Arch Duke of Oldenburg, with a numerous suite, visited the ship, and was received in a manner, and by an entertainment suitable to his rank; and successively the Senate of Bremen, with a numerous suite of from seventy to one hundred, and many of the most distinguished persons of Germany, the Queen of Greece, the Duke of Oldenburg, with his royal family, and Prince Stephen of Austria, the Baron Von Gagern, late President of the Imperial Parliament of Frankfort, and Duckwitz, Minister of the German Marine, were received on board and entertained.

In the summer of 1849, deputations from the Prussian Government and the Parliament of Frankfort were recommended to Captain Paulding, with reference to the formation of a German navy, and visited the ship, by which expense was also incurred.

The ship thence proceeded to Stockholm, where Count Platen, King's chamberlain, Minister of Marine, and the representative of the sovereign authority, in the absence of the King, with a numerous suite of distinguished persons, was received on board and entertained.

The aggregate of expenses thus incurred in the entertainment, on board the ship, of these and numerous other visitors, was $3,653 92, of which sum the amount of $2,690 was expended in the entertainment of the civil and military officers of the Governments of the countries visited by the ship, and who were received on board by their request. The balance was expended at Southampton in entertaining the municipal authorities and the people of that borough.

No commander of a public vessel abroad is at liberty, unless under peculiar circumstances, to decline such visits as were made to the St. Lawrence by the sovereign authorities of countries with which it is our interest to cultivate amicable relations. The interchange of such civilities exercises a decided and beneficial influence, while at the same time the naval preparation and efficiency of our country is most wisely and humanely displayed.

Congress, it appears, has recognized such expenditures heretofore, for in 1833 allowance was made to Master Commandant John D. Sloat of $1,360; to Captain Daniel Turner of $1,182 78; and to Captain George W. Storer of $500. In 1838, $3,391 was allowed to Captain Daniel T. Patterson; and in 1844 the sum of $4,200 was allowed to Captain Charles W. Morgan. These precedents, however, do not cover such expenditures as those at Southampton; but they were made under peculiar circumstances, and at an interesting and exciting period of the political movements of Europe.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment; and the question was, "Shall it be engrossed, and read a third time?"

Mr. BRIGHT. I call for the yeas and nays on the engrossment of the bill. To my knowledge, it has been voted down three or four times within the last five or six years.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Clayton, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Evans, Fish, Foot, Gwin, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Pettit, Sebastian, Seward, Smith, Toombs, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Wright—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Bright, Chase, Fitzpatrick, Johnson, and Stuart—7.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed. It was then read a third time, and passed.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 27, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DENT. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make an explanation personal to myself.

The SPEAKER. If no objection be made, the gentleman will proceed. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DENT. On last Tuesday, when the vote was taken upon the proposition to lay upon the table a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution to confer the title of lieutenant general by brevet was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I was in my seat and voted affirmatively. My name does not appear upon the record; and I see, also, that in the Daily Globe my name does not appear. I have ascertained from the Clerk that, from the noise in the House at the time, he did not hear my response when my name was called. I desire that my name may be entered upon the record.

No objection was made, and the Journal was corrected accordingly.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM DEPARTMENTS.

The SPEAKER. With the permission of the gentleman, before that motion is put, the Chair will present a communication to the House.

The SPEAKER thereupon presented to the House a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting, in compliance with the third section of the act of the 20th of April, 1836, entitled "An act to carry into effect the treaties concluded with the Chickasaw tribe of Indians on the 20th of October, 1832, and the 24th of May, 1834," a detailed statement of the Register of the Treasury, showing the amounts credited and the sums charged on account of the respective trusts created under the said treaties upon the books of the Treasury, during the year 1853; also, the statement of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, showing the sales of land in the Chickasaw cession during the year 1853.

Mr. HOUSTON. The communication just read, seems to be a history of the management of the trust fund held by the Government of the United States for the Chickasaw tribe of Indians, and I suppose the proper disposition of it will be to refer it to the Committee on Indian Affairs, that they may examine it. I therefore make the motion to refer the communication to that committee, and that it be printed.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, it will be so ordered.

A communication was then laid before the House from the Department of the Interior, submitting an estimate for the salaries and incidental expenses of the commissioners appointed by the act of 3d of March, 1851, for settling land claims in California.

Mr. HAVEN. The communication evidently is an estimate in reference to that commission. I move to refer it to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that it be printed.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, it will be so ordered.

A communication was then laid before the House from the Commissioner of Public Buildings, transmitting copies of contracts made from January 1, 1853, and January 1, 1854, with the names of the applicants for said contracts, with the respective bids.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to refer the communication to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, it will be so ordered.

SENATE BILLS.

The following Senate bills upon the Speaker's table were then taken up, read the first and second time by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

"An act for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of William Weeks." Referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

"An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Daniel Loomis, deceased." Referred to the Committee on Claims.

"Bill for the relief of the captors of the frigate Philadelphia." Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The question then recurred upon the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for a division, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there be a quorum present or not. I do not believe there is a quorum in the House.

The question was put; and 125—a quorum—rose in the affirmative.

So the motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, (Mr. HIBBARD in the chair,) the business in order being the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar.

The first bill in order was Senate bill (No. 2) "to indemnify the State of Indiana for the failure of title to a township of land granted to said State on her admission into the Union in 1816."

Mr. HENDRICKS. If there be no objection to this bill, I move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. MILLSON. I would inquire of the Chair if this is objection day?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it is.

Mr. MILLSON. I would like to have an explanation of some features of that bill before it is reported to the House. I suppose under the rules none can be given to-day, and I do not therefore like to have it reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia object?

Mr. MILLSON. I suppose that discussion is equivalent to objection. I cannot consent that the bill be laid aside with a recommendation that it pass, without some information which I desire to have; and as this information cannot be given without necessarily involving discussion, it of course cannot be laid aside with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think there can be no objection to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Virginia to object to the bill?

Mr. MILLSON. Under the circumstances I must object.

The bill was therefore passed over.

The next bill in order was House bill (No. 51) "for the relief of the widow and heirs of Elijah Beebe."

Mr. HAVEN. I wish to make an inquiry which may lead to the saving of a great deal of time and trouble about this business. I notice that several of these bills were objected to on last objection day. Would not that objection prevail for this day as well as the last?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so supposes, unless the objection be withdrawn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not think that has ever been the practice under the rule. When a bill upon the Calendar is called on the first or fourth Friday in the month, and any member objects to it, it goes over for that day. Next objection day, if the bill has not been disposed of in the interim, it must again be called, and if not again objected to, must be laid aside. I think that has been the practice.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Chair asks if there be objection to a bill, and none is made, the understanding of the Chair will be that any former objection has been withdrawn.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to say that I did not put the inquiry to the Chair with a view of embarrassing any of these bills, but merely for the purpose of information.

The CHAIRMAN. If not objected to, this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. LETCHER. I object to it.

House bill (No. 54) "for the relief of Madison Parton" was next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HILLYER. I move that that bill be laid aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think there is an amendment pending to that bill. When we were last in Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, I moved to strike out so much of the bill as allows interest.

Mr. HILLYER. I have no objection to that amendment going to the House.

The question was then taken upon the amendment, and it was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 58) "for settling the claims of the legal representatives of Richard W. Meade, deceased," coming up next in order, was objected to by Mr. MACE.

The following bills, coming up in their order, were objected to, as indicated below:

No. 59. "A bill for the relief of Samuel Colt." [Objected to by Mr. LETCHER and others, in various parts of the Hall.]

No. 63. "A bill for the relief of Charles Lee Jones." [Objected to by Mr. WALSH.]

No. 99. "A bill for the relief of Captain George Simpton, of Galveston." [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of New York.]

No. 103. "A bill for the relief of Ferdinand Clark." [Objected to by Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana.]

No. 104. "A bill for the relief of Adolphus Meier & Co., of St. Louis." [Objected to by Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana.]

The following bill was taken up in its order:

No. 98. "A bill for the relief of Henry Lewis, of Clinton county, Indiana."

Mr. LETCHER. I imagine, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MACE] will withdraw that bill.

Mr. MACE. I do not know that it is my duty to do so. The Committee on Claims instructed me to report it to the House, and they have not yet reconsidered that report. Whenever they do, I shall withdraw it.

Mr. LETCHER. The Committee on Claims had a subsequent consideration on the matter, and they thought that it had not better be reported.

Mr. MACE. I have never been notified officially of that action.

Mr. LETCHER. I object to the bill.

The next bill in order coming up for consideration was House bill (No. 105) "for the relief of Wilson and Brothers, of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri."

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. The same question is involved in this as in several of the others objected to. I therefore object to it.

The bill was laid over under the rule.

The next bill in order which came up for consideration was House bill (No. 107) "for the relief of Robert Grignon."

The Clerk was proceeding to read the bill and report, but was interrupted by—

Mr. JONES, of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is evident that the bill will lead to debate. I therefore object to it. Let it be laid over.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection for a moment.

Mr. JONES. I have read the bill, and am in doubt now as to its correctness, and I think it had better be passed over.

Mr. LETCHER. I will not insist upon it; but I wish the gentleman would withdraw it for a moment, to allow me to make a statement.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. LETCHER. I have taken some trouble since the last consideration of private bills to look into this matter at the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I am satisfied that there is due the sum of $19,000.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I object to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If the bill gives rise to debate it must go over.

Mr. LETCHER. I did not propose to discuss the bill. I was simply making a statement of the facts, which I thought would obviate all objections. The provision in the treaty of 1836 with that tribe was amended by the Senate by striking out this allowance to the petitioner, and therefore there is no recognition of Grignon in the treaty, as it now stands. I therefore propose to amend the bill so as to let the money be paid to the Menomonee tribe of Indians, and let them assign it over to him if he is entitled to it.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "Robert Grignon," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the representatives of the Menomonee tribe of Indians, or their assigns."

The question was then taken upon the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. MAURICE. I object.
So the bill was passed over.

The next bill that came up in order for consideration was House bill (No. 108) "for the relief of George G. Bishop and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased," which being objected to by Mr. CLINGMAN, was passed over.

The next bill coming up in order upon the Calendar was House bill (No. 120) "for the relief of Henry N. Halstead."

The bill and report were then read.

The petitioner in this case alleges that he was in the service of the United States in the year 1814, in a company commanded by Captain John G. Weaver, of the New York militia, at Sackett's Harbor; that his service commenced on the 22d of August, 1814, and ended on the 9th of November following, when he was regularly discharged on account of sickness; that his sickness was the camp disorder, and has continued to the present time, which has greatly disabled and enfeebled him. The bill reported by the committee provides a pension at the rate of four dollars per month, commencing on the 1st of January, 1845.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The next bill in order was House bill (No. 121) "for the relief of Benjamin Hammond."

The bill and report were read through by the Clerk.

The bill provides that the name of Benjamin Hammond be placed upon the roll of invalid pensioners of the United States, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the first day of January, 1854, and to continue during his natural life.

The report states that the petitioner was a sergeant in Captain Badger's company, in the regiment commanded by Colonel Thom, in the artillery, in the war of 1812. Upon one occasion the colonel was informed that two men, suspected of being spies, had been in the camp, and had escaped. He ordered the petitioner to take a sufficient force, follow, and, if possible, secure them. The pursuit was made in the night, and in the woods; and the petitioner, in the discharge of this duty, fell, and the bone of his right thigh was fractured, and he was otherwise injured. The injury compelled him to leave the service. He secured the best surgical treatment at his command, but the injured thigh was but partially restored. He has ever since been lame. The broken limb is much decayed, and so worthless that the petitioner goes upon crutches.

Mr. HOUSTON. I propose to ask the chairman of the committee who reported the bill a question. I suppose that committee has reported, or will report, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to a periodical examination of invalid pensioners. If they propose to report a bill of this character, I would suggest whether it would not be well enough to make an amendment to this bill, subjecting it to that sort of test? Or does the committee propose to report a general provision covering all that class of cases?

Mr. HENDRICKS. The committee have not considered that subject with reference to any definite action, as yet. Whether a bill will be reported by our committee, providing for a periodical examination of invalid pensioners, I cannot say, but I think there is no propriety in adding any such provision as the gentleman suggests to this bill. This man will certainly never get well. He has been lame ever since 1814, and there is barely a possibility of his ever being any better.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to that claim, but the Secretary of the Interior reports that frauds, to very extensive amounts, are practiced upon the Pension Bureau by persons who obtain pensions as invalids, and afterwards recover, but continue to draw pensions while in perfect health. Hence he proposes to subject all cases of that sort to a periodical examination. I think it a good suggestion, and I hope the gentleman will consider it, and report a bill that will include this case as well as all others. If the petitioner is really an invalid such a provision could not affect his case.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Committee on Invalid Pensions have been considering that subject, but have made no decision upon it as yet. If such a bill as the gentleman suggests was passed, it could be made to include all pensions under special acts.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, I have no objection to this bill.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 122) "for the relief of Henry J. Snow, of Rome, in the State of New York," was next in order upon the Calendar.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Henry J. Snow, of Rome, in the State of New York, on the roll of invalid pensioners of the United States, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 1st of January, 1854, and continue during his natural life.

Mr. BRIDGES. I ask that the report accompanying that bill may be read.

The Clerk read the report, from which it appears, that in April last the petitioner in this case was employed by the officer in command at the military post at Rome, in the State of New York, to load and discharge guns on the occasion of the death of the Hon. William R. King, Vice President of the United States, and while so employed, by the premature discharge of one of the guns, his right arm was torn off, his right eye destroyed, and he was otherwise injured. The accident occurred without fault or negligence on the part of the petitioner, who is but thirty-seven years of age, and has a wife and five children dependent on him for support.

There being no objection to the bill, it was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 123) "for the relief of Charles Staples" was next in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. BRIDGES. I ask for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the report has not been printed.

Mr. WALSH. Then I must object to the bill.

House bill (No. 121) "for the relief of Lemuel Hudson" came up next in order.

The bill provides that the name of Lemuel Hudson, who was formerly surgeon of the twelfth regiment, fourth brigade, New York militia, of the war of 1812, be entered upon the pension rolls, and that he be paid the sum of $22 per month for and during his natural life, commencing the 1st of January, 1852.

From the report, which was read, it appears that the said Lemuel Hudson was surgeon of the twelfth regiment, fourth brigade, New York militia, commanded by Colonel John T. Van Dolsen, and which was ordered to march from Albany county, New York, to Sackett's Harbor, by Governor Tompkins, in the summer of 1812; that said regiment marched from Albany county on or about the 15th day of August, 1812, and was accompanied by said Hudson, then a stout and healthy man, as surgeon; then when at the town of Champion, Jefferson county, New York, thirty miles from Sackett's Harbor, the regiment was overtaken by a heavy storm of snow and sleet, and in consequence of the disability he incurred in said storm he is totally disabled. He performed his arduous duties as surgeon, as aforesaid, well, and in a manner to endear him to the officers and soldiers of said regiment, and was honorably discharged at the close of his term of service, which was soon after he arose from his bed of sickness, all of which is apparent from the papers in the case.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 125) "for the relief of Harriet Leavenworth, widow of the late Brevet Brigadier General Leavenworth," came up next in order.

The bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place the name of Harriet Leavenworth upon the pension rolls, and to cause her to be paid the sum of $37 50 per month for and during the term of five years, commencing February 1, 1853. The report of the committee was then read.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to submit an amendment to that bill. Under the pension laws, I understand that the widow of a lieutenant colonel is entitled to $75 per month; that is, the half-pay as colonel of cavalry; the half pay of a lieutenant colonel of infantry is $60 per month.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind the gentleman from Ohio that debate is not in order.

Mr. STUART. I move to amend the bill by striking out $30 per month, and to insert $37 50.

The question was put on the amendment; and the Chair decided that the vote was in the negative.

Several MEMBERS. "Divide!" "Divide!"
Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to the bill; let it go over.

The bill was therefore laid over.

The next bill in order which came up for consideration was bill No. 126, entitled "A bill for the relief of George S. Claflin."

The bill was read. It provides that the name of George S. Claflin be placed upon the pension rolls of the United States, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the first day of December, 1851, and to continue during his natural life.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the bill objected to?

Mr. JONES. Let the report be read.

The Clerk read the report; which states that the memorialist, George S. Claflin, of Mendon, New York, had served as a sergeant in the militia, in the war of 1812; that he was taken prisoner about the 17th September, 1814, and continued a prisoner at Quebec, Montreal, and Halifax, until the 10th of April, 1815, and was discharged on the 26th of the same month; that during his captivity he suffered the most intolerable treatment; his food was loathsome and offensive at times, and not in sufficient quantities to supply the cravings of nature; and by close confinement at nights, with eight hundred prisoners, the details of which are set forth in his petition, his constitution was destroyed, both his feet frozen, and he was attacked with alarming and dangerous disease, and has continued in feeble health ever since, although he entered the service a healthy man, with a sound constitution. He is now destitute of the means of supporting himself and his family. A bill for his relief passed the House of Representatives on the third day of January, 1851.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The next bill in order which came up for consideration was House bill No. 127, entitled "A bill for the relief of James F. Green."

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of James F. Green, of Bradford county, Pennsylvania, upon the invalid pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the first day of February, 1850, and to continue during his natural life.

The report, which was read, states that the petitioner, James F. Green, was draughted in Orange county, New York, on the 10th of August, 1814, and mustered into service as a member of Captain Halleck's company, of Colonel Belknap's regiment, on the 18th August, 1814; that he was marched to and stationed at Harlem Heights; and while stationed there, and in the line of his duty, he had his right knee crushed and the bone fractured.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The next bill which came up in order for consideration was House bill (No. 128) "for the relief of Thomas Frazer."

The bill provides for an increase of pension.

The report was read; from which it appears that the petitioner, in consequence of an injury received at St. Albans, Vermont, while sergeant in Captain Danforth's company, Colonel McCobb's regiment, in the summer of 1813, was, by act of Congress, placed on the pension roll to draw two dollars and sixty-six cents per month for partial disability; that he has now become entirely disabled in consequence of that injury.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be laid aside, and reported to the House.

The next bill in order upon the Calendar, was House bill (No. 129) "for the relief of Cornelius H. Latham."

The bill provides for placing his name upon the pension roll, at four dollars per month, from January, 1850, to continue during his natural life.

The report was read; from which it appears that Latham prays for a pension in consequence of disability incurred while in the military service of the United States; that he enlisted as a private in company B, Captain Sumner, in the regiment of dragoons under Colonel Henry Dodge, on the first day of July, 1833, for three years.

Mr. HAMILTON. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman who reported the bill, [Mr. EDMANDS.] Is this bill reported entirely upon the evidence of the petitioner himself? The report goes on to state that "he has repeatedly endeavored, he declares," &c.

Mr. EDMANDS. There was other evidence besides the declaration of the petitioner himself.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Bills are never reported upon parties' own evidence.

Mr. HAMILTON. The report in this case says so.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be laid aside, and reported to the House.

The next bill in order upon the Calendar, was House bill (No. 130) "for the relief of Samuel W. Brady."

The bill provides for placing his name upon the pension roll for life.

The report was read; from which it appears that Brady was in the battle of Chapultepec, and received an injury by falling from its walls, which entitles him to a pension; that he was discharged from Company E. on the 28th of March, 1848, with a surgeon's certificate of ordinary disability.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be laid aside, and reported to the House.

The bill next in order upon the Calendar, was House bill (No. 131) "for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Gerard."

The bill and report were then read.

Mr. MACE objecting, the bill was accordingly laid over.

The bill next in order upon the Calendar, was House bill (No. 134) "for the relief of Fayette Mauzy, and Robert G. Ward."

The bill and report were then read.

It appears from the record evidence produced to the committee, and accompanying the petition, that the United States recovered, in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia, a judgment against the petitioners for the sum of six hundred and fifteen dollars sixty-two and a half cents, ($615 62½) with interest thereon from the 2d day of April, 1841—the same being the amount due the Post Office Department by William Ward, late postmaster at Culpeper court-house, Virginia. It further appears that the United States recovered in another suit in the same court, but at a different term, a decree in chancery against John Morrison and others; and that, from the proceedings had therein, it appears that Robert G. Ward, one of the defendants, had erroneously paid to the United States a sum equal to $499 97, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum from the 18th day of September, 1840; and the court certified as follows: "And the court doth further certify its opinion that in equity and justice the said sum of $499 97, with interest as aforesaid on $366 77, part thereof, from the 18th day of September, 1840, ought to be refunded by the United States to the said defendant, Robert G. Ward."

The petitioners ask that the first recited judgment may have applied towards its discharge the amount certified by the court, in the suit in chancery, as due to one of them, (Robert G. Ward,) and which ought to be refunded by the United States.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The committee next proceeded to consider House bill (No. 170) "for the relief of the legal representatives of the late John E. Bispham."

The bill and report were read through by the Clerk.

The bill provides that the sum of $913 69 be paid to Caleb J. Good, executor of John E. Bispham, deceased, late of the United States Navy, for expenses incurred by the deceased in a suit arising out of the seizure of the brig Malaga, off the coast of Africa, by the United States brig Boxer, while under the command of the said Bispham.

The report states that in April, 1846, the said Bispham being the commanding officer of the United States brig Boxer, boarded and took possession of the brig Malaga, on the coast of Africa. The seizure was made under the belief that the Malaga was about to engage in the transportation of slaves from that coast, and was made in good faith, under circumstances calculated to produce a very strong suspicion against the vessel seized. The Malaga was sent to the district of Massachusetts, and was libeled on the 16th of June, 1846, but, on motion of the district attorney, the libel was discontinued. On the 17th of July, 1847, a suit was instituted by the owners of the Malaga against the said Bispham for the seizure, which, after full argument and trial, was dismissed with costs. The costs, as originally taxed by the clerk, included $500 for counsel fees. The libelants appealed from the taxation, and it was afterwards decided that "counsel fees should not be allowed as costs, there being no fund in court."

In defending the suit, Lieutenant Bispham was compelled to employ counsel, and also to incur other necessary expenses. The committee think it is the duty of Government to reimburse the expenses thus incurred, and they find that, under similar circumstances, such has been the practice.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The committee next proceeded to consider House bill (No. 173) "for the relief of Mrs. Helen McKay, widow of the late Colonel Aeneas McKay, Deputy Quartermaster General United States Army."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think that bill is all wrong in principle. These officers received their regular pay. This is to give them extra for additional services. I object.

The bill was therefore passed over.

The committee next proceeded to consider House bill (No. 174) "for the relief of D. C. Cash and Giles W. Ellis."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Read the report.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no report accompanying this bill.

Mr. JONES. I presume there is one, but that it has not been printed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that such is the case.

Mr. JONES. Then we cannot pass the bill. We know nothing about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. JONES. I do, sir.

House bill (No. 110) "authorizing the payment of the balance of the property accounts between the United States and the State of New York, for military stores in the war of 1812," stood next upon the Calendar.

Mr. JONES. Read the report.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been printed.

Mr. BRIDGES. I object.

House bill (No. 175) "for the relief of John O. Mears," stood next upon the Calendar.

It appears from the report of the committee, which was read, that Mr. Mears, being captain's clerk of the United States brig Dolphin, stationed on the coast of Africa, was, in April, 1846, appointed by Captain Skinner, commander of the African squadron, an acting purser to fill a vacancy created by the death of Purser Spencer. A purser was required by the vessel, and Captain Skinner had authority to confer the acting appointment upon Mears, who entered upon his duties on the 1st of May, 1846, and continued to discharge them well and faithfully until the month of November, 1847. Upon receiving his appointment as acting purser of the Dolphin he resigned his clerkship, and this post was at once filled by another person, who received the compensation incident to it; and Mr. Mears neither received the pay as a clerk nor as purser. The committee deem him entitled to the usual compensation as purser.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The next bill in order on the Calendar, was a bill (No. 176) "for the relief of Pamela Brown, the widow of Major General Jacob Brown, deceased, late of the United States Army."

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of the aforesaid Pamela Brown upon the roll of pensions of the United States at the rate of thirty dollars per month, to commence on the 1st day of January, 1854, and to continue for ten years from that date, and then cease: provided, however, that if the said Pamela Brown shall die before the said period of ten years, that said pension shall cease at her death.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senate have sent a bill to this House for the relief of Pamela Brown, the widow of General Brown, making her a pensioner for life at the rate of one hundred dollars per month. The Committee on Invalid Pensions reported a bill for her relief, which is now before the committee, giving her thirty dollars per month for ten years, if she should live that long. That bill is in accordance with the policy of the pension law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind the gentleman that discussion is not in order.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not propose to discuss the bill, but only to state in what condition it comes before the committee. If the committee approve the policy adopted by the Senate, as a matter of course the bill ought not to pass; but if it intend to apply the general policy of the pension laws to special cases, then the bill ought to pass, if it otherwise have merits. The report will satisfy the committee as to the latter fact. I ask for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the report has not yet come from the printer.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I can state what the report shows, if it be desired; but I presume the bill had better lay over.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I object to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the bill lies over.

House bill (No. 177) "for the relief of Lyman N. Cook" came up next in order.

It provides that the name of Lyman N. Cook be placed upon the pension roll of the United States at $22 50 per month, for and during his natural life.

Mr. HAMILTON. I would ask of the gentleman who reported that bill upon what principle $22 50 per month is allowed?

Mr. HENDRICKS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TWEED] who reported that bill is not now present. I am not so familiar with the bill as I would have been had I reported it myself; but, well as I recollect, there was a special act passed in 1843, giving this person a pension at the rate of $11 50 per month. It was clearly shown to our committee that, in the passage of that act, the Congress that passed it labored under a mistake. It intended to have given him a full pension, and gave him but half a one. It has been shown to our committee that this man is entirely disabled and that he is entitled to a full pension. This pension of $22 50 is what he would have received had he applied under the general pension laws. That is the state of the case, to my recollection. The bill is a meritorious one.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The following bill came up next in order:

No. 178. "A bill for the relief of Benjamin Rowe."

The bill directs that the name of Benjamin Rowe be placed upon the pension roll at the rate of eight dollars per month for five years, to commence on the 1st of January, 1854.

The Clerk read the report, which states that Benjamin Rowe, the petitioner, was a private in the twenty-first regiment of United States troops; that in the year 1813 he was taken prisoner by the British troops while on the journey from Greenbush to Sackett's Harbor, and while imprisoned contracted diseases which have entirely unfitted and disabled him from obtaining a livelihood for his family.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I notice that the bill limits the pension of the petitioner to five years from the 1st of January, 1854. It is not the policy of the pension laws so to limit pensions. And I move to strike out the words "five years," and insert in lieu thereof, "for life," which is the policy adopted by the pension laws.

The question on the amendment was put and agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be laid aside, and reported to the House.

The bill next in order for consideration was House bill (No. 179) "for the relief of Emelie Hooe, widow of Captain Hooe."

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension list the name of Emelie Hooe, widow of Brevet Major Alexander H. Hooe, late of the United States Army, whose death was occasioned by a wound received in the battle of Resaca de la Palma on the 9th of May, 1846, and to allow her per month the half pay of a captain in the Army of the United States for ten years; said pension to commence on the 1st of January, 1854; provided, said pension shall cease if she die in the mean time.

The Clerk read the report; which states that said Alexander S. Hooe lost his right arm in the battle of Resaca de la Palma, at which time he was a captain. A letter from Adjutant General Roger Jones, dated August 16, 1850, says: "He was breveted major, to date from May 9, 1846, 'for gallant and distinguished services in the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, in Texas, on the 8th and 9th of May, 1846.'"

The committee are fully satisfied, from the facts made known to them, that Major Hooe's death was caused by the aforesaid wound.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The bill next in order for consideration was House bill (No. 180) "for the relief of William B. Edwards."

The bill provides a pension of eight dollars per month, to commence 1st January, 1854, and continue during five years.

The Clerk read the report; which states that William B. Edwards, the petitioner, was sergeant in Captain Wharton's company of the regiment of dragoons, commanded by Colonel Henry Dodge; that he enlisted in the Army in 1833, and was discharged from service in 1835, in consequence of disability. The evidence proves that Edwards, while on a march from Fort Gibson as an escort for the Santa Fe traders in the Indian country, was thrown from his horse on the 15th day of June, 1834, and while in the line of his duty. The testimony shows that, in consequence of the injury, he is rendered incapable of making a support by manual labor.

Mr. PHELPS. I do not desire, Mr. Chairman, to object to the bill, but I suggest an amendment to it to the effect that, instead of the five years' pension provided for by it, that it shall be to continue during life. I have another amendment to offer. I understand that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have adopted the rule that from the period the petitioner shows, before a committee of this House, that he is entitled to a pension, that the pension shall date from that time. Now, the first formal report made in this case was made in the year 1850. Therefore, in compliance with the principle adopted by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I propose to strike out the words 1854 as the time when the payment of this pension is to commence, and to substitute 1850; that is, that the pension do commence from the 1st of January, 1850, and to continue during the petitioner's natural life.

The bill was read as proposed to be amended.

Mr. BISSELL. I have no objection at all to the principle laid down being carried out in this particular case, nor in any case. But I want uniformity in the matter. For instance: We have just passed over several very meritorious cases, in which the order for a pension is to take effect—one on the 1st January, 1854, and others about the same period of time. I refer particularly to the case of bill No. 179. In that case there were reports from the committees of one House or other, or both, in favor of the petition, three or four years ago. I allude to the case of Emelie Hooe, widow of Captain Hooe. There is no more meritorious case before the committee than hers. I have no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] but I think there should be uniformity in these matters.

Mr. PHELPS. I know nothing about the case of Mrs. Hooe, but I understand that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have laid down this as a rule, that from the time the evidence was perfected in this House, they will date the pension. The amendment I have proposed is in conformity to that rule, which was the rule adopted in the last two Congresses.

Mr. BISSELL. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions if that rule applied in the cases just passed?

Mr. HENDRICKS. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I will say that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has adopted, as far as possible, the policy of the pension law, and of the law of 1822; that is, that in allowing a pension to an invalid himself, the pension is to commence when he has completed his proofs in the Department.

That applies to the case where the pensioner is an invalid himself. The pension in that case is for life. It is therefore of great importance to him that the pension should commence when he completes his proofs. But the policy of the law has been to give the widow half pay for five years. It is as well for her, the Department says, to have the pension for five years to come, as to have it from the time of proof. So in all cases where we have given half pay to the widow for a term of years, we have commenced it from the passage of the bill.

Mr. BISSELL. I am not satisfied with the reasons given why the pension should date back to the time of proofs completed, instead of now. I do not quite understand why the case alluded to by the gentleman from Missouri should be made to date back.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Because the policy of the law of 1822 requires that the pensioner should receive his pension from the time the proof is perfected. The proof in this case was perfected in 1850. The same law does not apply to pensions given to widows, which are for a term of years, to commence from the date of the laws in such cases.

Mr. BISSELL. I wish to ask one other question. I desire only to get at the right in this matter. Was not the amendment in the last case that the pension should run for ten years?

Mr. PHELPS. For life. It is an invalid pension for a soldier totally disabled.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri is to pay a pension to the individual in this case, and to date back some four or five years. Am I correct in this?

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman from Alabama is correct.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is to date back then to 1850 instead of 1854. The reason given for this is, that that was the time at which the proof was completed. Before what tribunal was it completed?

Mr. PHELPS. It was completed to the satisfaction of a committee of this House. The report read by the Clerk is the report that was made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions in 1850, upon testimony then on file.

Mr. HOUSTON. It seems to be very clear that the rule the gentleman admits to apply to cases in legislation—

Mr. LILLY. As this is a bill which gives rise to discussion, I must therefore object.

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not want to object to the bill; but it seems to me—

Mr. LILLY. I object to the consideration of the bill, because it gives rise to discussion, and not because I have any objection to the bill. If the discussion ceases, I will withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand that there is objection to the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I object to the bill.

The next bill that came up for consideration was House bill "for the relief of John Hamilton;" which was read.

There being no objection to the bill, it was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The committee next proceeded to consider House bill (No. 182) "for the relief of Daniel Steenrod."

The bill and report were read by the Clerk. The bill provides that the petition of Daniel Steenrod, with the accompanying documents and depositions, be referred to the Secretary of War; and that he be hereby authorized and directed, in such mode as to him shall seem just and expedient, to appoint an umpire to hear evidence in the city of Wheeling, Virginia, and ascertain and fix what is justly and equitably due the said petitioner thereon.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would inquire of the gentleman who reported this bill what is the basis of it? Neither the bill nor the report make any reference to the facts upon which they are based. I desire to know something in relation to it. Will the gentleman make a statement?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MACE] can make a statement, if not objected to.

There was no objection; and

Mr. MACE said: The case is based upon a contract made by Mr. Steenrod for the construction of the Cumberland road. It is similar in its character to a very large class of cases which have been before the Congress of the United States for many years past. The evidence is so conflicting, and the facts so hard to be got at, that after much consideration and a full investigation of everything appertaining to it, the committee satisfied themselves that they could not, with the facts before them, come to any decision which would with any certainty do justice either to the petitioner or to the Government; and they were not without precedent in the recommendation they have made. Upon looking into the records of Congress they found that perhaps a large majority of the cases relating to contracts for the construction of the Cumberland road had been referred to a special commission. This being the case, they were of the opinion that the best course to be taken was for the Secretary of War to create an umpire to collect all the evidence, and adjudicate upon the question; and that by this course justice might be done to the petitioner and to the Government.

From the evidence before us, it is my belief that the amount involved in the controversy cannot properly be awarded at more than $7,000. No umpire, I think, could give Mr. Steenrod more than that; and very likely he would be justified in deciding that the petitioner was not entitled to anything. These are substantially the facts upon which the bill and report were founded.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would inquire of the gentleman if this is one of a class of cases, or is it the only one of its kind?

Mr. MACE. I know of no other case of this kind pending before Congress. A number of cases similar in character to it were submitted many years ago to a commissioner of the name of Collyer, of Ohio.

Mr. HESTER. I object to the bill.

The bill accordingly was laid over.

House bill (No. 183) "for the relief of the Utica City Woolen Company" was next in order upon the Calendar.

From the report it appears that in 1851 the Utica City Woolen Company made a contract with Quartermaster Crossman to furnish broadcloth to be used in making clothing for the Army; and by the terms of that contract, the cloth was to be paid for from time to time, as delivered. The contract was faithfully fulfilled by the company; but by reason of the late period at which the appropriation bills passed Congress, the money was not ready until some time after the delivery of the cloth. The principal was paid, partly on the 20th of July, and partly on the 15th of September, 1852. The company claim interest from the time the goods were delivered, when the money became payable to them, until the time when it was actually paid. The bill proposes to grant them that interest.

There being no objection to the bill, it was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 184) "for the relief of Gray, McMurdo & Co." was next in order on the Calendar.

The bill provides for the payment of $570 70 to Cray, McMurdo & Co., of New Orleans, for interest on moneys advanced by them in 1850 to the Quartermaster's Department.

It appeared from the report, that in July, 1850, the petitioners advanced to Thomas F. Hunt, Deputy Quartermaster General at New Orleans, $57,000, for which they received drafts on the Quartermaster General in Washington city. At the time the drafts became due, the appropriations for the Quartermaster's Department were exhausted, and they were consequently not paid until the 7th of October, 1850. The bill proposes to pay the petitioners interest at the rate of six per cent. from the time when the drafts became due until the time when they were paid.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would inquire of the gentleman who reported that bill at what rate of discount these bills were negotiated, if any?

Mr. EDGERTON. There was no evidence before the committee that the bills were discounted at any other rate than the usual rate of discount. The drafts were at thirty, sixty, and one hundred and twenty days, if I recollect rightly. The parties who held the drafts claimed interest from the date of the advance. The committee have allowed interest from the time the drafts became due until they were paid. They were not paid sooner, simply because there was no appropriation. After the appropriation bills passed in 1850, the drafts were presented and paid. The committee allow interest from the time of presentation to the time of payment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There was exchange enough to cover the interest.

Mr. EDGERTON. It was a simple commercial transaction.

There being no objection, the bill was then laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The following bills came up next in order, but were objected to, as indicated below:

No. 188. "A bill for the relief of Anthony G. Willis, deceased." [Objected to by Mr. MAURICE.]

No. 189. "A bill for the relief of John S. Jones and William H. Russell, surviving partners of Brown, Russell & Co." [Objected to by Mr. BRIDGES.]

The following bill came up next in order:

No. 190. "A bill for the relief of William Hawkins."

The bill was read through.

Mr. FAULKNER. There is no report accompanying the bill. There was a report made some years ago, which, if adopted, would have involved the Government in a much greater expenditure than is provided for in the bill now under consideration. At the order of an officer of the Government, he delivered at Fort Johnson, in North Carolina, one hundred and thirty cords of wood—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] that there has not been a report made in this case.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I object.

The bill was therefore passed over.

The bill next in order for consideration was House bill (No. 191) "for the relief of George W. Gibson."

The Clerk read the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of the petitioner, George W. Gibson, on the pension roll, at the rate of six dollars per month.

The report stated that the petitioner had enlisted as a private soldier, in company B, first regiment of the United States dragoons; that he served with the American troops in the late war with Mexico; that he suffered much from exposure, which finally resulted in liver complaint and chronic diarrhea, which completely disabled him. There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The bill next in order was House bill (No. 192) "for the relief of Parmelia Slavin, widow of John Blue, deceased."

The Clerk read the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension roll the name of Parmelia Slavin, at the rate of four dollars per month, to commence on the 1st of January, 1848; the same to be in full satisfaction of all claims to pension as widow of William Slavin.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

Mr. LETCHER. I believe that we have got through all the reports that are printed; I therefore move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Virginia that there are manuscript reports here of all the bills on the Calendar for today.

Mr. LETCHER. Exactly so; and nobody in the House had an opportunity to examine one of them; and we have to act upon the bills on the mere reading of the reports at the Clerk's desk, which are imperfectly heard in the Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia move that the Committee now rise?

Mr. LETCHER. Yes; I move that the Committee rise, and report to the House.

The question was put, and was not agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The last bill was not disposed of, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not.

Mr. JONES. This seems to be a new case, and there seems to be a new principle established in it. This bill provides for giving a pension to a woman who was the widow of one Slavin, but now the widow of one Blue. How long did the first husband, Slavin, render service?—

Mr. HENDRICKS. Let the report be read, and it will show the facts.

The report was then read, from which it appeared, that on the 15th day of March, 1848, the Committee on Invalid Pensions made a favorable report, and brought in a bill for the relief of the petitioner; also another report and bill on the 13th day of March, 1850, which failed for want of time. That in 1852 another report and bill from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was made for his relief. An examination of the papers accompanying the petition shows that John Blue was a private in the twenty-third regiment of the New York infantry during the late war with Great Britain; that he was in the battle of Queenstown on the 13th day of October, 1813, and in that action lost his right arm. He remained in the Army until the 5th day of July, 1815, when he was honorably discharged. He was married to the petitioner in the year 1814, and died December 23, 1823. He received his bounty land, and applied for a pension, but never received it, having failed to prove that he was the man who lost his arm in said battle. On application to the Commissioner of Pensions, by the petitioner in 1843, for the pension due her late husband, that officer, in a letter upon the subject addressed to J. P. Ballow, states, among other things, that John Blue was wounded at Queenstown, and would have received his pension had he furnished the information required of him; but that the Department could do nothing without a special act of Congress.

No objection being made, the bill was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The next bill in order upon the Calendar was House bill (No. 193) "for the relief of Alton Nelson."

The bill provides for placing his name upon the roll of invalid pensioners, at eight dollars a month, from the 1st day of January, 1853.

The report was then read.

Mr. LETCHER objected, and the bill was passed over.

The next bill coming up in order was House bill (No. 194) "for the relief of Silas Champion."

The bill and report were read.

It appears in this case that the petitioner volunteered in 1814 to aid in the defense of Plattsburg; that he was in the battle at Saranac; that he aided in driving the enemy back across the river Saranac; and, while in the discharge of this duty, that he suffered so great exposure as totally to disqualify him from manual labor. It appears, further, that he applied to the Commissioner of Pensions for relief, and was refused, upon the ground that he had not been regularly mustered into the service of the United States; and, therefore, the committee thinking that he was entitled to relief, report a bill granting him, as an invalid pensioner, eight dollars per month, to commence from the first day of January, 1852.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The Committee next proceeded to consider House bill (No. 195) "for the relief of Sarah K. Jenks, and the legal representatives of Hartshorne R. Thomas, in the matter of the brig Jane."

The bill and report were read through by the Clerk.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is not necessary to read that report any further. This belongs to a class of cases, amounting to some thirty-five or forty millions of dollars, which were adjudicated by the commission of 1822-'23. We had better at least postpone this bill until the report is printed. I therefore object to it.

House bill (No. 196) "for the relief of Gilbert C. Russell," was next in order on the Calendar.

It provides that there shall be paid to Gilbert C. Russell, of the State of Alabama, the sum of $20,000, provided that that sum shall be received by him as full satisfaction of all claims and demands of every description in his favor against the Government of the United States, growing out of, or in any manner connected with the construction of the fort at Mobile Point, Alabama.

Mr. READY. The report accompanying that bill is a very long one. The claim consisted of three items; the committee report in favor of one of those items, and against the other two. It is only necessary to read so much of the report now as relates to the item provided for in the bill.

Mr. MACDONALD. Is that report printed? The CHAIRMAN. It is not. It is here in manuscript.

Mr. MACDONALD. Then I must object to the bill.

The following bills came up next in order, and were objected to as indicated below:

No. 199. "A bill for the relief of Thomas C. Greene." [Objected to by Mr. WALSH.]

S. No. 76. "An act authorizing Victor Morass to relinquish certain lands and to enter the same quantity elsewhere." [Objected to by Mr. WALSH.]

The following bill came up next in order:

No. 200. "A bill to confirm to Hercules L. Dousman his title to farm lot No. 32, adjoining the town of Prairie Du Chien, in the State of Wisconsin."

The bill and report of the committee accompanying it were read. The character of the claim and the provisions of the bill may be seen by reference to yesterday's proceedings.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House.

The bill next in order for consideration was House bill (No. 201) "for the relief of Aaron Stafford."

The Clerk read the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the roll of invalid pensioners the name of Aaron Stafford, and pay him at the rate of fifteen dollars per month for the term of his natural life, commencing on 4th March, 1848; provided that the said Secretary shall deduct such sums as said Stafford has received as an invalid pensioner since the 4th of March, 1848; and provided, further, that all bills heretofore reported for the relief of said Stafford are hereby repealed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Let the report be read.

The report was then read, from which it appears that the petitioner held a commission as adjutant on the 13th day of October, 1812, in the sixteenth detached regiment of the militia of New York, in the service of the United States, during the last war with Great Britain; that in that capacity he volunteered on that day, with about two hundred men, to cross over from Lewiston to Queenstown, and that he was engaged in the storming of Queenstown Heights, and in that battle on that day; that while he was so engaged he received four severe and dangerous wounds—one above the right temple, from a musket ball; another from a bullet passing through his right thigh; a third from a musket ball, in the left shoulder; and a fourth from a grape shot, in his left thigh. But, notwithstanding the first three wounds, he continued fighting, and urging on his men, until struck in the left thigh with a grape shot, as stated. That the wound received by the grape shot was so severe that it knocked him down the banks of the Niagara river, about one third of the way to the water, and was only saved from being precipitated into the river by grasping with his right hand a shrub, and thereby saving his life; and that in the general surrender of all the forces on that field he was helped from his perilous position, and delivered as a prisoner of war to the enemy.

It appears from an affidavit of Lemuel Pettingall, that he, said Pettingall, was a captain in the New York militia, and volunteered to, and crossed at the time, and was engaged in said battle; and he testifies that the said Stafford was an adjutant in the said war with Great Britain, and was one of the two hundred men from the detached regiment of New York militia who volunteered to cross, as is hereinbefore stated; and he further states, "that the said Stafford was a man at that time of unusual bodily strength and activity and superior courage, and was of incalculable service in keeping up the spirit and discipline of said regiment always, and was a man who did as much as the efficient General Stephen Van Rensselaer himself, and more than any other man, to induce the officers and men to volunteer and cross, and to encourage and embolden the whole during the fight on Queenstown Heights." * * * "That said Pettingall was himself wounded and taken prisoner, and saw said Stafford brought into the camp of the enemy upon a blanket, and covered with blood from his wounds."

Captain Joseph Westcott, who was also engaged in said battle, testifies "that he was present, about three weeks after the said battle, in the rooms of said Stafford, in Lewiston, and saw the surgeon general of the militia, Doctor Brown, dress said Stafford's wounds; that two of said wounds—one on the left shoulder, and one on front of the left thigh—were very deep, and of an alarming aspect, and he doubted at that time whether said Stafford would survive them."

It appears from the affidavit of Captain Joseph Westcott, that "said wounds had deprived said Stafford permanently of that strength and energy for which before he was so conspicuous, and have so injured said Stafford's bodily powers as to disable him totally for military service, or the business of civil life, and to prevent him from earning a livelihood by labor."

Mr. MAURICE. I have no desire to object, but I wish to ask the gentleman who has charge of this bill, if Congress has not already granted him a pension upon the strength of this very report, and whether he is not now receiving a pension?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, he is receiving a pension, and that is his misfortune. If he had not received a pension under a special act of Congress, the Department could grant him adequate relief. But Congress, some time since, I do not remember when, granted him a pension at the rate of ten dollars per month, when, according to the rank he held in the army, he was entitled to $15 or $17. One committee says $15 and another $17. The Committee on Pensions cannot grant him full pay, because his pension is under a special act. This bill proposes to increase it, and make it what it should be, if the special act had not been passed.

Mr. MAURICE. I think it had better lie over.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the gentleman will hear the bill read again he will see that there is no difficulty in the matter. I think it is a meritorious case.

The bill was again read through, and laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The bill next in order upon the Calendar was House bill (No. 202) "for the relief of Hezekiah Johnson, of the town of Bridgewater, in the State of Vermont."

It appears in this case that the petitioner, in the month of July, 1813, enlisted in the forty-fifth regiment, at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, to serve during the war; that he continued in the service until May, 1814; and that during that time he was compelled to serve as an artilleryman in Fort Sullivan, under command of Lieutenant Greenough; and that while there he received a severe injury, while engaged in firing the cannon, by being thrown from the platform by a rope connected with the cannon; and as he could no longer perform the duties of a soldier he was discharged. That it was sufficiently established that the witnesses were creditable, and that the petitioner was a worthy man. The committee think he is entitled to a special act for his relief.

There was no objection, and the bill was accordingly laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The Calendar now having been gone through,

Mr. DEAN moved that the committee rise and report such bills as had been laid aside for that purpose.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] to withdraw his objection to House bill (No. 193) for the relief of Alton Nelson. It is a very meritorious claim, and the bill ought not to be delayed in its passage.

Mr. LETCHER. It may be a very meritorious claim for aught I know, but the Clerk is not able to read the report; there is no opportunity to explain; and the House cannot understand the subject upon which they are called upon to act. I cannot withdraw the objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. If I have it in my power to do so, I desire to withdraw my objection to House bill (No. 180) for the relief of William B. Edwards. I was at the moment debating a point connected with it, and on that account the objection was considered as made. I now wish that objection to be withdrawn, because I have discovered that it comes within a rule adopted by the House, and I do not wish to make this an exception to the class of cases to which it belongs. I think the rule itself wrong, but I will take some other occasion than this to make the point. It was in reference to this point that the objection was made, and I hope I shall be permitted to withdraw it.

Mr. DEAN. Is not my motion, that the Committee rise, in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order.

Mr. DEAN. Then I insist upon the motion that the committee rise, and report such cases as have been laid aside.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to.

The committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the several bills on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report, with amendments, the following bills:

House bill (No. 54) "for the relief of Madison Parton;"

House bill (No. 178) "for the relief of Benjamin Rowe."

And that they had directed him to report, without amendment, and with a recommendation that they do pass, House bills of the following titles:

No. 120. "A bill for the relief of Henry N. Halstead."

No. 121. "A bill for the relief of Benjamin Hammond, of the State of New York."

No. 122. "A bill for the relief of Henry J. Snow, of Rome, in the State of New York."

No. 124. "A bill for the relief of Lemuel Hudson."

No. 126. "A bill for the relief of George S. Clafin."

No. 127. "A bill for the relief of James F. Green."

No. 128. "A bill for the relief of Thomas Frazer."

No. 129. "A bill for the relief of Cornelius H. Latham."

No. 130. "A bill for the relief of Samuel W. Brady."

No. 134. "A bill for the relief of Fayette Mauzy and Robert G. Ward."

No. 170. "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of the late John E. Bispham."

No. 173. "A bill for the relief of Mrs. Helen McKay, widow of the late Colonel Aeneas McKay, Deputy Quartermaster General United States Army."

No. 174. "A bill for the relief of D. C. Cash and Giles W. Ellis."

No. 110. "A bill authorizing the payment of the balance of the property accounts between the United States and the State of New York for military stores in the war of 1812."

No. 175. "A bill for the relief of John O. Mears."

No. 177. "A bill for the relief of Lyman N. Cook."

No. 179. "A bill for the relief of Emelie Hooe, widow of Captain Hooe."

No. 181. "A bill for the relief of John Hamilton."

No. 183. "A bill for the relief of the Utica Steam Woolen Company."

No. 184. "A bill for the relief of Gray, McMurdo & Co."

No. 191. "A bill for the relief of George W. Gibson."

No. 192. "A bill for the relief of Parmelia Slavin, widow of John Blue, deceased."

No. 194. "A bill to provide a pension for Silas Champion."

No. 200. "A bill to confirm to Hercules L. Dousman his title to farm lot No. 32, adjoining the town of Prairie Du Chien, in the State of Wisconsin."

No. 201. "A bill for the relief of Aaron Stafford."

No. 202. "A bill for the relief of Hezekiah Johnson, of the town of Bridgewater, in the State of Vermont."

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House to vote on all the bills to which no amendments have been proposed?

Many Voices. "Yes," "Yes."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object. Let us vote on one at a time.

Mr. HUNT. I move an adjournment.

[Loud Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HUNT. Well, I withdraw it.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. EWING. I hope the gentleman will allow me to move an adjournment till Monday.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order at any time.

Mr. EWING. I move then that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. On that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

The House was divided on the demand for the yeas and nays; and there were—yeas 25, noes 118.

Mr. WALKER. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. JONES. I call for tellers on the motion.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. EWING's motion; and it was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that all the bills upon which separate votes are not asked be passed en masse.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Let us have a separate vote upon each.

The following bill was reported to the House:

No. 54. "A bill for the relief of Madison Parton."

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole have reported an amendment to that bill, to strike out all relating to the payment of interest.

Mr. HILLYER. I respectfully ask the attention of the House for one moment to the amendment which has been proposed by the Committee of the Whole House. I understand that the question first recurs on agreeing to that amendment. I dislike to trouble the House with the consideration of so small a matter; but it is of some importance to my constituent who is claiming this amount from the Government; and in his behalf I beg leave to state the ground upon which I think it is just and equitable that he should be allowed interest. His services were rendered in 1837; and the reason he has not been able to settle his claim with Government is, that by the neglect of its officers, the public rolls returned to the War Department did not show the date of his discharge nor the length of his services.

These rolls, by the decision of the Department, have been held to be conclusive as to the amount claimed; and it is because of this decision that he has been compelled to resort to this House for redress. Inasmuch as his inability, then, to establish his claim against the Government for the time his services were rendered is to be attributable to the fault and the neglect of the officers of the Government, I think it is right that we should allow him interest. The claim will amount to only some fifty dollars. I trust that the amendment of the Committee of the Whole will be voted down.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The principle of paying interest on claims is one that has not been recognized by the Government. This may be a hard case, and the gentleman from Georgia seems to think that it is; but if he will inquire at the Third Auditor's office he will find that there have been one hundred cases presented to it, as meritorious as this one, where soldiers lost their horses in the Florida war. They remained for years without receiving pay for their horses, and yet, when paid, they obtained no interest on their claims. The presumption is that the Government pays what is due, and when it is due; but she has never paid interest except by special contract.

Mr. HILLYER. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit me, I will reply that this is very different from a claim of unliquidated demand. The claim of compensation for a horse is very different from the claim for a debt actually due for services rendered. The claim we have now before us rests upon contract. The amount is specified by law. The amount is due just as much as if it were due on a promissory note. It is a liquidated demand. It is not a claim dependent upon adjudication and trial, upon hearing testimony and of proof; but it is liquidated, and if between individuals, would bear interest by law. It is very different from the class of claims referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee. I will repeat, in conclusion, that the reason this claim was not settled by the Department, was owing to the neglect of the officers of the Government in failing to return the rolls with this man's name upon them.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I rise simply for the purpose of responding to the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee upon the question of the payment of interest. The question is, if I understand the gentleman from Georgia, to fix the interest due on the debt on the Government. The gentleman from Tennessee contends that it is not the policy of the Government on pay interest at all. I do not see the difference between the Government paying interest and an individual doing the same thing. If, by the tardy legislation of this Government, individuals are deprived of their just claims, I can see no reason why the Government should not pay the interest that has legally accrued on these claims upon proper proof.

I know nothing of the character of the claim, nor do I design to advocate the right to interest that this particular claimant has, for I am not apprised as to the delay which this claim has met in its progress from time to time. But, sir, my opposition is to the principle laid down by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] with respect to the Government paying interest on those meritorious claims which have been lying over from time to time, simply because Congress has failed to reach those bills. If the individuals are thus deprived, because of the slow and tardy manner in which Congress has taken up these bills, of their just claims, it is certainly nothing but fair and right that they should be paid interest upon them.

It may not be the policy of the Government to pay interest on such claims; but it is not on that account the less fair and proper that it should. It is said that the Government would be committed to the policy of paying interest in like cases. I, for one, am perfectly willing to commit the Government to the payment of interest on all claims which have been delayed, not because of the negligence of individuals to present them, but from the slow and tardy manner in which Congress generally reaches matters of this character.

Mr. HILLYER. Will the gentleman permit me to explain?

Mr. GREENWOOD yielded the floor.

Mr. HILLYER. Within my knowledge this claim has been pending before Congress for six years. Long prior to that time it was pending before the Departments. The claimant is a poor man, an ignorant man. Some time after the claim became due he did not know how to proceed to have it adjudicated. As soon as he could ascertain the proper Department to apply to, to have the claim adjusted, he made application. And it has been all this time pending either before the Departments or before Congress. It has been for six years pending before Congress. During the last session the Committee on Claims, though unanimously concurring in the report made to the House, were not able to make a report. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was then taken on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN decided that the vote was in the affirmative.

Several MEMBERS. "Divide!" "Divide!"

Mr. LETCHER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire the amendment to be reported.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

Strike out the following words: "Together with the interest thereon from the said 8th day of February, 1848."

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. It is too late, as the Chair has announced the result.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask for tellers upon the adoption of the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. LATHAM and VAIL appointed.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were, upon a division—yeas 50, nays 71.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question was then taken upon the adoption of the amendment; and the tellers reported—aye 59, noes 74.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ORR. I move to lay the bill upon the table, and upon it I call the yeas and nays.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the House adjourn. The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the House, according to previous order, adjourned till Monday next at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, January 30, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. BROWN a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, in the place of Mr. ADAMS, who, at his own request, was excused from further service.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information in relation to the wreck of the steamer San Francisco; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Also, a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting copies of such accounts as have been rendered by persons intrusted with the disbursement of money, &c., for the benefit of the Indians, from July 1, 1851, to June 30, 1852, inclusive; together with a list of the names of all persons to whom money and goods have been delivered within the same period, &c., in obedience to an act passed June 30, 1834, entitled "An act for the organization of the Department of Indian Affairs;" which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a report of the proceedings of a meeting of citizens of New York, held at the Tabernacle in Broadway, in favor of the adoption of measures to secure to American citizens abroad the rights of religious worship; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALLEN presented resolutions of the Legislature of Rhode Island, recommending the Senators and Representatives of that State in Congress to prevent the passage of any law tending to disturb the provision of the act of March 6, 1820, commonly called the "Missouri compromise act," in regard to slavery; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented eleven petitions of citizens of Philadelphia, praying that the United States Mint may not be removed from that city; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, Delaware, and New Jersey, praying a further appropriation for the piers at Reedy Island; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a memorial of citizens of Brunswick and its vicinity, in the State of Maine, praying a reduction in the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a memorial of merchants and others, of Portland, Maine, praying that the custom-house at that place may be rebuilt, it having been destroyed by fire. The memorialists state that no adequate accommodations for the transaction of custom-house business in that place at present exist. The memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WADE presented three petitions of citizens of Ohio, praying that the unsold public lands in that State may be granted for the use of public schools therein; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRIGHT presented the petition of George W. Yerby, Horace M. Dewey, and others, in favor of the construction of a passenger railway from Georgetown, District of Columbia, through Pennsylvania avenue, to the navy-yard; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of Newton and its vicinity, in the State of Massachusetts, praying a reduction in the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MALLORY presented the memorial of Thomas B. Huger, John Quincy Adams, and Bayse N. Westcott, officers of the Navy, praying to be indemnified for clothing lost on board the United States steamer Hunter, wrecked on the coast of Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, the petition of the widow and children of John M. Baker, late Consul at Rio de Janeiro, praying compensation for diplomatic services; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BRIGHT presented a petition of John C. Rives, W. W. Seaton, R. W. Latham, and others, citizens of Washington, praying that George W. Yerby and others may be authorized to construct a railroad from Georgetown, District of Columbia, along Pennsylvania avenue, to the navy-yard, Washington; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a petition of the citizens of Cincinnati, praying the construction of a canal around the falls of the Ohio river on the Indiana side; which was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. WELLER presented the memorial of Horatio G. Gibson, First Lieutenant in the Third Artillery of the United States Army, praying that extra pay may be extended to the officers, sailors, and marines serving in California, from 8th May, 1846, to 1st July, 1850; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GWIN presented a petition of officers of the Army, praying an increase of the commutation price of the army ration; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented four petitions of citizens of the State of Iowa, praying that a grant of land may be made to aid in the construction of the Philadelphia, Fort Wayne, and Platte Valley air-line railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FISH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn and New York, praying Congress to enter into a contract with Christian Hansen, for the transportation of the mails, by steamships, from that city to certain ports in Europe; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, the petition of Calvin K. Averill, administrator of Genevieve Victor, widow of Lieutenant Felix Victor, praying for commutation pay of Lieutenant Victor, and for pension due the widow, for the benefit of their grandchildren; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. FISH. I desire also to present the petition of John W. Griffiths and Richard Norris, asking for the passage of a law as to the registry of steamboats which they are about building, differently from the provisions of the present act, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Commerce. Inasmuch as the petition contains some very interesting statements in regard to the effects of the present law as to the registry of tonnage, some of which are suggested as causes which may possibly have led to the recent disasters at sea, I ask that it may be printed.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and the motion to print it was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HUNTER presented the petition of Elizabeth Monroe, praying to have her pension extended and renewed; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the petition of James M. Goggin, praying to be allowed additional compensation for his services as special mail agent for California, and for remuneration for expenses incurred in the discharge of his duties; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented the petition of James Pool, praying the reimbursement of an amount of money paid by him for supplies of the Shawnee tribe of Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, the petition of James Pool, praying interest on his accounts from the time when certified by the Second Auditor to be due to the time of their payment; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented a petition of the citizens of Johnson county, Iowa, praying a grant of land to said State to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lyons, on the Mississippi river, by Iowa City, to Council Bluffs, on the Missouri river; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented additional documents in relation to the claim of August Kleim to a pension; which, with the petition on the files of the Senate, were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEBASTIAN presented a supplemental memorial of Amos and John E. Kendall, praying the reference of the question of the legal or equitable obligation of the United States to grant them the relief prayed for, to the circuit court of the District of Columbia, with a right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; which, with the papers on file on the subject, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. NORRIS presented the memorial of John C. F. Salomon, praying an act of incorporation for the purpose of supplying pure water to the cities of Washington and Georgetown, District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GWIN presented documents in relation to the establishment of a port of entry at San Pedro, California; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EXTENSION OF BOUNTY LAND LAWS.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I present two memorials, signed by citizens of Blair county, Pennsylvania, praying that the provisions of the bounty land law may be extended so as to give each soldier of the war of 1812 one hundred and sixty acres of land, which I move may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHIELDS. That subject has heretofore always been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and not to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I presented memorials of this nature at the last session of Congress, and they were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, but that committee took no action upon them. I entertain the hope that, as they related to the soldiers of the war of 1812, they would be more likely to receive favorable consideration at the hands of the committee of which my honorable friend from Illinois is chairman, than they received at the last session from the Committee on Public Lands. I hope, therefore, that my friend will permit them to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHIELDS. I thank the honorable Senator for the compliment which he pays to the Committee on Military Affairs, but I believe it has been uniformly the practice to refer this subject to the Committee on Public Lands. I do not see any necessity for departing from the usual course, and therefore I move that these memorials be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT. The question will first be upon the motion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania to refer the memorials to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them back, with sundry amendments:

Bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way, and a donation of public land, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Algiers, on the Mississippi river, to the Sabine river in said State.

Bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way, and a donation of public land, for the purpose of locating and reconstructing a railroad from Shreveport to the mouth of the Mississippi river.

Bill granting the right of way, and making a grant of land, to the State of Arkansas, to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point on the Mississippi, in the region of Gaines's Landing, via Camden, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas.

Bill granting further time for satisfying claims for bounty lands for military services in the war of 1812, with Great Britain, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Territories, to which was referred a bill to aid the Territory of Minnesota in constructing a railroad for military, postal, and other purposes, reported it back, without amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way, and a donation of public land, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from New Orleans to the Mississippi State line, in the direction of the town of Jackson, in said State, reported it back, with an amendment, in the form of a substitute, for the bill.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill granting the right of way, and a donation of the public land, to the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama, to aid in the construction of certain railroads therein, reported it back, with an amendment, in the form of a substitute, for the bill.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill giving further time for satisfying claims for bounty land for military services in the war of 1812, reported it back, without amendment.

Mr. DAWSON. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of the Petersburg volunteers, praying the payment of a balance due them for services in the war of 1812, have instructed me to make an adverse report. As the report gives the reasons for this action, I ask that it may be printed, and I wish to call the attention of the Virginia Senators to it. I ask them to read and examine it when printed. If its statements are not correct I hope those Senators will be kind enough to inform me of it.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Henry K. Brown, asking for fourteen pieces of brass cannon, to enable him to cast an equestrian statue of Washington, to be erected in the city of New York, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Dempsey Pitman, praying compensation for military services during the Indian war in Florida in the year 1838, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of William P. S. Sanger, praying compensation for performing the duties of engineer at the Gosport navy-yard, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a bill to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the district of Massachusetts, reported it back, with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Jehiel Brooks, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, on the ground that an adverse report had already been made, in which the Senate had concurred.

The order was accordingly made.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of Henry C. Miller, Philip W. Thompson, and Jesse B. Turley, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred documents in relation to the claim of B. M. Van Derveer to a pension for the services of his father, Albert Van Derveer, in the revolutionary war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth R. Drane, widow of Anthony Drane, formerly an officer in the Army, praying a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred a bill to relinquish the reversionary interest of the United States to a certain reservation therein mentioned, and to confirm the title of Charles G. Gunter thereto, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a petition of William Rees, praying to be allowed to locate 10,000 acres of land in one tract, for a normal settlement, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of George Felker, praying that the children of George Felker, his father, may be paid the amount of pension due him at the time of his death, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. STUART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill granting the right of way, and making a grant of land, to the State of Michigan, to aid in the construction of the Oakland and Ottawa railroad, from Pontiac to Lake Michigan, and branches from Corunna and Grand Rapids to the Straits of Mackinaw, and a continuous branch from thence to Montreal river, in said State, reported back the same with an amendment, in the form of a substitute, for the bill.

Mr. BRIGHT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the petition of David English, and others, of Georgetown, District of Columbia, members of a joint-stock association for the manufacture of gas, praying an act of incorporation, reported a bill to incorporate the Georgetown Gas Light Company; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a bill making a grant of land to the State of Iowa, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State, reported it back, with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of the city council of the city of Dubuque, Iowa, praying the donation of a lot of ground in that city to be set apart as a cemetery, reported a bill to relinquish certain lands to the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Lieutenant A. J. Williamson, praying indemnity for his baggage, &c., lost by the destruction of a transport vessel, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill, for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIT, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Campan, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SEWARD, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the petition of William R. Nevins, asking an extension of his patent, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WELLER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Helen McKay, widow and administratrix of Colonel Aeneas McKay, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for her relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill to enable the United States to take the lands and materials necessary for the construction of the Washington aqueduct, within the District of Columbia; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

STEAMER FANNY.

Mr. SEWARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the petition and papers in the case of J. Wilson Smith, praying compensation for the illegal detention of the steamer Fanny, by the district attorney and custom-house officers at Savannah, reported a joint resolution for the relief of the owners of the steamer Fanny; which was read a first and second time, and

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

It proposes to authorize the Secretary of State and Attorney General to examine the papers in the case, and to ascertain whether the legal rights of the petitioner were violated, whereby he received damages, and to allow him such indemnity by way of demurrage as shall appear to be just.

No amendment being made, the joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

QUINCY, ILLINOIS.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill from the House to constitute Quincy, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery, reported it back without amendment; and

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MALLORY, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for the construction of a suitable building for the accommodation of the district court of the United States at Key West, in the State of Florida; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill from the House of Representatives giving further time for satisfying claims for bounty lands, and for other purposes, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

EXTENSION OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

The bill from the House of Representatives granting the franking privilege to the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, and the assistant in charge of the office of the said Coast Survey, was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to consider that bill at this time. I think it will consume no more time than will be occupied by the reading of the bill, which is a very brief one. It proposes simply to give the Superintendent of the Coast Survey the privilege of receiving and transmitting, free of postage, letters and documents on the official business of his office. It will remove it from the Treasury Department, where this franking is now done, and this will be a great relief to that Department.

The bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

On motion by Mr. BAYARD, the Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution, adopted by the House of Representatives on the 18th instant:

Resolved, That a select committee, composed of nine members on the part of the House of Representatives, be appointed by the Speaker to join such committee as may be appointed by the Senate, to whom shall be referred the resolution of the House proposing an amendment of the Constitution in the mode of electing the President and Vice President of the United States, with instructions to take that matter and the subject generally into consideration, and to report upon the same in such manner as to them may seem most expedient.

The Senate concurred in the resolution; and

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was ordered that the committee on the part of the Senate consist of five members, and be appointed by the President pro tempore; who appointed Messrs. BAYARD, PEARCE, TOUCEY, FOOT, and GWIN.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the petition of ship-owners and others of St. George, Maine, relating to a light in Tenants' Harbor, for the purpose of presentation in the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. SUMNER, it was Ordered, That the petition of the heirs of Abraham Hunt be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. SUMNER, it was Ordered, That the petition of Andrew Johonnet, administrator of William Johonnet, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, it was Ordered, That the memorial of John C. McFerran be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. BRODHEAD, it was Ordered, That the petition of John P. McElderry be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition of James H. Stimpson, son and executor of James Stimpson, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

On motion by Mr. BRIGHT, it was Ordered, That the memorials and resolutions of State Legislatures, the memorials of incorporated companies, proceedings and memorials of citizens, and other papers relating to the Louisville and Portland Canal, and to the construction of a canal on the Indiana side of the falls of the Ohio, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Edward P. Torrey, legal representative of Joseph Torrey, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. STUART, it was Ordered, That the petition of the legal representatives of Henry Comer be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SAN PEDRO, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. GWIN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making San Pedro, in the State of California, a port of entry.

DUBUQUE, IOWA.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a port of delivery at Dubuque, Iowa.

REV. MR. KING.

Mr. CASS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to transmit to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, copies of the communications from Mr. Marsh, the American Minister at Constantinople, in relation to the case of the Rev. Mr. King.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. PRATT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to incorporate the National Hotel Company, of Washington city.

NEBRASKA TERRITORY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill to organize the Territory of Nebraska.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, when I proposed on Tuesday last, that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of the bill to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, it was my purpose only to occupy ten or fifteen minutes in explanation of its provisions. I desired to refer to two points: first, as to those provisions relating to the Indians; and second, to those which might be supposed to bear upon the question of slavery.

The committee, in drafting this bill, had in view the great anxiety which had been expressed by some members of the Senate to protect the rights of the Indians, and prevent infringements upon them. By the provisions of the bill, I think we have so clearly succeeded in that respect as to obviate all possible objection upon that score. The bill itself provides that it shall not operate upon any of the rights of the lands of the Indians; nor shall they be included within the limits of those Territories, until they shall, by treaty with the United States, expressly consent to come under the operations of the act, and be incorporated within the limits of the Territories. This provision certainly is broad enough, clear enough, explicit enough, to protect all the rights of the Indians as to their persons and their property.

Upon the other point—that pertaining to the question of slavery in the Territories—it was the intention of the committee to be equally explicit.

We took the principles established by the compromise act of 1850 as our guide, and intended to make each and every provision of the bill accord with those principles. Those measures established and rest upon the great principle of self-government—that the people should be allowed to decide the questions of their domestic institutions for themselves, subject only to such limitations and restrictions as are imposed by the Constitution of the United States, instead of having them determined by an arbitrary or geographical line.

The original bill reported by the committee, as a substitute for the bill introduced by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. DODGE], was believed to have accomplished this object. The amendment which was subsequently reported by us was only designed to render that clear and specific which seemed, in the minds of some, to admit of doubt and misconstruction. In some parts of the country the original substitute was deemed and construed to be an annulment or a repeal of what has been known as the Missouri compromise, while in other parts it was otherwise construed. As the object of the committee was to conform to the principles established by the compromise measures of 1850, and to carry those principles into effect in the Territories, we thought it was better to recite in the bill precisely what we understood to have been accomplished by those measures, viz: That the Missouri compromise, having been superseded by the legislation of 1850, has become inoperative, and hence we propose to leave the question to the people of the States and the Territories, subject only to the limitations and provisions of the Constitution.

Sir, this is all that I intended to say, if the question had been taken up for consideration on Tuesday last; but since that time occurrences have transpired which compel me to go more fully into the discussion. It will be borne in mind that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. CHASE] then objected to the consideration of the bill, and asked for its postponement until this day, on the ground that there had not been time to understand and consider its provisions; and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] suggested that the postponement should be for one week, for that purpose. These suggestions seeming to be reasonable to Senators around me, I yielded to their request, and consented to the postponement of the bill until this day.

Sir, little did I suppose at the time that I granted that act of courtesy to those two Senators, that they had drafted and published to the world a document, over their own signatures, in which they arraigned me as having been guilty of a criminal betrayal of my trust, as having been guilty of an act of bad faith, and been engaged in an atrocious plot against the cause of free government. Little did I suppose that those two Senators had been guilty of such conduct when they called upon me to grant that courtesy, to give them an opportunity of investigating the substitute reported from the committee. I have since discovered that on that very morning the National Era, the Abolition organ in this city, contained an address, signed by certain Abolition confederates, to the people, in which the bill is grossly misrepresented, in which the action of the members of the committee is grossly falsified, in which our motives are arraigned, and our characters calumniated. And, sir, what is more, I find that there was a postscript added to the address, published that very morning, in which the principal amendment reported by the committee was set out, and then coarse epithets applied to me by name. Sir, had I known those facts at the time I granted that act of indulgence, I should have responded to the request of those Senators in such terms as their conduct deserved, so far as the rules of the Senate, and a respect for my own character, would have permitted me to do. In order to show the character of this document—of which I shall have much to say in the course of my argument—I will read certain passages:

"We arraign this bill as a gross violation of a sacred pledge; as a criminal betrayal of precious rights; as part and parcel of an atrocious plot to exclude from a vast unoccupied region emigrants from the Old World, and free laborers from our own States, and convert it into a dreary region of despotism, inhabited by masters and slaves."

A SENATOR. By whom is the address signed.
MR. DOUGLAS. It is signed "S. P. Chase, Senator from Ohio; Charles Sumner, Senator from Massachusetts; J. R. Giddings and Edward Wade, Representatives from Ohio; Gerrit Smith, Representative from New York; Alexander De Witt, Representative from Massachusetts," including, as I understand, all the Representatives of the Abolition party in Congress.

Then speaking of the Committee on Territories, these confederates use this language:

"The pretenses, therefore, that the territory, covered by the positive prohibition of 1820, sustains a similar relation to slavery with that acquired from Mexico, covered by no prohibition except that of disputed constitutional or Mexican law, and that the compromises of 1850 require the incorporation of the pro slavery clauses of the Utah and New Mexico bill in the Nebraska act, are mere inventions, designed to cover up from public reprehension meditated bad faith."

"Mere inventions to cover up bad faith." Again: "Servile demagogues may tell you that the Union can be maintained only by submitting to the demands of slavery."

Then there is a postscript added, equally offensive to myself, in which I am mentioned by name. The address goes on to make an appeal to the Legislatures of the different States, to public meetings, and to ministers of the Gospel in their pulpits, to interpose and arrest the vile conduct which is about to be consummated by the Senators who are thus denounced. That address, sir, bears date Sunday, January 22, 1854. Thus it appears that, on the holy Sabbath, while other Senators were engaged in attending divine worship, these Abolition confederates were assembled in secret conclave, plotting by what means they should deceive the people of the United States, and prostrate the character of brother Senators. This was done on the Sabbath day, and by a set of politicians, to advance their own political and ambitious purposes, in the name of our holy religion.

But this is not all. It was understood from the newspapers that resolutions were pending before the Legislature of Ohio, proposing to express their opinions upon this subject. It was necessary for these confederates to get up some exposition of the question, by which they might facilitate the passage of the resolutions through that Legislature. Hence, you find that on the same morning that this document appears over the names of these confederates in the Abolition organ of this city, the same document appears in the New York papers—certainly in the Tribune, Times, and Evening Post—in which it is stated, by authority, that it is "signed by the Senators and a majority of the Representatives from the State of Ohio;" a statement which I have every reason to believe was utterly false, and known to be so at the time that these confederates appended it to the address. It was necessary, in order to carry out this work of deception, and to hasten the action of the Ohio Legislature, under a misapprehension, to state that it was signed, not only by the Abolition confederates, but by the whole Whig representation, and a portion of the Democratic representation in the other House from the State of Ohio.

MR. CHASE. Mr. President—

MR. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I do not yield the floor. A Senator who has violated all the rules of courtesy and propriety—who showed a consciousness of the character of the act he was doing by concealing from me all knowledge of the fact—who came to me with a smiling face, and the appearance of friendship, even after that document had been uttered—who could get up in the Senate and appeal to my courtesy in order to get time to give the document a wider circulation before its infamy could be exposed; such a Senator has no right to my courtesy upon this floor.

MR. CHASE. Mr. President, the Senator misstates the facts—

MR. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I decline to yield the floor.

MR. CHASE. And I shall make my denial pertinent when the time comes.

THE PRESIDENT. Order.

MR. DOUGLAS. Sir, if the Senator does interpose, in violation of the rules of the Senate, to a denial of the fact, it may be that I shall be able to nail that denial, as I shall the statements here which are over his own signature, as a base falsehood, and prove it by the solemn legislation of this country.

MR. CHASE. I call the Senator to order.

THE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois is certainly out of order.

MR. DOUGLAS. Then I will only say that I shall confine myself to this document, and prove its statements to be false by the legislation of the country. Certainly that is in order.

MR. CHASE. You cannot do it.

MR. DOUGLAS. The argument of this manifesto is predicated upon the assumption that the policy of the fathers of the Republic was to prohibit slavery in all the territory ceded by the old States to the Union and made United States territory, for the purpose of being organized into new States. I take issue upon that statement. Such was not the practice in the early history of the Government. It is true that in the territory northwest of the Ohio river slavery was prohibited by the ordinance of 1787; but it is also true that in the territory south of the Ohio river, to wit, the Territory of Tennessee, slavery was permitted and protected; and it is also true, that in the organization of the Territory of Mississippi, in 1798, the provisions of the ordinance of 1787 were applied to it, with the exception of the sixth article, which prohibited slavery. Then, sir, you find upon the statute-books under Washington and the early Presidents, provisions of law showing that in the southwestern territories the right to hold slaves was clearly implied or recognized, while in the northwest territories it was prohibited. The only conclusion that can be fairly and honestly drawn from that legislation is, that it was the policy of the fathers of the Republic to prescribe a line of demarcation between free territories and slaveholding territories by a natural or a geographical line, being sure to make that line correspond, as near as might be, to the laws of climate, of production, and probably of all those other causes that would control the institution and make it either desirable or undesirable to the people inhabiting the respective territories.

Sir, I wish you to bear in mind, too, that this geographical line established by the founders of the Republic, between free Territories and slave Territories, extended as far westward as our territory then reached, the object being to avoid all agitation upon the slavery question by settling that question forever, so far as our territory extended, which was then to the Mississippi river.

When, in 1803, we acquired from France the Territory known as Louisiana, it became necessary to legislate for the protection of the inhabitants residing therein. It will be seen by looking into the bill establishing the territorial government in 1805 for the Territory of New Orleans, embracing the same country now known as the State of Louisiana, that the ordinance of 1787 was expressly extended to that Territory, excepting the sixth section, which prohibited slavery. Then that act implied that the Territory of New Orleans was to be a slave-holding Territory by making that exception in the law. But, sir, when they came to form what was then called the Territory of Louisiana, subsequently known as the Territory of Missouri, north of the thirty-third parallel, they used different language. They did not extend the ordinance of 1787 to it at all. They first provided that it should be governed by laws made by the governor and the judges; and when, in 1812, Congress gave to that Territory, under the name of the Territory of Missouri, a territorial government, the people were allowed to do as they pleased upon the subject of slavery, subject only to the limitations of the Constitution of the United States. Now, what is the inference from that legislation? That slavery was, by implication, recognized south of the thirty-third parallel, and north of that the people were left to exercise their own judgment and do as they pleased upon the subject, without any implication for or against the existence of the institution.

This continued to be the condition of the country in the Missouri Territory up to 1820, when the celebrated act which is now called the Missouri compromise act was passed. Slavery did not exist in, nor was it excluded from, the country now known as Nebraska. There was no code of laws upon the subject of slavery either way: First, for the reason that slavery had never been introduced into Louisiana, and established by positive enactment. It had grown up there by a sort of common law, and been supported and protected. When a common law grows up, when an institution becomes established under a usage, it carries it so far as that usage actually goes, and no further. If it had been established by direct enactment, it might have carried it so far as the political jurisdiction extended; but, be that as it may, by the act of 1812, creating the Territory of Missouri, that Territory was allowed to legislate upon the subject of slavery as it saw proper, subject only to the limitations which I have stated; and the country not inhabited or thrown open to settlement was set apart as Indian country, and rendered subject to Indian laws. Hence the local legislation of the State of Missouri did not reach into that Indian country, but was excluded from it by the Indian code and Indian laws. The municipal regulations of Missouri could not go there until the Indian title had been extinguished, and the country thrown open to settlement. Such being the case, the only legislation in existence in Nebraska Territory at the time that the Missouri act passed, namely, the 6th of March, 1820, was a provision in effect, that the people should be allowed to do as they pleased upon the subject of slavery.

The Territory of Missouri having been left in that legal condition, positive opposition was made to the bill to organize a State government, with a view to its admission into the Union; and a Senator from my State, Mr. Jesse B. Thomas, introduced an amendment, known as the eighth section of the bill, in which it was provided that slavery should be prohibited north of 36° 30' north latitude, in all that country which we had acquired from France. What was the object of the enactment of that eighth section? Was it not to go back to the original policy of prescribing boundaries to the limitation of free institutions, and of slave institutions, by a geographical line, in order to avoid all controversy in Congress upon the subject? Hence they extended that geographical line through all the territory purchased from France, which was as far as our possessions then reached. It was not simply to settle the question on that piece of country, but it was to carry out a great principle, by extending that dividing line as far west as our territory went, and running it onward on each new acquisition of territory. True, the express enactment of the eighth section of the Missouri act, now called the Missouri compromise act, only covered the territory acquired from France; but the principles of the act, the objects of its adoption, the reasons in its support, required that it should be extended indefinitely westward, so far as our territory might go, whenever new purchases should be made.

Thus stood the question up to 1845, when the joint resolution for the annexation of Texas passed. There was inserted in that a provision, suggested in the first instance and brought before the House of Representatives by myself, extending the Missouri compromise line indefinitely westward through the territory of Texas. Why did I bring forward that proposition? Why did the Congress of the United States adopt it? Not because it was of the least practical importance, so far as the question of slavery within the limits of Texas was concerned, for no man ever dreamed that it had any practical effect there. Then why was it brought forward? It was for the purpose of preserving the principle, in order that it might be extended still further westward, even to the Pacific ocean, whenever we should acquire the country that far. I will here read that clause in the joint resolution for the annexation of Texas. It is the third article, second section, and is in these words:

"New States, of convenient size, not exceeding four in number, in addition to said State of Texas, having sufficient population, may hereafter, by the consent of said State, be formed out of the territory thereof, which shall be entitled to admission under the provisions of the Federal Constitution. And such States as may be formed out of that portion of said territory lying south of 36° 30' north latitude, commonly known as the Missouri compromise line, shall be admitted into the Union, with or without slavery, as the people of each State asking admission may desire. And in such State or States as shall be formed out of said territory north of said Missouri compromise line, slavery or involuntary servitude (except for crime) shall be prohibited."

It will be seen that that contains a very remarkable provision, which is, that when States lying north of 36° 30' apply for admission, slavery shall be prohibited in their constitutions. I presume no one pretends that Congress could have power thus to fetter a State applying for admission into this Union; but it was necessary to preserve the principle of the Missouri compromise line in order that it might afterwards be extended; and it was supposed that while Congress had no power to impose any such limitation, yet as that was a compact with the State of Texas, that State could consent for herself that, when any portion of her own territory, subject to her own jurisdiction and control, applied for a constitution, it should be in a particular form; but that provision would not be binding on the new State one day after it was admitted into the Union. The other provision was, that such States as should lie south of 36° 30' should come into the Union, with or without slavery, as each should decide in its constitution. Then, by that act the Missouri compromise was extended indefinitely westward, so far as the State of Texas went, that is, to the Rio del Norte; for our Government at the time recognized the Rio del Norte as its boundary. We recognized in many ways, and among them by even paying Texas for it, in order that it might be included in, and form a portion of, the Territory of New Mexico.

Then, sir, in 1848 we acquired from Mexico the country between the Rio Del Norte and the Pacific ocean. Immediately after that acquisition, the Senate, on my own motion, voted into a bill a provision to extend the Missouri compromise indefinitely westward to the Pacific ocean, in the same sense, and with the same understanding with which it was originally adopted. That provision passed this body by a decided majority—I think by ten at least—and went to the House of Representatives, and was there defeated by northern votes.

Now, sir, let us pause and consider for a moment. The first time that the principles of the Missouri compromise were ever abandoned, the first time they were ever rejected by Congress, was by the defeat of that provision in the House of Representatives in 1848. By whom was that defeat effected? By northern votes, with Free-Soil proclivities. It was the defeat of that Missouri compromise that reopened the slavery agitation with all its fury. It was the defeat of that Missouri compromise that created the tremendous struggle of 1850. It was the defeat of that Missouri compromise that created the necessity for making a new compromise in 1850. Had we been faithful to the principles of the Missouri compromise in 1848, this question would not have arisen. Who was it that was faithless? I undertake to say it was the very men who now insist that the Missouri compromise was a solemn compact, and should never be violated or departed from. Every man who is now assailing the principle of the bill under consideration, so far as I am advised, was opposed to the Missouri compromise in 1848. The very men who now arraign me for a departure from the Missouri compromise, are the men who successfully violated it, repudiated it, and caused it to be superseded by the compromise measures of 1850. Sir, it is with rather bad grace that the men who proved false themselves, should charge upon me and others, who were ever faithful, the responsibilities and consequences of their own treachery.

Then, sir, as I before remarked, the defeat of the Missouri compromise in 1848 having created the necessity for the establishment of a new one in 1850, let us see what that compromise was.

The leading feature of the compromise of 1850 was congressional non-intervention as to slavery in the Territories; that the people of the Territories, and of all the States, were to be allowed to do as they pleased upon the subject of slavery, subject only to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

That, sir, was the leading feature of the compromise measures of 1850. Those measures therefore, abandoned the idea of a geographical line as the boundary between free States and slave States; abandoned it because compelled to do it from an inability to maintain it; and in lieu of that, substituted a great principle of self-government, which would allow the people to do as they thought proper. Now, the question is, when that new compromise, resting upon that great fundamental principle of freedom, was established, was it not an abandonment of the old one—the geographical line? Was it not a superseding of the old one within the very language of the substitute for the bill which is now under consideration? I say it did supersede it, because it applied its provisions as well to the north as to the south of 36° 30'. It established a principle which was equally applicable to the country north as well as south of the parallel of 36° 30'—a principle of universal application. The authors of this Abolition manifesto attempt to refute this presumption, and maintain that the compromise of 1850 did not supersede that of 1820, by quoting the proviso to the first section of the act to establish the Texan boundary, and established the Territory of New Mexico. That proviso was added by way of amendment, on motion by Mr. Mason, of Virginia.

I repeat, that in order to rebut the presumption, as I before stated, that the Missouri compromise was abandoned and superseded by the principles of the compromise of 1850, these confederates cite the following amendment, offered to the bill to establish the boundary of Texas and create the Territory of New Mexico in 1850:

“Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair or qualify anything contained in the third article of the second section of the joint resolution for annexing Texas to the United States, approved March 1, 1845, either as regards the number of States that may hereafter be formed out of the State of Texas or otherwise.”

After quoting this proviso, they make the following statement, and attempt to gain credit for its truth by suppressing material facts which appear upon the face of the same statute, and, if produced, would conclusively disprove the statement:

“It is solemnly declared in the very compromise acts ‘that nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair or qualify’ the prohibition of slavery north of 36° 30’; and yet, in the face of this declaration, that sacred prohibition is said to be overthrown. Can presumption further go?”

I will now proceed to show that presumption could not go further than is exhibited in this declaration.

They suppress the following material facts, which, if produced, would have disproved their statement: They first suppress the fact that the same section of the act cuts off from Texas, and cedes to the United States, all that part of Texas which lies north of 36° 30'. They then suppress the further fact that the same section of the law cuts off from Texas a large tract of country on the west, more than three degrees of longitude, and added it to the territory of the United States. They then suppress the further fact that this territory thus cut off from Texas, and to which the Missouri compromise line did apply, was incorporated into the Territory of New Mexico. And then what was done? It was incorporated into that Territory with this clause:

“That when admitted as a State, the said Territory, or any portion of the same, shall be received into the Union with or without slavery, as their constitution may prescribe at the time of its adoption.”

Yes, sir, the very bill and section from which they quote cuts off all that part of Texas which was to be free by the Missouri compromise, together with some on the south side of the line, incorporates it into the Territory of New Mexico, and then says that that Territory, and every portion of the same, shall come into the Union with or without slavery, as it sees proper.

What else does it do? The sixth section of the same act provides that the legislative power and authority of this said Territory of New Mexico shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation consistent with the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of the act not excepting slavery. Thus the New Mexican bill, from which they make that quotation, contained the provision that New Mexico, including that part of Texas which was cut off, should come into the Union with or without slavery, as it saw proper; and in the mean time that the Territorial Legislature should have all the authority over the subject of slavery that they had over any other subject, restricted only by the limitations of the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of the act. Now, I ask those Senators, do not those provisions repeal the Missouri compromise so far as it applied to that country cut off from Texas? Do they not annul it? Do they not supersede it? If they do, then the address which has been put forth to the world by these confederates is an atrocious falsehood. If they do not, then what do they mean when they charge me with having, in the substitute first reported from the committee, repealed it, with having annulled it, with having violated it, when I only copied those precise words? I copied the precise words into my bill as reported from the committee which were contained in the New Mexico bill. They say my bill annuls the Missouri compromise. If it does, it had already been done before by the act of 1850, for these words were copied from the act of 1850.

Mr. WADE. Why did you do it over again?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will come to that point presently, and explain why we did it over again. I am now dealing with the truth and veracity of a combination of men who have assembled in secret caucus upon the Sabbath day, to arraign my conduct and belie my character. I say, therefore, that their manifesto is a slander either way; for it says that the Missouri compromise was not superseded by the measures of 1850, and then it says that the same words in my bill do repeal and annul it. They must be adjudged guilty of one falsehood in order to sustain the other assertion.

Now, sir, I propose to go a little further, and show what was the real meaning of the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, out of which these gentlemen have manufactured so much capital in the newspaper-press, and have succeeded by that misrepresentation in procuring an expression of opinion from the State of Rhode Island in opposition to this bill. I will state what its meaning is. Did it mean that the States north of 36° 30' should have a clause in their constitutions prohibiting slavery? I have shown that it did not mean that, because the same act says that they might come in with slavery if they saw proper. I say it could not mean that for another reason. The same section containing that proviso cut off all that part of Texas north of 36° 30', and hence there was nothing for it to operate upon. It did not, therefore, relate to the country cut off. What did it relate to? Why, it meant simply this: By the joint resolution of 1845 Texas was annexed, with the right to form four additional States out of her territory; and such States as were south of 36° 30' were to come in with or without slavery, as they saw proper; and in such State or States as were north of that line, slavery should be prohibited. When we had cut off all north of 36° 30', and thus circumscribed the boundary and diminished the territory of Texas, the question arose, how many States will Texas be entitled to under this circumscribed boundary? Certainly not four, it will be argued. Why? Because the original resolution of annexation provided that one of the States, if not more, should be north of 36° 30'. It would leave it, then, doubtful whether Texas was entitled to two or three additional States under the circumscribed boundary.

In order to put that matter to rest, in order to make a final settlement, in order to have it explicitly understood, what was the meaning of Congress, the Senator from Virginia offered the amendment that nothing therein contained should impair that provision, either as to the number of States or otherwise; that is, that Texas should be entitled to the same number of States with her reduced boundaries as she would have been entitled to under her larger boundaries; and those States shall come in with or without slavery, being all south of 36° 30', and nothing to impair that right shall be inferred from the passage of the act. Such, sir, was the meaning of that proposition. Any other construction of it would stultify the very character and purpose of its mover, the Senator from Virginia. Such, then, was not only the intent of the mover, but such is the legal effect of the law; and I say that no man, after reading the other sections of the bill, those to which I have referred, can doubt that such was both the intent and the legal effect of that law.

Then I submit to the Senate if I have not convicted this manifesto, issued by the Abolition confederates, of being a gross falsification of the laws of the land, and by that falsification that an erroneous and injurious impression has been created upon the public mind? I am sorry to be compelled to indulge in language of this severity; but there is no other language that is adequate to express the indignation with which I see this attempt, not only to mislead the public, but to malign my character by deliberate falsification of the public statutes and the public records.

Sir, this misrepresentation and falsification does not stop here. In order to give greater plausibility to their statement, they go further, and state that “it is solemnly declared, in the very compromise acts, "that nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair or qualify" the prohibition of slavery north of 36° 30'; and yet, in the face of this declaration, that sacred prohibition is said to be overthrown. Can presumption go further?"

In the very teeth of the statute, saying that they should come in with or without slavery as they pleased, these men declare that it is stated that it should be forever prohibited. I repeat to them, "Could presumption go further?" Not only presumption in making these statements, but the presumption that they could avoid the exposure of their conduct.

In order to give greater plausibility to this falsification of the terms of the compromise measures of 1850, the confederates also declare in their manifesto that they (the territorial bills for the organization of Utah and New Mexico) "applied to the territory acquired from Mexico, and to that only. They were intended as a settlement of the controversy growing out of that acquisition, and of that controversy only. They must stand or fall by their own merits."

I submit to the Senate if there is an intelligent man in America who does not know that that declaration is falsified by the statute from which they quoted? They say that the provisions of that bill were confined to the territory acquired from Mexico, when the very section of the law from which they quoted that proviso did purchase a part of that very territory from the State of Texas. And the next section of the law included that territory in the new Territory of Mexico. It took a small portion, also, of the old Louisiana purchase, and added that to the new Territory of Mexico, and made up the rest out of the Mexican acquisitions. Then, sir, your statutes show, when applied to the map of the country, that the Territory of New Mexico was composed of territory acquired from Mexico, and also of territory acquired from Texas, and of territory acquired from France; and yet, in defiance of that statute, and in falsification of its terms, we are told, in order to deceive the people, that the bills were confined to the purchase made from Mexico alone; and in order to give it greater solemnity, as was necessary while uttering a falsehood, they repeat it twice, fearing that it would not be believed the first time. What is more, the Territory of Utah was not confined to the country acquired from Mexico. That Territory, as is well known to every man who understands the geography of the country, includes a large tract of rich and fertile country acquired from France in 1803, and to which the eighth section of the Missouri act applied in 1820. If these confederates do not know to what country I allude, I only reply that they should have known before they uttered a falsehood, and imputed a crime to me.

But I will tell you to what country I allude. By the treaty of 1819, by which we acquired Florida, and fixed a boundary between the United States and Mexico, the boundary was made of the Arkansas river to its source, and then the line ran due north of the source of the Arkansas to the 42d parallel, then along on the 42d parallel to the Pacific ocean. That line, due north from the head of the Arkansas, leaves the whole Middle Park, described in such glowing terms by Colonel Fremont, to the east of the line, and hence a part of the Louisiana purchase. Yet, inasmuch as that Middle Park is watered and drained by the waters flowing into the Colorado, when we formed the territorial limits of Utah, instead of running that air line, we ran along the ridge of the mountains, and cut off that part from Nebraska, or from the Louisiana purchase, and included it within the limits of the Territory of Utah.

Why did we do it? Because we sought for a national boundary; and it was more natural to take the mountains as a boundary than by an air line to cut the valleys on one side of the mountains, and annex them to the country on the other side. And why did we take these natural boundaries, setting at defiance the old boundaries? The simple reason was, that so long as we acted upon the principle of settling the slave question by a geographical line, so long we observed those boundaries strictly and rigidly; but when that was abandoned, in consequence of the action of Free-Soilers and Abolitionists—when it was superseded by the compromise measures of 1850, which rested upon a great universal principle—there was no necessity for keeping in view the old and unnatural boundary. For that reason, in making the new Territories, we formed natural boundaries irrespective of the source whence our title was derived. In writing these bills I paid no attention to the fact whether the title was acquired from Louisiana, from France, or from Mexico; for what difference did it make? The principle which we had established in the bill would apply equally well to either.

In fixing those boundaries I paid no attention to the fact whether they included old territory or not—whether the country was covered by the Missouri compromise or not. Why? Because the principles established in the bills superseded the Missouri compromise. For that reason we disregarded the old boundaries—disregarded the territory to which it applied, and disregarded the source from whence the title was derived. I say, therefore, that a close examination of this act clearly establishes the fact that it was the intent as well as the legal effect of the compromise measures of 1850 to supersede the Missouri compromise, and all geographical and territorial lines.

Sir, in order to avoid any misconception, I will state more distinctly what my precise idea is upon this point. So far as the Utah and New Mexico bills included the territory which had been subject to the Missouri compromise provision, to that extent they absolutely annulled the Missouri compromise. As to the unorganized territory not covered by those bills, it was superseded by the principles of the compromise of 1850. We all know that the object of the compromise measures of 1850 was to establish certain great principles, which would avoid the slavery agitation in all time to come. Was it our object simply to provide for a temporary evil? Was it our object just to heal over an old sore, and leave it to break out again? Was it our object to adopt a mere miserable expedient to apply to that territory, and that alone, and leave ourselves entirely at sea without compass when new territory was acquired, or new territorial organizations were to be made? Was that the object for which the eminent and venerable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Clay] came here and sacrificed even his last energies upon the altar of his country? Was that the object for which WEBSTER, CLAY, CASS, and all the patriots of that day, struggled so long and so strenuously? Was it merely the application of a temporary expedient in agreeing to stand by past and dead legislation that the Baltimore platform pledged us to sustain the compromise of 1850? Was it the understanding of the Whig party, when they adopted the compromise measures of 1850 as an article of political faith, that they were only agreeing to that which was past, and had no reference to the future? If that was their meaning—if that was their object—they palmed off an atrocious fraud upon the American people. Was it the meaning of the Democratic party, when we pledged ourselves to stand by the compromise of 1850, that we spoke only of the past, and had no reference to the future? If so, it was then a fraud. When we pledged our President to stand by the compromise measures, did we not understand that we pledged him as to his future action? Was it as to his past conduct? If it had been in relation to past conduct only, the pledge would have been untrue as to a very large portion of the Democratic party. Men went into that convention who had been opposed to the compromise measures—men who abhorred those measures when they were pending—men who never would have voted affirmatively on them. But inasmuch as those measures had been passed, and the country had acquiesced in them, and it was important to preserve the principle in order to avoid agitation in the future, these men said, we waive our past objections, and we will stand by you and with you in carrying out these principles in the future.

Such I understood to be the meaning of the two great parties at Baltimore. Such I understand to have been the effect of their pledges. If they did not mean this, they meant merely to adopt resolutions which were never to be carried out, and which were designed to mislead and deceive the people for the mere purpose of carrying an election.

I hold, then, that as to the territory covered by the Utah and New Mexico bills, there was an express annulment of the Missouri compromise; and as to all the other unorganized territories, it was superseded by the principles of that legislation, and we are bound to apply those principles in the organization of all new Territories, to all which we now own, or which we may hereafter acquire. If this construction be given, it makes that compromise a final adjustment. No other construction can possibly impart finality to it. By any other construction the question is to be reopened the moment you ratify a new treaty acquiring an inch of country from Mexico. By any other construction you reopen the issue every time you make a new territorial government. But, sir, if you treat the compromise measures of 1850 in the light of great principles, sufficient to remedy temporary evils, at the same time that they prescribe rules of action applicable everywhere in all time to come, then you avoid the agitation forever, if you observe good faith to the provisions of these enactments, and the principles established by them.

Mr. President, I repeat, that so far as the question of slavery is concerned, there is nothing in the bill under consideration which does not carry out the principle of the compromise measures of 1850, by leaving the people to do as they please, subject only to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. If that principle is wrong, the bill is wrong. If that principle is right, the bill is right. It is unnecessary to quibble about phraseology or words; it is not the mere words, the mere phraseology, that our constituents wish to judge by. They wish to know the legal effect of our legislation.

The legal effect of this bill, if it be passed as reported by the Committee on Territories, is neither to legislate slavery into these Territories nor out of them, but to leave the people do as they please, under the provisions and subject to the limitations of the Constitution of the United States. Why should not this principle prevail? Why should any man, North or South, object to it? I will especially address the argument to my own section of country, and ask why should any northern man object to this principle? If you will review the history of the slavery question in the United States, you will see that all the great results in behalf of free institutions which have been worked out, have been accomplished by the operation of this principle, and by it alone.

When these States were colonies of Great Britain, every one of them was a slave-holding province. When the Constitution of the United States was formed, twelve out of the thirteen were slave-holding States. Since that time six of those States have become free. How has this been effected? Was it by virtue of abolition agitation in Congress? Was it in obedience to the dictates of the Federal Government? Not at all; but they have become free States under the silent but sure and irresistible working of that great principle of self-government which teaches every people to do that which the interests of themselves and their posterity morally and pecuniarily may require.

Under the operation of this principle New Hampshire became free, while South Carolina continued to hold slaves; Connecticut abolished slavery, while Georgia held on to it; Rhode Island abandoned the institution, while Maryland preserved it; New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania abolished slavery, while Virginia, North Carolina, and Kentucky retained it. Did they do it at your bidding? Did they do it at the dictation of the Federal Government? Did they do it in obedience to any of your Wilmot provisions or ordinances of '87? Not at all; they did it by virtue of their right as freemen under the Constitution of the United States, to establish and abolish such institutions as they thought their own good required.

Let me ask you where have you succeeded in excluding slavery by an act of Congress from one inch of the American soil? You may tell me that you did it in the northwest territory by the ordinance of 1787. I will show you by the history of the country that you did not accomplish any such thing. You prohibited slavery there by law, but you did not exclude it in fact. Illinois was a part of the northwest territory. With the exception of a few French and white settlements, it was a vast wilderness, filled with hostile savages, when the ordinance of 1787 was adopted. Yet, sir, when Illinois was organized into a territorial government it established and protected slavery, and maintained it in spite of your ordinance, and in defiance of its express prohibition. It is a curious fact, that so long as Congress said the territory of Illinois should not have slavery, she actually had it; and on the very day when you withdrew your congressional prohibition, the people of Illinois, of their own free will and accord, provided for a system of emancipation.

Thus you did not succeed in Illinois Territory with your ordinance or your Wilmot proviso, because the people there regarded it as an invasion of their rights. They regarded it as a usurpation on the part of the Federal Government. They regarded it as violative of the great principles of self-government, and they determined that they would never submit even to have freedom so long as you forced it upon them.

Nor must it be said that slavery was abolished in the constitution of Illinois in order to be admitted into the Union as a State, in compliance with the ordinance of 1787, for they did no such thing. In the constitution with which the people of Illinois were admitted into the Union, they absolutely violated, disregarded, and repudiated your ordinance. The ordinance said that slavery should be forever prohibited in that country. The constitution with which you received them into the Union as a State said that all slaves then in the State should remain slaves for life, and that all persons born of slave parents after a certain day should be free at a certain age, and that all persons born in the State after a certain other day should be free from the time of their birth. Thus their State constitution, as well as their territorial legislation, repudiated your ordinance. Illinois, therefore, is a case in point to prove that whenever you have attempted to dictate institutions to any part of the United States, you have failed. The same is true, though not to the same extent, with reference to the Territory of Indiana, where there were many slaves during the time of its territorial existence; and I believe also there were a few in the Territory of Ohio.

But, sir, these Abolition confederates in their manifesto, have also referred to the wonderful results of their policy in the State of Iowa and the Territory of Minnesota. Here again they happen to be in fault as to the laws of the land. The act to organize the Territory of Iowa did not prohibit slavery, but the people of Iowa were allowed to do as they pleased under the territorial government; for the sixth section of that act provided that the legislative authority should extend to all rightful subjects of legislation, except as to the disposition of the public lands, and taxes in certain cases, but not excepting slavery. It may, however, be said by some that slavery was prohibited in Iowa by virtue of that clause in the Iowa act which declared the laws of Wisconsin to be in force therein, inasmuch as the ordinance of 1787 was one of the laws of Wisconsin. If, however, they say this, they defeat their object, because the very clause which transfers the laws of Wisconsin to Iowa, and makes them of force therein, also provides that those laws are subject to be altered, modified or repealed by the Territorial Legislature of Iowa. Iowa, therefore, was left to do as she pleased. Iowa, when she came to form a constitution and State government, preparatory to admission into the Union, considered the subject of free and slave institutions calmly, dispassionately, without any restraint or dictation, and determined that it would be to the interest of her people in their climate, and with their productions, to prohibit slavery, and hence Iowa became a free State by virtue of this great principle of allowing the people to do as they please, and not in obedience to any federal command.

The Abolitionists are also in the habit of referring to Oregon as another instance of the triumph of their abolition policy. There again they have overlooked or misrepresented the history of the country. Sir, it is well known, or if it is not, it ought to be, that for about twelve years you failed to give Oregon any government or any protection; and during that period the inhabitants of that country established a government of their own, and by virtue of their own laws, passed by their own representatives before you extended your jurisdiction over them, prohibited slavery by a unanimous vote. Slavery was prohibited there by the action of the people themselves, and not by virtue of any legislation of Congress.

It is true that in the midst of the tornado which swept over the country in 1848, 1849, and 1850, a provision was forced into the Oregon bill prohibiting slavery in that Territory; but that only goes to show that the object of those who pressed it was not so much to establish free institutions as to gain a political advantage by giving an ascendancy to their peculiar doctrines, in the laws of the land; for slavery having been already prohibited there, and no man proposing to establish it, what was the necessity for insulting the people of Oregon by saying in your law that they should not do that which they had unanimously said they did not wish to do? That was the only effect of your legislation, so far as the Territory of Oregon was concerned.

How was it in regard to California? Every one of these abolition confederates who have thus arraigned me and the Committee on Territories before the country, who have misrepresented our position, and misquoted the law and the fact, predicted that unless Congress interposed by law, and prohibited slavery in California, it would inevitably become a slave-holding State. Congress did not interfere; Congress did not prohibit slavery. There was no enactment upon the subject; but the people formed a State constitution, and then prohibited slavery.

Mr. WELLER. The vote was unanimous in the convention of California for prohibition.

Mr. DOUGLAS. So it was in regard to Utah and New Mexico. In 1850, we who resisted any attempt to force institutions upon the people of those Territories, inconsistent with their wishes and their right to decide for themselves, were denounced as slavery propagandists. Every one of us who was in favor of the Compromise measures of 1850 was arraigned for having advocated a principle proposing to introduce slavery into those Territories; and the people were told, and made to believe, that unless we prohibited it by act of Congress, slavery would necessarily and inevitably be introduced into these Territories.

Well, sir, we did establish the territorial governments of Utah and New Mexico without any prohibition. We gave to these Abolitionists a full opportunity of proving whether their predictions were true or false. Years have rolled round, and the result is before us. The people there have not passed any law recognizing, or establishing, or introducing, or protecting slavery in the Territories.

I know of but one Territory of the United States where slavery does exist, and that one is where you have prohibited it by law, and it is this very Nebraska Territory. In defiance of the eighth section of the act of 1820, in defiance of Congressional dictation, there have been, not many, but a few slaves introduced. I heard a minister of the Gospel the other day conversing with a member of the Committee on Territories upon this subject. This preacher was from that country; and a member put this question to him: "Have you any negroes out there?" He said there were a few held by the Indians. I asked him if there were not some held by white men? He said there were a few, under peculiar circumstances, and he gave an instance: An abolition missionary, a very good man, had gone there from Boston, and he took his wife with him. He got out into the country, but could not get any help; hence he, being a kind-hearted man, went down to Missouri, and gave $1,000 for a negro, and took him up there as "help." [Laughter.] So, under peculiar circumstances, when these Free-Soil and Abolition preachers and missionaries go into the country, they can buy a negro for their own use, but they do not like to allow any one else to do the same thing. [Renewed laughter.] I suppose the fact of the matter is simply this: there the people can get no servants—no "help," as they are called in the section of country where I was born—and, from the necessity of the case, they must do the best they can, and for this reason a few slaves have been taken there. I have no doubt that whether you organize the Territory of Nebraska or not this will continue for sometime to come. It certainly does exist, and it will increase as long as the Missouri compromise applies to the Territory; and I suppose it will continue for a little while during their territorial condition, whether a prohibition is imposed or not. But when settlers rush in—when labor becomes plenty, and therefore cheap, in that climate, with its productions, it is worse than folly to think of its being a slave-holding country. I do not believe there is a man in Congress who thinks it could be permanently a slave-holding country. I have no idea that it could. All I have to say on that subject is, that when you create them into a Territory, you thereby acknowledge that they ought to be considered a distinct political organization. And when you give them in addition a Legislature, you thereby confess that they are competent to exercise the powers of legislation. If they wish slavery they have a right to it. If they do not want it they will not have it, and you should not force it upon them.

I do not like, I never did like, the system of legislation on our part, by which a geographical line, in violation of the laws of nature, and climate, and soil, and of the laws of God, should be run to establish institutions for a people; yet, out of a regard for the peace and quiet of the country, out of respect for past pledges, and out of a desire to adhere faithfully to all compromises, I sustained the Missouri compromise so long as it was in force, and advocated its extension to the Pacific. Now, when that has been abandoned, when it has been superseded, when a great principle of self-government has been substituted for it, I choose to cling to that principle, and abide in good faith, not only by the letter, but by the spirit of the last compromise.

Sir, I do not recognize the right of the Abolitionists of this country to arraign me for being false to sacred pledges, as they have done in their proclamation. Let them show when and where I have ever proposed to violate a compact. I have proved that I stood by the compact of 1820 and 1845, and proposed its continuance and observance in 1848. I have proved that the Free-Soilers and Abolitionists were the guilty parties who violated that compromise then. I should like to compare notes with these Abolition confederates about adherence to compromises. When did they stand by or approve of any one that was ever made?

Did not every Abolitionist and Free-Soiler in America denounce the Missouri compromise in 1820? Did they not for years hunt down ravenously for his blood every man who assisted in making that compromise? Did they not in 1845, when Texas was annexed, denounce all of us who went for the annexation of Texas, and for the continuation of the Missouri compromise line through it? Did they not in 1848 denounce me as a slavery propagandist for standing by the principles of the Missouri compromise, and proposing to continue the Missouri compromise line to the Pacific ocean? Did they not themselves violate and repudiate it then? Is not the charge of bad faith true as to every Abolitionist in America, instead of being true as to me and the committee, and those who advocate this bill?

They talk about the bill being a violation of the compromise measures of 1850. Who can show me a man in either House of Congress who was in favor of the compromise measures of 1850, and who is not now in favor of leaving the people of Nebraska and Kansas to do as they please upon the subject of slavery according to the provisions of my bill? Is there one? If so, I have not heard of him. This tornado has been raised by Abolitionists, and Abolitionists alone. They have made an impression upon the public mind in the way in which I have mentioned, by a falsification of the law and the facts; and this whole organization against the compromise measures of 1850 is an Abolition movement. I presume they had some hope of getting a few tender-footed Democrats into their plot; and, acting on what they supposed they might do, they sent forth publicly to the world the falsehood that their address was signed by the Senators and a majority of the Representatives from the State of Ohio; but when we come to examine signatures, we find no one Whig there, no one Democrat there; none but pure, unmitigated, unadulterated Abolitionists.

Much effect, I know, has been produced by this circular, coming as it does with the imposing title of a representation of a majority of the Ohio delegation. What was the reason for its effect? Because the manner in which it was sent forth implied that all the Whig members from that State had joined in it; that part of the Democrats had signed it; and then that the two Abolitionists had signed it; and that made a majority of the delegation. By this means it frightened the Whig party and the Democracy in the State of Ohio, because they supposed their own Representatives and friends had gone into this negro movement, when the fact turns out to be that it was not signed by a single Whig or Democratic member from Ohio.

Now, I ask the friends and the opponents of this measure to look at it as it is. Is not the question involved the simple one, whether the people of the Territories shall be allowed to do as they please upon the question of slavery, subject only to the limitations of the Constitution? That is all the bill provides; and it does so in clear, explicit, and unequivocal terms. I know there are some men, Whigs and Democrats, who, not willing to repudiate the Baltimore platform of their own party, would be willing to vote for this principle, provided they could do so in such equivocal terms that they could deny that it means what it was intended to mean in certain localities. I do not wish to deal in any equivocal language. If the principle is right, let it be avowed and maintained. If it is wrong, let it be repudiated. Let all this quibbling about the Missouri compromise, about the territory acquired from France, about the act of 1820, be cast behind you; for the simple question is, will you allow the people to legislate for themselves upon the subject of slavery? Why should you not?

When you propose to give them a territorial government do you not acknowledge that they ought to be erected into a political organization; and when you give them a Legislature do you not acknowledge that they are capable of self-government? Having made that acknowledgment, why should you not allow them to exercise the rights of legislation? Oh, these Abolitionists say they are entirely willing to concede all this, with one exception. They say they are willing to trust the Territorial Legislature, under the limitations of the Constitution, to legislate upon the rights of inheritance, to legislate in regard to religion, education, and morals, to legislate in regard to the relations of husband and wife, of parent and child, of guardian and ward, upon everything pertaining to the dearest rights and interests of white men, but they are not willing to trust them to legislate in regard to a few miserable negroes. That is their single exception. They acknowledge that the people of the Territories are capable of deciding for themselves concerning white men, but not in relation to negroes. The real gist of the matter is this: Does it require any higher degree of civilization, and intelligence, and learning, and sagacity, to legislate for negroes than for white men? If it does, we ought to adopt the abolition doctrine, and go with them against this bill. If it does not—if we are willing to trust the people with the great, sacred, fundamental right of prescribing their own institutions, consistent with the Constitution of the country, we must vote for this bill as reported by the Committee on Territories. That is the only question involved in the bill. I hope I have been able to strip it of all the misrepresentation, to wipe away all of that mist and obscurity with which it has been surrounded by this Abolition address.

I have now said all I have to say upon the present occasion. For all, except the first ten minutes of these remarks, the Abolition confederates are responsible. My object, in the first place, was only to explain the provisions of the bill, so that they might be distinctly understood. I was willing to allow its assailants to attack it as much as they pleased, reserving to myself the right, when the time should approach for taking the vote, to answer, in a concluding speech, all the arguments which might be urged against it. I still reserve—what I believe common courtesy and parliamentary usage awards to the chairman of a committee and the author of a bill—the right of summing up, after all shall have been said which has to be said against this measure.

I hope the compact which was made on last Tuesday, at the suggestion of these Abolitionists, when the bill was proposed to be taken up, will be observed. It was that the bill, when taken up to-day, should continue to be considered from day to day until finally disposed of. I hope they will not repudiate and violate that compact as they have the Missouri compromise and all others which have been entered into. I hope, therefore, that we may press the bill to a vote; but not by depriving persons of an opportunity of speaking.

I am in favor of giving every enemy of the bill the most ample time. Let us hear them all patiently, and then take the vote and pass the bill. We who are in favor of it know that the principle on which it is based is right. Why then should we gratify the Abolition party in their effort to get up another political tornado of fanaticism, and put the country again in peril, merely for the purpose of electing a few agitators to the Congress of the United States?

We intend to stand by the principle of the compromise measures of 1850—that principle which lost the Presidency to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Cass] in 1848, but which triumphed in 1850, although he had been a martyr in the cause—that principle to which the Democracy are pledged, not merely by the Baltimore platform, but by a higher and a more solemn obligation, to which they are pledged by the love and affection which they have for that great fundamental principle of Democracy and free institutions which lies at the basis of our creed, and gives every political community the right to govern itself in obedience to the Constitution of the country.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, I had some intimation, coming to the Senate Chamber this morning, of the diatribe which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Douglas] has now pronounced. I was aware that an assault was to be made upon us. Well, sir, the assault has been made. The Senator has paraded his battery; he has fired his guns; we have heard the noise; we are in the midst of the smoke; but nobody is hurt. We are still here; we yet survive; and I doubt not we shall long survive all such attacks as that which he has now been pleased to make.

Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois charges that the address, upon which he has been pleased to comment in terms which befit any other place than the Senate Chamber—however low that place may be—was concocted in what he chooses to call an Abolition caucus held upon Sunday. Aye, sir, with a generosity, peculiarly his own, he has availed himself of a mere error of date, and piously holds up to public reprobation the gentlemen who have signed that address as violating the sacredness of the Sabbath day, that day for which he cherishes, doubtless, a peculiar reverence. And yet, at the very moment of making this charge, he refutes it by another, asserting that this very appeal was printed in the New York Times and other New York papers on the Monday morning following that very Sunday. Did he not know that it was impossible that the document could have been prepared and signed here on Sunday and published in New York on Monday morning?

Well, sir, the Senator further charges that a false statement has been put forth in connection with this address. That false statement, as he alleges, was this: that the appeal was signed by a majority of the members from the State of Ohio. He thinks that the design was to catch some "soft-footed Democrats." "Soft-footed Democrats!" Aye, that is the phrase by which he chooses to mark all Democrats who will vote against this bill. I trust he will find that such Democrats are a little more numerous than he seems now to imagine. I do not know how many there may be. I pass that. What I have now to deal with is the Senator's charge, and that I pronounce utterly groundless.

The simple facts are these: The appeal was prepared upon consultation among the Independent Democrats who signed it. It was afterwards suggested that it should be signed by the Senators and a number of the Representatives from Ohio, and sent forth as an address to the people of that State. It was signed by my colleague and myself, with that view; but some alterations being required by certain Representatives, which could not be made without inconvenient delay, it was determined to issue the document with the signatures only of the gentlemen by whom it was originated, and in the form originally proposed, as an appeal to the whole country. That is the plain story. The address bears no signatures other than those of the Independent Democrats, whom the Senator chooses to style "the Abolition confederates." By no one of them was it ever represented to be otherwise signed. Some gentlemen connected with the press, however, hearing of the purpose that it should be signed by more or less of the delegation from Ohio, have sent it abroad with a statement that it was thus signed in fact. I have a note in my hand which the corresponding editor in this city of the New York Times has just sent me from the reporters' gallery, in which he states how the mistaken statement went into that paper. I will not trouble the Senate with the reading of it; but I will send it to the reporter, to be printed with these remarks. My colleague is in his seat, and knows the truth of what I speak.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, I heard the address half read, and, judging of its quality by its sample, I signed it. Judging it by that sample, and by what has been made known by the Senator from Illinois, I now indorse every word of it, for I believe it is perfectly true and correct. It was issued without my signature, for the reasons assigned by my colleague.

Mr. CHASE. Not only, Mr. President, were none of us who are connected with this address responsible in any degree for any of those newspaper statements, but it is also true that the moment I learned that a statement attributing the address to the Ohio delegation was likely to appear in the New York Times, I requested the correspondent of that paper to telegraph the actual names of the signers for the very purpose of preventing any misapprehension. And yet the Senator represents me as having sent this document to the State of Ohio with this misrepresentation. The very reverse of this is true. When I found how it appeared in the New York papers, I telegraphed at once to friends in Ohio not to publish the address with any such statements. I do not know how it has appeared there. I know only that I have sent none of these documents anywhere to be published with any other signatures than those actually appended to them. And yet the Senator comes here into this Chamber, and charges Senators with false statements, intended for special effect in Ohio, in relation to the signatures to this appeal. There is not a particle of foundation for the charge. Sir, I do not envy him either the spirit which prompted it, or the position which he occupies, having made it.

Well, sir, the Senator proceeded to take exception to the character and scope of the whole document. He says that we, forsooth, have held him up to the country in this address as guilty of certain great and enormous crimes. Why, sir, any man who reads the address will see that in no part of it, from first to last, except in a brief note appended, is the Senator mentioned at all. So far as I am responsible for the document, either by signature or authorship, I tell the Senator he was not in all my thoughts. He exaggerates his importance when he supposes that we had him, rather than any other member of the committee, specially in view. Sir, I know the gigantic stature of the Senator; I know the weight and importance which he possesses in the country; I know that he has a great and powerful party surrounding him; and I know also the great disadvantages under which I enter into any controversy which he provokes. I am in a minority. I know that full well. It is no very pleasant position. But I dare do that which I should like to see the Senator also do. I dare adhere to principle, even though that adherence must carry me into a minority.

It is very true, Mr. President, that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] and myself are but two in a body of sixty-two. We know that upon the great question which we feel ourselves bound to press upon the consideration of the American people we have not the sympathies of this body with us. But we can proudly challenge scrutiny of our action, and defy the production of an instance in which we have been illiberal to those from whom we differ. When have we stopped to inquire whether the interests to be effected by our votes were those of the North or the South? When did we fail to give to any proper measure for the benefit of any southern State or citizen a prompt, an earnest, and a cordial support? When did we ever offer a sectional opposition to any nomination sent here? Upon what occasion did we ever discriminate, by sectional lines, between interests or men? Why, then, are we to be thus assailed?

Sir, our offense is, that we deny the nationality of slavery. No man can show that we have ever sought to interfere with the legislation of any State of the Union upon that subject. All that we have ever insisted upon is, that the Territories of this Union shall be preserved from slavery; and that where the General Government exercises exclusive jurisdiction, its legislation shall be on the side of liberty. It is because we defend these positions that the Senator from Illinois attacks us. He thinks that he can take advantage of his position in the country—that he can take advantage of his connection with a great and powerful political organization, and assail us with little hazard. It is safe to attack opponents who stand, as we stand, without the supports he counts upon. Ay, sir, that shows courage, that shows chivalry, that shows high honor, that shows lofty manhood—to assail the few and the unsupported. I tell the Senator from Illinois that we did not assail him. We did not say a word about him from the beginning to the end of our appeal. He was named only in the postscript, and then merely as the author of the bill. We spoke of the bill. We spoke of its character. We said nothing about the character of the individuals who were its authors; anybody may see that who chooses to read the address.

In the whole discussion of the matter in controversy, we confined ourselves in that appeal strictly and closely to the merits of the case. And now, sir, here, in this Chamber, before this audience, I reaffirm every word and every syllable of that appeal. I make no personal imputations; I make no personal charges; I do not follow the example which has been set here to-day, but which, in my judgment, is not fit to be followed anywhere; but I reaffirm and reiterate, distinctly and emphatically, every word and every syllable of that address. I thank the Senator from Illinois for having brought it so prominently before the country. It will now reach thousands and tens of thousands who would not have read it but for the discussion which has taken place here to-day. It will be seen, read, and judged by the people, and they will determine for themselves whether or not its doctrine be sound and its facts truly stated.

In this appeal "we arraign this bill as a gross violation of a sacred pledge." The Senator from Illinois thinks that the pledge of the Missouri compromise was nothing worth. We think it was of vast consequence, and absolutely binding; and, as the bill proposes to abrogate it, we do not choose soft words, but characterize it at once as it deserves. We arraign it also as "a criminal betrayal of precious rights." Well, what rights are precious, if those secured to free labor and free laborers in that vast Territory are not? What can be criminal, if it be not criminal to subvert these rights for the purpose of giving room to slavery? When the bill proposes to reach this bad end by the baseless declaration that the Missouri prohibition is superseded by the principles of the legislation of 1850—a singular mode of repeal that—we call it "a criminal betrayal of precious rights."

The appeal goes on to denounce the bill as "part and parcel of an atrocious plot to exclude from a vast unoccupied region emigrants from the Old World, and free laborers from our own States, and convert it into a dreary region of despotism, inhabited by masters and slaves." Well, suppose this Territory opened to slavery. Who does not know that upon the western borders of Missouri there are many slaveholders restrained now by the prohibition, but eager to enter the new Territory with their slaves? Who does not know that the effect of the introduction of slaves will be the exclusion of free laborers, and, to a great extent, of the emigrants from Europe? Why, sir, in my judgment, a concerted movement by slavery confederates to open this great Territory, larger by twelve times than the whole State of Ohio—larger than all the existing free States, with the exception of California—to the ingress of slavery, is mildly characterized by the language of the appeal. But I will not further review this document. It will appear with these remarks, and will speak for itself.

I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to hear me at another time in reply to the argument of the Senator from Illinois. I have set myself right in respect to the two or three points, which the imputations of the Senator made it necessary for me to notice. I am ready to meet his argument at any time; but it is too late to enter upon it to-day. I shall ask, however, the attention of the Senate, at an early day, while I demonstrate that the prohibition of 1820 was a compact; that it was not repealed by the compromise of 1850; that not a single word was uttered in this Chamber, or in the other House, or any where through the whole land, indicating any idea or purpose on the part of anybody that those measures were to operate as such a repeal; and that when the Senator vouches the authority of Clay and Webster to sustain him, he vouches authorities which would rebuke him, could those statesmen speak from their graves. I will detain the Senate no longer.

[Appeal of the Independent Democrats in Congress to the People of the United States.]

SHALL SLAVERY BE PERMITTED IN NEBRASKA?

WASHINGTON, January 19, 1854.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: As Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States, it is our duty to warn our constituents whenever imminent danger menaces the freedom of our institutions or the permanency of our Union. Such danger, as we firmly believe, now impends, and we earnestly solicit your prompt attention to it.

At the last session of Congress, a bill for the organization of the Territory of Nebraska passed the House of Representatives with an overwhelming majority. That bill was based on the principle of excluding slavery from the new Territory. It was not taken up for consideration in the Senate, and consequently failed to become a law.

At the present session, a new Nebraska bill has been reported by the Senate Committee on Territories, which, should it unhappily receive the sanction of Congress, will open all the unorganized territory of the Union to the ingress of slavery.

We arraign this bill as a gross violation of a sacred pledge; as a criminal betrayal of precious rights; as part and parcel of an atrocious plot to exclude from a vast unoccupied region immigrants from the Old World, and free laborers from our own States, and convert it into a dreary region of despotism, inhabited by masters and slaves.

Take your maps, fellow citizens, we entreat you, and see what country it is which this bill, gratuitously and recklessly, proposes to open to slavery.

From the southwestern corner of Missouri pursue the parallel of 36° 30' north latitude, westerly across the Arkansas, across the north fork of Canadian, to the northeastern angle of Texas; then following the northern boundary of Texas to its western limit of New Mexico; then proceed along that western line to its northern termination; then again turn westerly, and follow the northern line of New Mexico to the crest of the Rocky Mountains; then ascend northwardly along the crest of that mountain range to the line which separates the United States from the British possessions in North America, on the 49th parallel of north latitude; then pursue your course eastwardly along that line to the White Earth river, which falls into the Missouri from the north; descend that river to its confluence with the Missouri; descend the Missouri, along the western border of Minnesota, of Iowa, of Missouri, to the point where it ceases to be a boundary line, and enters the State to which it gives its name; then continue your southward course along the western limit of that State to the point from which you set out. You have now made the circuit of the proposed Territory of Nebraska. You have traversed the vast distance of more than three thousand miles. You have traced the outline of an area of four hundred and eighty five thousand square miles; more than twelve times as great as that of Ohio.

This immense region, occupying the very heart of the North American continent, and larger, by thirty-three thousand square miles, than all the existing free States, excluding California—this immense region, well watered and fertile, through which the middle and northern routes from the Atlantic to the Pacific must pass—this immense region, embracing all the unorganized territory of the nation, except the comparatively insignificant district of Indian territory north of Red river and between Arkansas and Texas, and now for more than thirty years regarded by the common consent of the American people as consecrated to freedom by statute and by compact—this immense region, the bill now before the Senate, without reason and without excuse, but in flagrant disregard of sound policy and sacred faith, proposes to open to slavery.

We beg your attention, fellow-citizens, to a few historical facts.

The original settled policy of the United States, clearly indicated by the Jefferson proviso of 1781, and by the ordinance of 1787, was non-extension of slavery.

In 1803, Louisiana was acquired by purchase from France. At that time there were some twenty five or thirty thousand slaves in this Territory, most of them within what is now the State of Louisiana; a few only, further north, on the west bank of the Mississippi. Congress, instead of providing for the abolition of slavery in this new Territory, permitted its continuance. In 1812 the State of Louisiana was organized and admitted into the Union with slavery.

In 1818, six years later, the inhabitants of the Territory of Missouri applied to Congress for authority to form a State constitution, and for admission into the Union. There were, at that time, in the whole territory acquired from France, outside of the State of Louisiana, not three thousand slaves.

There was no apology in the circumstances of the country for the continuance of slavery. The original national policy was against it, and, not less, the plain language of the treaty under which the territory had been acquired from France.

It was proposed, therefore, to incorporate in the bill authorizing the formation of a State government, a provision requiring that the constitution of the new State should contain an article providing for the abolition of existing slavery, and prohibiting the further introduction of slaves.

This provision was vehemently and pertinaciously opposed, but finally prevailed in the House of Representatives by a decided vote. In the Senate it was rejected, and, in consequence of the disagreement between the two Houses, the bill was lost.

At the next session of Congress the controversy was renewed with increased violence. It was terminated, at length, by a compromise. Missouri was allowed to come into the Union with slavery; but a section was inserted in the act authorizing her admission excluding slavery forever from all the territory acquired from France, not included in the new State, lying north of 36° 30'.

We quote the prohibitory section:—

"Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That in all that territory ceded by France to the United States, under the name of Louisiana, which lies north of 36° and 30' of north latitude, not included within the limits of the State contemplated by this act, slavery and involuntary servitude, otherwise than as the punishment of crimes, shall be and is hereby forever prohibited."

The question of the constitutionality of this prohibition was submitted by President Monroe to his Cabinet. John Quincy Adams was then Secretary of State; John C. Calhoun was Secretary of War; William H. Crawford was Secretary of the Treasury; and William Wirt was Attorney General. Each of these eminent men, three of them being from slave States, gave a written opinion, affirming its constitutionality, and thereupon the act received the sanction of the President himself, also from a slave State.

Nothing is more certain in history than the fact that Missouri could not have been admitted as a slave State had not certain members from the free States been reconciled to the measure by the incorporation of this prohibition into the act of admission. Nothing is more certain than that this prohibition has been regarded and acted upon by the whole country as a solemn compact against the extension of slavery into any part of the territory acquired from France, lying north of 36° 30', and not included in the new State of Missouri. The same act—let it be ever remembered—which authorized the formation of a constitution for the State, without a clause forbidding slavery, consecrated, beyond question, and beyond honest recall, the whole remainder of the territory to freedom and free institutions forever. For more than thirty years—during more than half the period of our national existence under our present Constitution—this compact has been universally regarded and acted upon as an inviolable American law. In conformity with it, Iowa was admitted as a free State, and Minnesota has been organized as a free Territory.

It is a strange and odious fact, well calculated to awaken the worst apprehensions, and the most fearful forebodings of future calamities, that it is now deliberately proposed to repeal this prohibition, by implication or directly—the latter certainly the manlier way—and thus to subvert this compact, and allow slavery in all the yet unorganized territory.

We cannot, in this address, review the various pretences under which it is attempted to cloak this monstrous wrong; but we must not altogether omit to notice one.

It is said that the Territory of Nebraska sustains the same relations to slavery as did the territory acquired from Mexico prior to 1850, and that the pro-slavery clauses of the bill are necessary to carry into effect the compromises of that year.

No assertion could be more groundless.

Three acquisitions of territory have been made by treaty. The first was from France. Out of this territory have been created the three slave States of Louisiana, Arkansas, and Missouri, and the single free State of Iowa. The controversy which arose in relation to the then unorganized portion of this territory was closed in 1820 by the Missouri act, containing the slavery prohibition, as has been already stated. This controversy related only to territory acquired from France. The act by which it was terminated was confined, by its own express terms, to the same territory, and had no relation to any other.

The second acquisition was from Spain. Florida, the territory thus acquired, was yielded to slavery without a struggle, and almost without a murmur.

The third was from Mexico. The controversy which arose from this acquisition is fresh in the remembrance of the American people. Out of it sprung the acts of Congress, commonly known as the compromise measures of 1850, by one of which California was admitted as a free State; while two others, organizing the Territories of New Mexico and Utah, exposed all the residue of the recently acquired territory to the invasion of slavery.

These acts were never supposed to brogare or touch the existing exclusion of slavery from what is now called Nebraska. They applied to the territory acquired from Mexico, and to that only. They were intended as a settlement of the controversy growing out of that acquisition, and of that controversy only. They must stand or fall by their own merits.

The statesmen whose powerful support carried the Utah and New Mexico acts never dreamed that their provisions would ever be applied to Nebraska. Even at the last session of Congress, Mr. Atchison, of Missouri, in a speech in favor of taking up the former Nebraska bill, on the morning of the 4th of March, 1853, said: "It is evident that the Missouri compromise cannot be repealed. So far as that question is concerned, we might as well agree to the admission of this Territory now as next year, or five, or ten years hence." These words could not have fallen from this watchful guardian of slavery had he supposed that this Territory was embraced by the pro-slavery provisions of the compromise acts. This pretension had not then been set up. It is a palpable afterthought.

The compromise acts themselves refute this pretension. In the third article of the second section of the joint resolution for annexing Texas to the United States, it is expressly declared that "in such State or States as shall be formed out of said territory north of said Missouri compromise line, slavery or involuntary servitude, except for crime, shall be prohibited;" and in the act for organizing New Mexico and settling the boundary of Texas, a proviso was incorporated, on the motion of Mr. Mason, of Virginia, which distinctly preserves this prohibition, and flouts the barefaced pretension that all the territory of the United States, whether south or north of the Missouri compromise line, is to be open to slavery. It is as follows:

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair or qualify anything contained in the third article of the second section of the joint resolution for annexing Texas to the United States, approved March 1, 1845, either as regards the number of States that may

* Act March 6, 1850—3 U. S. Statutes at Large, 545.

[Act of March 1, 1845—5 U. S. Statutes at Large, 797.

hereafter be formed out of the State of Texas, or otherwise."^{*}

Here is proof, beyond controversy, that the principle of the Missouri act prohibiting slavery north of 36° 30', far from being abrogated by the compromise acts, is expressly affirmed; and that the proposed repeal of this prohibition, instead of being an affirmation of the compromise acts, is a repeal of a very prominent provision of the most important act of the series. It is solemnly declared, in the very compromise acts, "that nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair or qualify" the prohibition of slavery north of 36° 30'; and yet, in the face of this declaration, that sacred prohibition is said to be overthrown. Can presumption further go? To all who, in any way, lean upon these compromises, we commend this exposition.

The pretences, therefore, that the territory, covered by the positive prohibition of 1820, sustains a similar relation to slavery with that acquired from Mexico, covered by no prohibition except that of disputed constitutional or Mexican law, and that the compromises of 1850 require the incorporation of the pro-slavery clauses of the Utah and New Mexico bill in the Nebraska act, are mere inventions, designed to cover up from public reprobation meditated bad faith. Were he living now, no one would be more forward, more eloquent, or more indignant, in his denunciation of that bad faith than Henry Clay, the foremost champion of both compromises.

In 1820 the slave States said to the free States: "Admit Missouri with slavery and refrain from positive exclusion south of 36° 30', and we will join you in perpetual prohibition north of that line." The free States consented. In 1854 the slave States say to the free States: "Missouri is admitted; no prohibition of slavery south of 36° 30' has been attempted; we have received the full consideration of our agreement; no more is to be gained by adherence to it on our part; we therefore propose to cancel the compact." If this be not Punic faith, what is it? Not without the deepest dishonor and crime can the free States acquiesce in this demand.

We confess our total inability properly to delineate the character or describe the consequences of this measure. Language fails to express the sentiments of indignation and abhorrence which it inspires; and no vision less penetrating and comprehensive than that of the All-Seeing, can reach its evil issues.

To some of its more immediate and inevitable consequences, however, we must attempt to direct your attention.

What will be the effect of this measure, should it unhappily become a law, upon the proposed Pacific railroad? We have already said that two of the principal routes, the central and the northern, traverse this Territory. If slavery be allowed there, the settlement and cultivation of the country must be greatly retarded. Inducements to the immigration of free laborers will be almost destroyed. The enhanced cost of construction, and the diminished expectation of profitable returns, will present almost insuperable obstacles to building the road at all; while, even if made, the difficulty and expense of keeping it up, in a country from which the energetic and intelligent masses will be virtually excluded, will greatly impair its usefulness and value.

From the rich lands of this large Territory, also, patriotic statesmen have anticipated that a free, industrious, and enlightened population will extract abundant treasures of individual and public wealth. There, it has been expected, freedom-loving emigrants from Europe, and energetic and intelligent laborers from our own land, will find homes of comfort and fields of useful enterprise. If this bill shall become a law, all such expectation will turn to grievous disappointment. The blight of slavery will cover the land. The homestead law, should Congress enact one, will be worthless there. Freedmen, unless pressed by a hard and cruel necessity, will not, and should not, work beside slaves. Labor cannot be respected where any class of laborers is held in abject bondage.

We earnestly request the enlightened conductors of newspapers printed in the German and other foreign languages, to direct the attention of their readers to this important matter.

It is of immense consequence, also, to scrutinize the geographical character of this project. We beg you, fellow-citizens, to observe that it will sever the East from the West of the United States by a wide slaveholding belt of country, extending from the Gulf of Mexico to British North America. It is a bold scheme against American liberty, worthy of an accomplished architect of ruin. Texas is already slaveholding, and occupies the Gulf region from the Sabine to the Rio Grande, and from the Gulf of Mexico to the Red river. North of the Red river, and extending between Texas and Arkansas, to the parallel of 36° 30', lies the Indian territory, almost equal in extent to the latter State, in which slavery was not prohibited by the act of 1820. From 36° 30' to the boundary line between our own country and the British possessions, stretching from west to east through more than eleven degrees of longitude, and from south to north through more than twelve degrees of latitude, extends the great Territory, the fate of which is now to be determined by the action of Congress. Thus you see, fellow-citizens, that the first operation of the proposed permission of slavery in Nebraska will be to stay the progress of the free States westward, and to cut off the free States of the Pacific from the free States of the Atlantic. It is hoped, doubtless, by compelling the whole commerce and the whole travel between the East and West to pass for hundreds of miles through a slaveholding region, in the heart of the continent, and by the influence of a Federal Government, controlled by the slave power, to extinguish freedom and establish slavery in the States and Territories of the Pacific, and thus permanently subjugate the whole country to the yoke of a slaveholding despotism. Shall a plot against humanity and democracy so monstrous, and so dangerous to the interests of liberty throughout the world, be permitted to succeed?

We appeal to the people. We warn you that the dearest interests of freedom and the Union are in imminent peril.

Demagogues may tell you that the Union can be maintained only by submitting to the demands of slavery. We tell you that the safety of the Union can only be insured by the full recognition of the just claims of freedom and manly The Union was formed to establish justice, and secure the blessings of liberty. When it fails to accomplish these ends, it will be worthless; and when it becomes worthless, it cannot long endure.

We entreat you to be mindful of that fundamental maxim of Democracy—EQUAL RIGHTS AND EXACT JUSTICE FOR ALL MEN. Do not submit to become agents in extending legalized oppression and systematized injustice over a vast Territory yet exempt from these terrible evils.

We implore Christians and Christian ministers to interpose. Their divine religion requires them to behold in every man a brother, and to labor for the advancement and regeneration of the human race.

Whatever apologies may be offered for the toleration of slavery in the States, none can be urged for its extension into Territories where it does not exist, and where that extension involves the repeal of ancient law, and the violation of solemn compact. Let all protest, earnestly and emphatically, by correspondence, through the press, by memorials, by resolutions of public meetings and legislative bodies, and in whatever other mode may seem expedient, against this enormous crime.

For ourselves, we shall resist it by speech and vote, and with all the abilities which God has given us. Even if overcome in the impending struggle, we shall not submit. We shall go home to our constituents, erect anew the standard of freedom, and call on the people to come to the rescue of the country from the domination of slavery. We will not despair; for the cause of human freedom is the cause of God.

NOTE.—The amended Nebraska bill, introduced by Mr. Douglas, was promptly printed at length in the Washington Sentinel. As printed, it did not meet the views of certain southern gentlemen, and it was then discovered that an important declaratory section, legislating into the bill the principles of the compromise, had been omitted by a clerical error. Even after this remarkable clerical error had been rectified, the bill was unsatisfactory, and now Mr. Douglas proposes more amendments—to divide the Territory into two; to charge the Treasury with the expense of two Territorial Governments; to strike out the clerical error section, and insert elsewhere in the bill a clause excepting from the laws of the United States extended over the Territory, the Missouri prohibition. The last proposed amendment will read thus:

"That the Constitution, and all laws of the United States, which are not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory of Nebraska as elsewhere within the United States, except the eighth section of the act preparatory to the admission of Missouri into the Union, approved March 6, 1820, which was superseded by the principles of the legislation of 1850, commonly called the compromise measures, and is hereby declared inoperative."

This amendment is a manifest falsification of the truth of history, as is shown in the body of the foregoing address. Not a man in Congress, or out of Congress, in 1850, pretended that the compromise measures would repeal the Missouri prohibition. Mr. Douglas himself never advanced such a pretence until this session. His own Nebraska bill, of last session, rejected it. It is a sheer afterthought. To declare the prohibition inoperative, may, indeed, have effect in law as a repeal, but it is a most discreditable way of reaching the object. Will the people permit their dearest interests to be thus made the mere hazards of a presidential game, and destroyed by false facts and false inferences?

Letter from Mr. Simonton to Mr. Chase.

SENATE GALLERY, January 30, 1854.

Hon. S. P. Chase:

An act of inadvertence on my part seems to have subjected you to the charge of procuring the publication of the Independent Democratic Address against the Nebraska bill, with the statement that it was signed by a majority of the Representatives from Ohio. I deem it a duty to state to you the circumstances under which the mistake, for which you certainly are not responsible, occurred.

Learning accidentally that an address on the subject was about to be published, I solicited the favor of proof sheets for publication in the New York Daily Times, as a matter of much interest to a large proportion of the reading public. With some difficulty I obtained them, and they were transmitted to New York before any signatures had been appended, and before it had been definitely decided whether the address would be offered for general signature of members of Congress from Ohio, or would be issued as the address of the Independent Democracy in Congress to the people of the United States.

The document first reached the public through the columns of the Times. The evening before it appeared you sent me the names of the signers, with the request that I would send them to New York by telegraph for publication in their proper place, that there might be no mistaking the quarter from whence the document emanated. I regret to say that I failed to telegraph until 10 o'clock at night, when, as it subsequently appeared, the first "form" of the paper had gone to press. That "form," unfortunately, contained the address in question; and my dispatch was too late to accomplish its object. In the absence of any signatures, the editor had appended a note stating that the address was "signed by a majority of the Representatives from Ohio." He did this, I suppose, on an intimation I had previously given him that such an address was about to be issued, and would be so signed. I had no authority, however, for that statement, and did not intend to make it, except as an expression of opinion. The error, which was a very natural one, it will be seen was not committed by you, or at your suggestion; on the contrary, it occurred in the very face of your efforts to prevent it.

If any one will take the trouble to look into the Daily Times of the 24th instant—the issue which contains the address—he will find upon the editorial page the names of each of the gentlemen who did sign that document—those names taken, doubtless, from my dispatch. Thus the error committed on the page containing the address is rectified on the editorial page, where it is stated, also, that the appeal of these Independent Democrats is made to the "people of the United States."

The New York Tribune copied the address from the Times, errors and all; and there can be little doubt that the erroneous publications elsewhere had the same origin. The Evening Post of the 25th contained the address with the proper caption and signatures.

Trusting this explanation may be of service in removing the imputation which has been made,

I am, respectfully, and truly yours,

JAMES W. SIMONTON,
Washington Ed. N. Y. Daily Times.]

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, before the Senate adjourns I crave a single moment. As one of the signers of the address referred to by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS,] I accept now openly, before the Senate and the country, my full responsibility for it, and deprecate no criticism upon it from any quarter. That document was put forth in the discharge of a high public duty; on the precipitate introduction into this body of a measure which, as it seems to me, is not only subversive of ancient landmarks, but hostile to the peace, the harmony, and the best interests of the country. But, sir, in doing this, I judged the act, and not its author. I saw only the enormous proposition, and nothing of the Senator.

The language used is strong, but it is not stronger than the exigency required. Here is a measure which reverses the time-honored policy of our fathers in the restriction of slavery; which sets aside the Missouri Compromise—a solemn compact, by which all the territory ceded by France under the name of Louisiana, was "forever" consecrated to freedom—and which violates, also, the alleged compromises of 1850; and all this is to open an immense territory to the ingress of slavery. Such a measure cannot be regarded without emotions too strong for speech. It cannot be justly described in common language. It is a soulless, eyeless monster—horrid, unshapely, and vast—fitly pictured in the verse of the poet:

"Monstrum horrendum, informe, ingens, cui lumen ademptum,"

And this monster is now let loose upon the country.

Allow me one other word of explanation. It is true that I desired that the consideration of this measure should not be pressed at once with indecent haste, as was proposed, even before the Senate could read the bill in which it was embodied. I had not forgotten that the Missouri bill, as appears from the Journals of Congress, when first introduced in December, 1819, was allowed to rest upon the table nearly two months before the discussion commenced. The proposition to undo the only part of that work which is now in any degree within the reach of Congress should be approached with even a greater caution and reserve. The people have a right to be heard on this monstrous scheme; and there is no apology for that driving, galloping speed, which shall anticipate their voice, and, in its consequences, must despoil them of this right.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD,
The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 30, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM DEPARTMENTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Treasury Department, containing tables showing the number of establishments, and where located, that were engaged in the manufacture of salt, the amount of capital invested in said manufacture, the average quantity manufactured, the table of prices for which salt is sold under the present rate of duties thereon, and also, tables showing the amount of foreign salt imported into the United States.

On motion by Mr. DRUM, the communication was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

^{*} Congressional Globe, 1849-'50, p. 1552; act September 9, 1850—9 United States Statutes at Large, 446.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Second Auditor's Office of the Treasury Department, transmitting copies of accounts rendered by persons charged and intrusted with the disbursement and application of money, goods, and effects for the benefit of the Indians, from the 1st of July, 1852, to the 30th of June, 1853, inclusive, together with statements containing the names of persons to whom money, goods, and effects have been delivered within the period specified.

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, the communication was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting tables in regard to the clerks employed in the Treasury Department, and the several bureaus thereof; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

MADISON PARTON.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the motion to lay upon the table the bill for the relief of Madison Parton. It will be recollected that the amendment proposed to this bill by the Committee of the Whole House was voted down, and also that a motion was made to lay the bill upon the table. The previous question having been ordered to be put, the bill comes up now, although it is a private bill.

Mr. DEAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House rejected the amendment proposed by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay the bill upon the table will supersede all other motions.

Mr. DEAN. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will withdraw it.

Mr. ORR. I will withdraw the motion I made to lay the bill upon the table. I am in favor of the bill, if the clause providing interest is stricken out.

Mr. DEAN. I think it is a dangerous precedent to pay interest in such cases.

Mr. PECKHAM. Is the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] at liberty to make the motion to reconsider?

Mr. DEAN. There are no yeas and nays called.

Mr. PECKHAM. I would suggest whether it be proper to reconsider this bill in the absence of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILLYER] having it in charge?

The SPEAKER. It can be postponed only by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. DEAN. I would suggest that, as the gentleman from Georgia, in whose charge this bill is, is not present, the bill go over by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The proposition to reconsider may be postponed, if it be the pleasure of the House. To when does the gentleman propose to postpone the further consideration of the motion?

Mr. ORR. I suppose to-morrow will be as good a time as any.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I must ask if the gentleman from New York, who moves to reconsider, voted in the affirmative?

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays were not taken, and the gentleman has the right to make the motion, whether he voted in the affirmative or negative.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I do not know whether I have any objection to the proposition to postpone or not. I cannot hear or understand the state of the case.

The SPEAKER. On Friday last a bill for the relief of Madison Parton was reported from the Committee of the Whole House. The bill contained in it a proposition to pay interest upon the claim. The committee proposed to amend by striking out that provision. The House refused to concur in the amendment, and the provision was retained in the bill. A motion was then made to lay the bill upon the table, the previous question having been ordered upon the passage of the bill. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] now withdraws the motion to lay upon the table. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] moves to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to concur in the amendment of the Committee of the Whole; and as the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILLYER,] who reported the bill, is not in the Hall, it is proposed to postpone the further consideration of the motion until to-morrow.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit that the bill being a private one, goes over until the next private bill day.

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been sustained, and the main question ordered, it is the opinion of the Chair that the bill comes up first in order to-day, notwithstanding the fact that it is a private one.

Mr. JONES. I think that makes no difference.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, no other business can intervene until the House has executed its order, that the main question be now put.

Mr. JONES. A majority may suspend even the rule requiring days to be set apart for the consideration of private business. I know it is held that on resolution day, a motion to suspend the rules goes over till the next resolution day; and if, on the next day, a motion be made to reconsider, it must go over until the succeeding resolution day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware that Fridays and Saturdays being set apart for the consideration of private bills, all such bills must go over to the next private bill day, unless the previous question shall have been ordered to be now put, in which case the Chair decides that the bill comes on the next day in which the House is in session. It is a point of no special importance; but the Chair thinks his decision is in accordance with the rules of the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The decision of the Chair is clearly in accordance with the uniform practice of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is it the unanimous consent of the House that the further consideration of the bill go over until to-morrow?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope it will be postponed until Friday next.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that disposition of the motion will be made.

There being no objection, the bill, with the motion to reconsider, was postponed until Friday next.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

The next business in order was the resolution of Mr. EWING, introduced last Monday under a suspension of the rules. The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to request the Senate to return to this House the resolution of the House of the 18th instant, providing for the appointment of a select committee on the amendment of the Constitution in reference to the mode of electing the President and Vice President of the United States.

Mr. EWING. It is my purpose to withdraw that resolution; for I have learned that the Senate, on the motion of the Senator on whose motion our resolution was laid upon the table, will take it up, and that the committee upon their part will probably be appointed.

But, with the indulgence of the House, I would like to give a single word of explanation, assuring them, at the same time, that it is not my purpose to become a babler upon this floor. I will not rise at any time unless in obedience to what seems to me an imperative call of duty. I find that the proposition which I have ventured to offer has been misunderstood by some persons, and, inasmuch as I have the matter very much at heart, a single word of explanation may do some good.

I propose to amend the Constitution in reference to the election of President and Vice President, so as to allow the people to vote directly, without the intervention of electoral agents, upon whom, at present, there rests no other than a moral obligation—no political or legal obligation—to carry out faithfully the will of their constituents. And besides the abolition of electoral agents, I propose to divide the States into as many districts as each State has Senators and Representatives in Congress, the majority of each district to cast its vote for whom it pleases, and that vote counting as a unit.

It perhaps may be sufficient to impress the House with the importance of the resolution, which would derive no title to consideration from the simple fact that I have offered it, to remind them that this is no new proposition. It has been advocated for a period of thirty years. It has been advocated for such men as Thomas H. Benton, Martin Van Buren—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. This is the day for calling the States for resolutions, which occurs but once in two weeks. I submit the question whether the proposition before the House is debatable?

Mr. EWING. I would suggest to my friend from Tennessee that I shall occupy but a few moments.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but some other member may want to make a speech, and the whole day will be consumed upon this question.

Mr. EWING. I do not propose to make a speech.

Mr. JONES. But others may.

Mr. EWING. I can call the previous question when I get through. I submit to the Chair whether I cannot explain the importance of the resolution, and the necessity of recalling it from the Senate?

The SPEAKER. The resolution was introduced under a suspension of the rules last Monday, and is debatable.

Mr. EWING. I do not propose to debate the resolution now. It would be premature to do so. But I have been asked by members of the Select Committee itself, and by others, to explain what I do want; and as I believe it to be an important measure, I wish to say a word in explanation, before members make up their minds.

Mr. HIBBARD. By the leave of the gentleman, and for information merely, as I have no distinct recollection of his resolution, I wish to ask him whether the effect of his amendment, if adopted, would not be to abolish the present mode of choosing electors by the votes of the States, and to provide that each district shall vote, and that the man who receives the votes of a majority of the districts shall be elected President?

Mr. JONES. I rise again to a question of order. The resolution to amend the Constitution is not before the House. The resolution before the House merely proposes to request the return of a certain resolution from the Senate. Is the proposition to amend the Constitution debatable, under this proposition? If so, the whole day may be consumed about this matter.

Mr. EWING. If the gentleman will not make the question of order—

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Tennessee insists on his point of order, it is the duty of the Chair to confine the gentleman from Kentucky to the propriety of asking a return of the resolution from the Senate.

Mr. EWING. I intend to confine myself to that; and I know of no other line of argument which will answer that purpose but the one I am pursuing. I propose to impress upon the House, at least by a few words, the importance of the proposed reform, and the necessity, therefore, of calling on the Senate to return the resolution, which would otherwise be smothered in its infancy.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am with you in regard to your amendment of the Constitution, and go further than you do.

Mr. EWING. I am happy to hear it; but I do not think the gentleman goes further than I do. This reform has been advocated by such men—if I may call the name of a member in connection with such a subject—as Mr. Benton, of Missouri, Martin Van Buren, Mr. Dickinson, George McDuffie, Robert Y. Hayne, Nathaniel Macon, and Richard M. Johnson, of Kentucky. It has been recommended time and again by General Jackson, and opposed chiefly by Rufus King, the great Federalist of New York. This is as brief as any other way that I can present it, to enable the House to understand the character of the proposition.

I know that I shall meet at the outset, the prejudice which is against all amendment of the Constitution; but in the spirit of this age such an objection cannot last long. It will only last long enough to secure proper deliberation, and that is all that it ought to secure. I may be allowed to say, in a word, that, in the amendment of the Constitution, those who apprehend alone the danger of the opening up of the Constitution, as they call it, seem not to see the hidden rocks up toward which we are fast passing, and the necessity for reform. Why, sir, if the time shall ever come when three fourths of these States are prepared to annihilate the rights of the remaining one fourth, and to repeal the constitutional guarantees fixed for their protection, in order to get at and destroy these rights, on such an occasion to offer a proposition of this character would be utterly idle—

Mr. HIBBARD. With the leave of the gentleman, while he is on that point, I wish to know from him whether his amendment, if adopted, would not entirely abrogate the whole system of choosing by States—annihilate State lines entirely in the choice of a President and Vice President?

Mr. EWING. The gentleman ought to be perfectly aware that I cannot undertake to argue and prove just now, and it is not the design of the House that I should do so. The effect of the proposition would not be such as the gentleman describes. His objections in that view, and in all others, are idle and unfounded.

Mr. HIBBARD. I would remark—

Mr. EWING. I cannot yield the floor to the gentleman, because discussion is premature. I wish to confine myself to the direct question of the importance of the examination of this proposition, and the propriety of its examination just now. As to its effects and consequences, I shall be most happy to enter into any amicable discussion, in public or private, at any proper time.

I simply wish to add, that when the time shall come when three fourths of the States are prepared to repeal constitutional guarantees, in order to oppress the remaining one fourth, it would be idle for a man to stand up and say, "Gentlemen, don't do it; because it is very unusual." Therefore, a momentary reflection, it seems to me, ought to teach any one that it furnishes no protection to us whatever, to be able to appeal to those who would amend the Constitution for improper purposes—that it is unusual to amend that Constitution. It is inconsistent with the spirit of the age. It has been proven by repeated action of the people in the amendment of their State constitutions; and I might, if time allowed, enter on an argument on this point as well as on the objections that the gentleman from New Hampshire has enumerated, and which I hope, at some future day, to be able to fully explain.

I know that I am infringing upon the time of the House in prolonging such an argument just now. I simply wish to appeal to gentlemen to suspend their views, if they have not hitherto examined it, on a question of such great importance, as, at least, to have had the earnest labors of those whose names I have just pronounced; and of others, hardly less illustrious; and to await until its proper examination shall enable them to decide, if not favorably upon it, at least without prejudice, and, above all, without that prejudice of the idle, unreasoning conservative, who, while he marches backwards, and only looks to the past, unknowingly strikes upon hidden rocks, upon which it is feared this Government is at last to be wrecked.

I therefore beg leave, Mr. Speaker, to withdraw the motion, as I remarked at the outset, for the reason, as I am happy to learn, that the Senator from California, who made the motion to lay our resolution upon the table, afterwards called it up; and that it will probably be acted upon by the Senate, and acted upon favorably.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has been withdrawn. Resolutions are now in order from the State of New Jersey.

Mr. HIBBARD. Can a resolution be withdrawn if it is objected to?

The SPEAKER. No action at all has been taken on the resolution, therefore it is in order to withdraw it.

Mr. HIBBARD. I wish to make one remark in reference to the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call the gentleman to order. There is nothing before the House.

Mr. HIBBARD. Mr. Speaker, was there not a motion made to lay the resolution upon the table? and were not the yeas and nays called on that motion?

The SPEAKER. There was no motion to lay on the table—no motion of the sort. The resolution was introduced last Monday, under a suspension of the rules, and on the question of its adoption being pending the House adjourned.

Mr. HIBBARD. I am informed that there was a motion to lay the resolution upon the table, and that the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES. Even if that were the case, it does not affect the question of order at all.

The SPEAKER. No; that would not change the order and right of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] to withdraw his resolution. The Chair decides that he had a right to withdraw it.

Mr. HIBBARD. I will not oppose it further; all I had to say would have occupied a less time than that point of order.

CALLS FOR RESOLUTIONS.

The SPEAKER. Resolutions are in order from the State of New Jersey.

Mr. STRATTON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to this House any information which may be on the file in his office in reference to a survey of Crow Shoal, at Cape May.

The SPEAKER. This resolution, calling as it does for information from the Departments, must, under the rule, lie over one day, unless it is the pleasure of the House to consider it now.

Mr. STRATTON. I hope the House will allow the resolution to be put now upon its adoption.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the vote may be taken on the resolution.

There being no objection, the question was put, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. LILLY, in accordance with previous notice, presented the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, viz: "A bill for the relief of James W. Marshall, of Coloma, El Dorado county, California."

Mr. PENNINGTON. I propose the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to report to this House, as early as practicable, the number of acres of the public lands which have been donated by the Government of the United States, as near as may be, and for what purposes, specifying the quantity for each purpose, and in what States and Territories.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing a site and erecting a suitable building in the city of Newark, New Jersey, for a custom house, post office, and other public purposes of the Government of the United States, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. HAMILTON. Is that an absolute direction to erect these buildings?

The SPEAKER. No; it is simply a resolution of instruction to inquire into the expediency of doing so.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. STRAUB, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bills; which were read a first and second time, by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

"A bill establishing the post office of Northumberland, Northumberland county, Pennsylvania, a salaried office." Referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

"A bill for the relief of John Clock and Decatur Herb." Referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

"A bill granting to the State of Pennsylvania a portion of the public lands to aid in constructing and furnishing the Sunbury and Erie Railroad, and for other purposes." Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRIDGES, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill distributing the proceeds of the sales of the public lands among the several States for educational purposes."

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire and report upon the expediency of causing to be purchased, or erected, in the city of Philadelphia, a building to serve as a post office; and if deemed expedient, to accommodate the courts of the United States, and their officers, for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the question is taken upon the resolution, I ask the permission of the House to make one remark upon the latter part of the resolution. It has been said upon this floor, that the room occupied in Philadelphia by the United States Post Office, is not one third large enough to answer their purposes. An event will occur in that State to-day—the consolidation of the city of Philadelphia and all the districts—which will make it necessary for the city to occupy the rooms now occupied by the United States courts. This will render it necessary that other accommodations should be made for the courts. These remarks will show the importance of the latter branch of the resolution.

Mr. WALKER. I move to amend the resolution, by making it also applicable to the city of New York.

Mr. CHANDLER. I cheerfully accept the amendment, as a part of the resolution.

The question was then taken upon the resolution as modified, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HESTER introduced a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be instructed to inquire into the expediency of printing five hundred extra copies of the Blue Book for the present year, for the use of the members of this House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I propose to debate the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The resolution must go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GROW. I offer the following resolution; and if there be objection, I will move to suspend the rules with the view to its adoption.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the 17th rule of the House be amended, by inserting between the words "Treasurer, Comptrollers" the words "Solicitor of the Treasury."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman cannot amend the rules in that way. I propose to debate the resolution.

Mr. GROW. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing the resolution.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I would respectfully suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] that he had better refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. OLDS. Is it in order to have the 17th rule referred?

Mr. GROW. I call for the reading of the rule, and then we can understand the matter better.

The 17th rule was then read, as follows:

"No person, except members of the Senate, their Secretary, heads of Departments, Treasurer, Comptrollers, Registers, Auditors, President's Secretary, Chaplains to Congress, Judges of the United States, Foreign Ministers, and their Secretaries, officers who, by name, have received, or shall hereafter receive, the thanks of Congress for their gallantry and good conduct displayed in the service of their country, the Governor, for the time being, of any State or Territory in the Union, such gentlemen as have been heads of Departments or members of either branch of the National Legislature, the members of the Legislatures, for the time being, of the States and Territories, and, at the discretion of the Speaker, persons who belong to such Legislatures of foreign Governments as are in amity with the United States, shall be admitted within the Hall of the House of Representatives," &c.

The question was then taken upon the suspension of the rules, and it was decided in the negative.

Mr. GROW demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. OLDS and MACE were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes not counted.

Two thirds not voting in the affirmative, the rules were not suspended.

The SPEAKER. The resolution must go over. Mr. DRUM. I desire to inquire whether it will be in order to call up resolutions laid over upon a former day?

The SPEAKER. It is not now in order, unless by unanimous consent, or by a suspension of the rules.

Mr. BOCKOFF offered the following resolution:

Whereas, the present system of postage has proved highly injurious, and unsatisfactory in several particulars:

1. Because it has created a large deficit in the funds of that Department of the Government, to be supplied out of the general treasury.

2. Because by curtailing the pay of the deputy postmasters in the country districts, it has compelled many of the most efficient of them to resign, and has produced a difficulty in obtaining the services of competent men for those offices.

3. Because it has constrained the Postmaster General to adopt a system of policy which is highly unequal in its operation, and which denies to the country districts a proper and reasonable degree of postal accommodations: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of revising our postage laws, and of reporting a bill to correct the evils above set forth.

Mr. HIESTER. I move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. BOGOCOCK. It is only a resolution to inquire into the expediency of making the proposed changes. I hope the House will allow the resolution to be adopted.

The question was taken, and the House refused to lay the resolution upon the table.

The question was again taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER, on leave, introduced a bill "further to prohibit officers in the Army and Navy from having an interest in any contract for the supply of any articles for any branch of the service to which such said officers belong;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McMULLIN, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Mileage:

"A bill to change the mode of compensation to the members of the Senate and House of Representatives, and the Delegates from Territories."

Mr. LETCHER introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the law passed on day of , 1853, in regard to the fees of marshals, district attorneys, and clerks of the Federal courts, so as to give them increased compensation for their services.

Mr. ORR. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That five hundred copies of the Compendium of the Census, ordered to be printed by resolution of the House on the 11th day of January instant, be delivered to the Superintendent of the Census for the use of the Census Bureau.

The question was put on the resolution, and there were—ayes 79, noes 30; no quorum voting. Mr. ORR. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. VAIL, and LANE of Maryland, were appointed.

The question was again put, and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 50.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ORR, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

"A bill defining the terms upon which treaties shall hereafter be made with certain Indian tribes, and for other purposes."

Mr. McQUEEN, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"A bill for the more effectual prosecution of land claims belonging to the United States."

Mr. BOYCE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby requested, if not inconsistent with the public interests, to communicate to the House of Representatives any correspondence which may have taken place between our Government and the Government of Holland, in reference to the refusal of the Dutch authorities in the East Indies to receive or recognize American Consuls.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the resolution be again read?

The resolution was read a second time.

Mr. BOYCE. I wish to state, in one word, on what that resolution was founded.

The SPEAKER. It can hardly be done, unless by unanimous consent of the House. Otherwise it must go over.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYCE. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is predicated upon the report of Mr. Balestier, a special agent of our Government to Eastern Asia. He says, in his dispatches to the Secretary of State, "that no Consuls or American agents of the United States are received or recognized in the Netherlands East India possessions, thereby causing great inconvenience to American merchants, ship-masters, and aggrieved or distressed sailors; that shipwrecked property, in lieu of being taken possession and disposed of by regularly appointed agents of the United States, is taken by Dutch officers, usually unacquainted with commercial business."

There is no portion of the globe more inviting to our commerce, than these islands of the East, nominally under the sway of Holland. There gold may be had for the gathering. This Chinese policy of the Dutch authorities operates as a practical exclusion of our commerce. I wish to know what our Government has done to vindicate our rights?

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I am not opposed to the resolution; but I move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that they may have consultations at the State Department.

Mr. BOYCE. I have no objection to that disposition of it.

The resolution was so referred.

Mr. DENT. I offer the following resolution:

Whereas, the United States court for the northern district of Georgia sits at the town of Marietta, in the county of Cobb, holding its sessions in the court-house, erected by levying an extraordinary tax on the citizens of the town and county: Therefore

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of the United States paying to the justices of the inferior courts, of said county and State such sums as may be deemed just and equitable, and to pay a proper remuneration to the local authorities of said county, for the use of said court-house in future; and that said Committee report by bill or otherwise.

The resolution was considered, and adopted.

Mr. DENT, in accordance with previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads:

"A bill to establish a mail route from Greenville, by Woodbury and Magdalena, to Pleasant Hill, in Georgia."

Mr. DENT, in accordance with previous notice, also introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred, with the documents on file in the House, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions:

"A bill for the relief of Hannah Scroggins."

Mr. SMITH, of Alabama, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bills; which were respectively read a first and second time by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill to donate a portion of the public domain to the Northeastern and Southwestern railroad, in Alabama."

"A bill granting the right of way, and donating a portion of the public domain, to the Gainesville and Mississippi Railroad Company."

Mr. HOUSTON introduced the following resolutions; which were read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting a right of way, and alternate sections of public land, to the State of Alabama, to aid in the construction of the Alabama and Tennessee Central railroad; and, also, to the Florence and Nashville railroad.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish the House of Representatives with such plans and estimates as may be in his Department, for the removal of obstructions of Colbert's Shoals, in the Tennessee river.

Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"A bill to repeal an act entitled 'An act concerning tonnage duties on Spanish vessels.'"

Mr. COBB introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the post office laws, so as to authorize the Postmaster General to increase the compensation of deputy postmasters where their pay is inadequate for services rendered, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing relief for the class of bounty land claimants in which the applicant dies between filing his application and the granting of the warrant, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. BARRY introduced the following bill; which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill to amend an act entitled an act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim swamp lands in their limits."

Mr. BARRY also introduced the following bill; which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims:

"A bill for the relief of Simon Myers."

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

"A bill to provide for the safe keeping of the acts, records, and seal of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. PERKINS offered a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House, if any and what, modification of the present diplomatic and consular system of the United States seems to be required by the public interest.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS also offered the following resolution; which was read, and adopted:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House, if compatible with the public interest, any correspondence not yet published, which may have occurred between the State Department and the American Chargé to Austria with reference to persons claiming protection of the Government.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana, introduced the following bill; which was read the first and second time by its title and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims:

"An act to revive the act approved 3d March, 1823, and an act approved 26th May, 1824, supplementary thereto, in reference to the Rio Honda claims, and to said lands in Louisiana."

Mr. JONES also introduced the following bill; which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

"A bill for the establishment of a marine hospital at Shreveport, in Louisiana."

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, offered a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Rules be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire whether the twenty-fourth rule, as it now stands, does not conflict with the first amendment of the Constitution of the United States; and if so, what modification of said rule is necessary; and that they also inquire in what mode the time of this House usually devoted to the practical business of the country may be most equitably distributed among its members, so that each Representative may present without delay the business of his constituents; and that they report thereon to this House; and also that they inquire into the expediency of evening sessions for general debate, when the House may be in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in which evening sessions no vote shall be taken, and said committee report upon this subject to this House.

The question was then taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of changing the site of the military asylum, near the city of Washington, from its present location to the estate of Mount Vernon, or a part thereof, if the same can be purchased at a reasonable price; and that the said committee also inquire and report to this House the original cost of the present site of said asylum, the quantity of land contained therein, and the amount expended in improvements up to this date, and that they report to this House by bill or otherwise.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. TAYLOR. Have I the right to move to suspend the rules to enable me to submit the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may make the motion.

Mr. TAYLOR. For that purpose I move to suspend the rules.

The question was then taken; and, upon a division, 49 rose in the affirmative.

So two thirds not voting in the affirmative, the rules were not suspended.

Mr. TAYLOR then, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to inquire what changes, if any, are necessary in the amounts now paid to the Ministers at the various foreign courts, where we are now represented, and also what change, if any, should be made in compensating our Consuls, and the amounts now paid to them, and that said committee report to this House by bill or otherwise.

Mr. TAYLOR also introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing an index to be made of the Washington papers now on deposit in the State Department.

Mr. CORWIN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to inquire into the justice and expediency of the Government of the United States recognizing the Government of the Republic of Liberia, in Africa, and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, proposing to debate the resolution, it lies over under the rules.

Mr. WADE offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire what legislation, if any, is required to secure the safe, expeditious, and uninterrupted conveyance of the United States mail on railroads, and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. LINDSLEY introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the erection of custom house and post office buildings at Sandusky city, Ohio; also, of closing the breach made by the waters of Lake Erie across the peninsula which divides the waters of Sandusky bay and Lake Erie; also, of the completion of the public works at the mouth of Huron river; and also, of the completion of the public works at the mouth of Vermillion river.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be directed to inquire into the expediency of causing to be published 10,000 copies of Ferdinand Moulton's compilation of the pension and bounty land laws, for distribution by the Commissioner of Pensions, and to ascertain the cost per copy.

Mr. LETCHER proposing to debate the resolution, it lies over under the rules.

Mr. GREY, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims:

A bill to provide for the unpaid claims of the officers and soldiers of the Virginia State and Continental lines of the revolutionary army.

Mr. CHURCHWELL, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads:—as follows:

"A bill to empower the Postmaster General to contract for the transportation of the United States mail from New Orleans to San Francisco, according to time."

Mr. CHURCHWELL also, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:—as follows:

"A bill granting public lands to the several States of the Union for the establishment of a permanent and efficient system of common schools."

Mr. CHURCHWELL also, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following joint resolution; which was read a first and second time:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the people of this Union have ever viewed with the deepest concern the renewed intervention of Powers in the affairs of countries not embraced within their borders, particularly when such intervention had avowedly for its object the repression of generous political sentiment, and that they will never permit such an occurrence upon this continent without physical resistance to it.

Resolved, That while the United States of America are disposed to observe, in a spirit of good faith, international obligations, they desire a similar observance of such obligations by all of the nations of the earth, and that they can never behold with indifference the obliteration of independent States by a third Power because of the political freedom of such States.

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to cause a copy of these resolutions to be communicated to each of the diplomatic agents of foreign nations residing near this Government; and also, copies thereof to be transmitted to our diplomatic agents in foreign countries, in order that the sentiment and purpose of this Republic may be neither misconceived nor misunderstood in any quarter of the globe.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I move the reference of that joint resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HAMILTON. I propose to discuss it.

THE SPEAKER. The resolution is a joint one, and in the nature of a bill, and the motion now pending is, that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HILLYER. Is it in order to move to lay the resolution upon the table?

THE SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HILLYER. Then I submit that motion.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HILLYER. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHURCHWELL and HILLYER were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported 48 ayes. There not being a majority of a quorum, the resolution was not laid on the table.

The question was then put on referring the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the revision and rearrangement of the laws of the United States; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

The question was put, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have no resolution to offer, but I ask to withdraw one which I introduced here on the 12th of December. It stands second on the Calendar.

THE SPEAKER. If not objected to, the gentleman from Tennessee may withdraw his resolution.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. What is it?

Mr. JONES. It was one which proposed that the Reporters of the Globe be furnished with stationery.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

Mr. JONES. Then I move to suspend the rules of the House to allow me to withdraw it. The resolution will not come up any more; and if not withdrawn, it will only stand here to be printed on every Calendar from this time to the end of the session.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules, and it was agreed to.

The resolution was then withdrawn.

Mr. MACE. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be permitted to cause to be printed, for the use of the House, such amendments as they may propose to the rules.

The question was taken on the resolution, and it was adopted.

Mr. MACE also, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

"A bill to prevent malicious mischief and protect property in the District of Columbia."

Mr. PARKER introduced the following resolution; which was read by the Clerk:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of the United States Census be requested to furnish this House, at an early day, with what he may deem the best plan for Congress to adopt to induce the establishment of State Bureaus of Statistics that may be relied on for all desirable census information, other than the decennial enumeration of the people, and otherwise to supply the defects of the system heretofore acted upon, and at the same time economize the expenses of the system.

Mr. DUNHAM. I propose to debate that resolution.

THE SPEAKER. Then the resolution must go over under the rules.

The resolution was laid over.

Mr. MILLER, of Indiana, introduced a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"A bill in addition to an act entitled 'An act for the relief of the inhabitants on the reserved township in Gibson county, in the State of Indiana,' approved August 11, 1842."

Mr. MILLER also introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a national armory at Evansville, on the Ohio river.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a marine hospital at Galena, Illinois.

Mr. JAMES C. ALLEN introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee of five members of the House be appointed by the Speaker to examine the model of an invention (by Samuel Huffman) for taking the yeas and nays in legislative bodies, and that they be instructed to report upon the expediency of adopting the same in this body.

Mr. CHANDLER proposing to debate the resolution, it was laid over under the rule.

Mr. MILLER, of Missouri, introduced a bill; which was read the first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill granting to the State of Missouri the right of way and a portion of the public lands to aid the construction of a railroad from St. Louis to Kansas."

Mr. MILLER also introduced a bill; which was read the first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims:

"A bill for the relief of George Macgirk."

Mr. OLIVER, of Missouri, introduced a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill to relinquish to the State of Missouri, on certain conditions, two per centum of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands sold in said State since the 1st day of January, 1821, and reserved by the act of Congress of the 6th of March, 1820."

Mr. WARREN offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the pay of the Registers of the different land offices.

Mr. GREENWOOD offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the justice and propriety of compensating the registers and receivers of the general land districts in the United States, for the location of the public lands, with scrip; and that the said committee report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. SMYTH, of Texas, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of dividing the State of Texas into two judicial districts, and report to this House by bill or otherwise.

Mr. SMYTH also offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a light-house on Sabine Pass, at the mouth of the Sabine river, and report to this House accordingly.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I had just stepped out of the House when the State of Illinois was called. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution.

The resolution was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill extending the pension laws to all those persons who were engaged in the war of 1812, or the Indian wars prior thereto, and to their widows in case of their decease.

There being no objection,

Mr. W. submitted the above resolution; which was considered and agreed to.

Mr. HENN, on leave, introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the correction of erroneous locations of military bounty land warrants by actual settlers on the public lands in certain cases;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a bill to increase the salaries of judges of the United States courts in the district of Utah; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HENN also submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of dividing the State of Iowa into two judicial districts.

Mr. EASTMAN submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House what steps he has taken to prevent trespasses upon the public lands in the States of Wisconsin, Michigan, and the Territory of Minnesota; and whether or not he has appointed an agent or agents for that purpose, and if so, who are appointed, and the date of their appointment, and under what provision of law they were appointed, and what instructions he has given said agents; and also to communicate to this House any report that such agents have made, in full, and what salary or compensation is paid to such agents, and how much money has been received by such agents, from persons who have cut timber on the public land, by way of compounding such trespasses, and the expenses incurred in collecting the same, and all the items thereof.

Mr. LATHAM. I made the motion on Friday last to reconsider the vote by which a bill, reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. That bill has since been printed, and I desire now to call up the motion to reconsider, with a view of putting the bill upon its passage. My reason for so doing is, that a small delay in the passage of the bill will result in defeating the very object it proposes to accomplish. The following is the title of the bill:

"A bill supplemental to an act, entitled 'An act to ascertain and settle private land claims in the State of California,' approved March 3, 1851.

The bill was read through by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the report in this case is in the hands of the printer.

Mr. LATHAM. I can state the substance of the report. The gentlemen whose names are mentioned in that bill employed a lawyer of standing and ability in the State of California to present their claims before the land commissioners. He was taken sick with small-pox while he had their claims under consideration, and no one would go near him, in consequence of the disease being infectious. The result was that the time prescribed in the original statute for the presentation of their claims expired, and they were deprived of their legal rights. It certainly would be wrong that these gentlemen should be thus deprived of their legal rights in consequence of the calamity and misfortune of their attorney—such a one as he could not, in any manner, prevent. The bill is strictly guarded, so as to give them no rights except such as they had under the original bill. It merely gives them time to present their claims. If the bill remains in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it will probably be the fall before it can pass. The commission will then have nearly expired, and it takes some four or five months' labor to get a claim ready to present before the commission. For these reasons, I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then put, and, on a division, there were—69 in the affirmative, and 1 in the negative; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to count the members present, with a view of ascertaining if there were a quorum in attendance, when it appeared that there were only 102 members in their seats; no quorum.

Mr. DEAN. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn, there being, on a division—ayes 44, noes 56.

Mr. DEAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think if we have the yeas and nays on the call of the House that we shall find a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. There is no quorum present in the House, for the Chair has counted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask that the question may be taken by yeas and nays, so that the record may show whether a quorum is, or is not present.

The SPEAKER. One of the rules of the House gives the right to the Chair to ascertain whether a quorum be present or not.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not doubt the right of the Chair to do so.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 62, nays 97; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, Ashe, Banks, Belcher, Benton, Boyce, Bridges, Bugg, Carpenter, Caskey, Chamberlain, Churchill, Cook, Crocker, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dean, Dent, Disney, Dunbar, Edmundson, Etheridge, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Fuller, Greenwood, Hamilton, Aaron Harlan, Henna, Hibbard, Houston, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lane, Latham, Matteson, Mayall, Milson, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Orr, Pratt, Reese, Thomas Ritchey, Sage, Seward, Shannon, George W. Smith, Hester L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, Tweed, Vansant, Walbridge, Ellihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, and Wheeler—62.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Ball, Bissell, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Corwin, Cox, Craige, Dawson, Dowdell, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, English, Ewing, Flagler, Gamble, Giddings, Goode, Goodrich, Grey, Andrew J.

Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Harrison, Hendricks, Hiestler, Hillyer, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, George W. Jones, Kerr, Knox, Lilly, Lindsey, McCulloch, McDougall, McMullin, Mace, Macy, Maurice, Maxwell, Mencham, Middlewarth, John G. Miller, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Packer, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pringle, Puryear, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Straub, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Vail, Wade, Walker, Walsh, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Daniel B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcofer—97.

So the House refused to order a call of the House; and there was a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill supplemental to an act, entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California," approved March 3, 1851, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LANE, in accordance with previous notice, introduced a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on Territories:

"A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to settle and adjust the expenses of the people of Oregon from attacks and hostilities of the Cayuse Indians, in the years 1847 and 1848,' approved August 2, 1852.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a set of resolutions adopted by the State of Rhode Island, which I move to have read.

The resolutions were ordered to be read, as follows:

State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, in General Assembly, January Session, A. D. 1854.

Whereas, Congress, by a provision of an act approved the 6th day of March, 1820, commonly called "the Missouri Compromise Act," for ever prohibited slavery or involuntary servitude, except for crime, north of the parallel of thirty-six and a half degrees of latitude in all the territory acquired from France, except that portion lying within the State of Missouri.

And whereas, certain propositions have recently been made tending to disturb this compromise, it is

Resolved, That it be recommended to our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their best efforts to prevent the passage of any law whereby slavery or involuntary servitude, except for crime, can, under any circumstances, ever be introduced or established north of said parallel.

Resolved, That the Governor be requested to transmit copies of the foregoing resolution to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to be by them presented to their respective Houses.

Attest: A. POTTER, Secretary of State.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that these resolutions be referred to the Committee on Territories, and be printed.

It was so ordered.

Mr. DEAN, in accordance with previous notice, introduced a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

"A bill to remove the United States Mint from the city of Philadelphia to the city of New York."

Mr. HASTINGS, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

"A bill to amend the pension laws therein mentioned."

Mr. WHEELER introduced a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee be appointed to examine into and report whether the census report, as printed under the law, has been performed in conformity thereto; and if not, wherein and to what extent the act of Congress has been violated.

Mr. WHEELER. I call the previous question upon its passage.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would inquire if it does not require two thirds of the House to appoint a select committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. A majority of the House may appoint such committees as they choose.

Mr. JONES. They cannot do it, because the rules provide that the Chair shall appoint them.

The SPEAKER. "Unless otherwise ordered by the House," is the language of the rule. The House ordered the Chair to appoint the committees. The practice has been, as the gentleman will remember, that whenever a majority of the House has ordered a select committee, the Chair has appointed.

The House was then divided upon the demand for the previous question, and it was not seconded, 44 only voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the motion recurs upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. ORR. I move that the words "select committee be appointed to" be stricken out, and insert in lieu thereof the words "the Committee on Printing."

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was then agreed to.

Mr. WALBRIDGE introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Select Committee appointed to inquire into the expediency of amending the Constitution, so as to give the election of President directly to the people, be also instructed to inquire into the expediency of the election of postmasters and collectors of the revenues by the people, and to report thereon at an early day.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I demand the previous question upon its passage.

The previous question was not seconded.

The question then recurring upon the adoption of the resolution, it was taken; and there were—ayes 38, noes not counted.

So the resolution was not agreed to.

Mr. PECKHAM offered a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested, if not inconsistent with the public interest, to transmit to this House copies of the correspondence not now communicated, of the United States Legation at Constantinople, and the United States consulate at Smyrna, with Captain Ingraham, and with the Government of Austria, and with this Government, together with the instructions from this Government to their agents abroad touching the seizure and rescue of Martin Koszta, and the terms and conditions on which he was liberated and sent to this country.

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. CUTTING. I beg leave to report a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary which has already passed the Senate, and which requires the immediate action of this House. Its object is to enable the Secretary of the Interior to hire rooms for the accommodation of the United States courts in the city of New York, their buildings having been recently destroyed by fire, and to enable process made returnable at the present or former court-room to be made returnable at the rooms which the Secretary of the Interior may provide for the exigency of the case. The wheels of justice are now or will be stopped, unless this measure be immediately acted upon. If there is no objection, I will now report the bill.

The bill was then read by its title, as follows:

"An act to provide a place for holding the courts of the United States for the southern district of New York, and for other purposes."

Mr. CUTTING. I move that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and having been engrossed, was subsequently read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAGE. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. There is no morning hour to-day.

Mr. WALKER. There is a resolution lying upon the Speaker's table inquiring of the Secretary of the Treasury with regard to the coinage of gold and silver at the assay office in New York. I should like to take it up, if such a motion comes within the rules.

There was no objection; and the following resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to report to this House whether the assay office, now in the course of construction in the city of New York, is of sufficient capacity for the coinage of gold and silver, and if so, whether, in his opinion, it would be convenient and proper for Congress to authorize the coinage at the said office."

Mr. PRINGLE submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be instructed to report at an early day the bill which passed the House of Representatives at the late session of Congress, providing for the organization of the Territory of Nebraska.

Mr. HAMILTON. I propose to debate that resolution.

The SPEAKER. Then it must go over.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. An adverse report upon the bill for the relief of John Drout and Eliza Merrill was presented by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which, with the bill, was ordered to lie upon the table. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table, with a view of having it recommitted. I will state that I do it with the assent of the gentleman who made the report.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. There is evidently no quorum present. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw the motion until this matter can be disposed of. It will take but a moment, and I am sure there can be no objection. I state again that the gentleman who made the adverse report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions is willing that the bill should be recommitted. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the motion.

Mr. DAVIS declined to withdraw the motion. The question was put, and the motion was agreed to; and

The House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 31, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information in relation to the improvement of the Arkansas river; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Also, a letter from the Commissioner of Patents, communicating that portion of the annual report for the year 1853 which relates to arts and manufactures; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. WELLER moved that the usual extra number of copies be printed; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. PEARCE presented a memorial of inspectors of customs for the port of Baltimore, praying an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SEWARD presented a memorial of forty-three citizens of Wayne county, in New York, praying an appropriation of public lands for the construction of a ship canal around the falls of Niagara; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a petition of citizens of New York, praying that a contract may be entered into with Christian Hansen, for the transportation of the United States mail, by steamers, between Brooklyn and certain ports in Europe; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BENJAMIN presented the memorial of Charles McCormick, an assistant surgeon in the Army, asking to be allowed a percentage on money disbursed by him under the act of March 2, 1847; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SLIDELL presented the petition of the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce, praying that provision be made by law for the remission of duties on merchandise destroyed by fire; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented the petition of George Alexander, praying pecuniary relief on account of loss of health while in the service of the United States Commission to run the north-eastern boundary line; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented the petition of Minerva Catlett, widow of Hanson Catlett, a surgeon in the Army, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NORRIS presented the petition of the captain and members of the Auxiliary Guard of the city of Washington, praying an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GWIN presented a memorial of the officers and crew of the United States frigate St. Lawrence, praying to be allowed an increase of pay; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CHASE. I ask leave to submit the petition of certain citizens of Cincinnati, who represent that the commerce and the interests of the citizens of the western States suffer great losses in consequence of the obstructions at the falls of the Ohio, at Louisville. They represent that a private company have been organized to construct a canal on the Indiana side, the canal on the Kentucky side not being sufficient for the commerce of the river. They ask that an appropriation, either of land or of money, may be made by the Government in aid of that company. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the petition of John Bronson, praying compensation for losses of property destroyed by Indians during the last war, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the petition of John P. McElderry, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. BADGER, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill allowing a credit for a limited period for duties on railroad iron imported into the United States, reported it back with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PRATT, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to incorporate the National Hotel Company of Washington City; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MALLORY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill to constitute Palatka and Bayport, in the State of Florida, ports of delivery, respectively; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. FOOT, according to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to incorporate the National Pacific Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FOOT. I had intended, Mr. President, upon the introduction of that bill, to explain at some length its several provisions; but inasmuch as the whole subject is now before a Select Committee, I shall forbear trespassing upon the time allotted to the ordinary business of the morning hour, and therefore move the reference of the bill to the Select Committee, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. WALKER, it was Ordered, That the petition of Matthew Rippey be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion by Mr. PEARCE, it was Ordered, That the petition of the heirs of John Ireland be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was Ordered, That the petition of Katy White, widow of Lieutenant William White, of the revolutionary army, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. ATCHISON, it was Ordered, That the petition of Captain C. L. Easton be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the petition and papers of Don Juan Virgil.

SEIZURE OF THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Mr. CLAYTON submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, copies of all correspondence between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain in regard to the Sandwich Islands, including copies of all communications between the Secretary of State and Mr. Fox, the British Minister, during the years 1843 and 1844, in regard to the independence of those islands, and especially of the letters of Mr. Fox to Mr. Upshur of the 25th of June, 1843, and of Mr. Upshur to Mr. Fox of the 5th July, 1843; also, a copy of any protest or other communication from the King of the Sandwich Islands to this Government in regard to the seizure of those islands by Lord George Paulet, commander of his Britannic Majesty's ship Carysfort, and of any reply of this Government thereto.

DEFENSE OF BALTIMORE.

Mr. PEARCE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate a statement, showing the amount of money that has been allowed and paid under the acts of 26th June, 1834, and 29th May, 1830, to the owners of the following-named vessels, sunk for the defense of the harbor of Baltimore, to wit: Ship Scioto, schooner Packet, ship Packet, brig Ann, brig Betsey, brig George, ship Adriana, schooner Scudder, brig Blanche, brig Sally, ship Mars, sloop Rosanna, schooner Enterprise, brig Eliza, brig Swallow, schooner Columbia, ship Thomas Wilson, and ship Chesapeake.

APPEAL FROM DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. MALLORY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for appeals from the district courts of the United States in the State of Florida to one of the circuit courts of the United States, in all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction in which the amounts in controversy may be less than two thousand dollars, exclusive of costs.

NEW POST ROUTE.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Macedonia, via Bethlehem, to Glenwood, in Iowa.

RAILROADS IN WISCONSIN—NEBRASKA.

On motion by Mr. WALKER, the bill granting a portion of public lands to the State of Wisconsin, to aid in the construction of a railroad and branch road in said State, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to grant to the State of Wisconsin, (for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from near its southern boundary, east of range thirteen, by way of Janesville, in Rock county, and Fon-du-Lac, on Lake Winnebago, to such point on Lake Superior as may be designated under its authority, and for the construction of a branch railroad from Janesville, by way of Madison, to the St. Croix river, near the falls thereof) every alternate section of land designated by odd numbers, for six sections in width on each side of the road and branch road, with the right to take other lands, within fifteen miles of the roads, in case the lands along the route shall have been sold, or may be subject to preemption rights. It also proposes to double the price of the reserved sections.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to say very briefly that this bill is reported according to the form agreed upon by the Committees on Public Lands of the two Houses of Congress. It passed the Senate at the last session, making a grant of a greater quantity of land than is now proposed. I simply ask the Senate to vote upon it, whatever its voice may be in regard to it. It is reported upon unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAWSON. I should like to be informed whether there has been a survey made of the route of the road?

Mr. WALKER. There has, and it has been located.

Mr. DAWSON. I should like to know the number of miles of the main road and branch road.

Mr. WALKER. That cannot be answered definitely at present. I said that the road was located. The northern terminus of it strikes the line of Michigan. Before it can pass through Michigan, some action of that State will be required. I believe that the length of the road is about one hundred and ninety miles; but I would say this, that if it were longer, passing through public lands of the character that they are in that portion of the State, the better it would be for the Government, because there is no means by which

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 19.

the Government can sell those lands for a great length of time, unless railroads, or some other means for reaching them, should be constructed.

This proposes to increase the price of the reserved sections for the Government to double their present price. The Government, consequently, will lose nothing; but will, on the contrary, gain the transportation of its munitions of war and troops, and all this for nothing; and then the transportation of mails, as Congress may direct. I am very confident that the Government is giving nothing; for we propose to pay for half of the lands reserved to the Government as much as the whole of them would now bring if sold at $1 25 an acre; and we have experience to show us that the lands will sell a great deal better than they would without the construction of the road. I do not wish to occupy time, or I could give further explanation in relation to this matter. All I ask for is a vote.

Mr. DAWSON. This is a question which has been often before us; and during this session of Congress I think there will be an attempt made to settle the question of the disposition of the public lands upon some principle. I am unwilling, as it is known to this body, to sanction this voting away the public lands for railroad purposes, after the plan which we have heretofore pursued. Here is a railroad about which we know but little. The bill proposes to give the alternate sections of the public lands for fifteen miles along the whole length of the line, for a distance of one hundred and ninety miles. It is said, and it may be true, that the alternate sections will bring $2 50 per acre, for those reserved; and hence, that they will be equivalent to the whole amount; but my objection to it is this:

I do not believe that we have the right or the power to give away the public lands in this way; and if we had that right and that power, it ought to be exercised upon the principle of giving equal justice to every State in the Union. I suggest, therefore, to the Senator from Wisconsin that, for the present, he had better let the bill lie upon the table, or consent to its postponement until a particular day; for I should like to look into the route on the map, to see to what point it is to lead, and whether the commercial wants of the country at this time demand the road.

It is said it is going through a country where the lands are valueless; thereby, I suppose, is meant that they have not yet been settled. There is no necessity whatever for hasty legislation on this subject. I do not think the emergencies are such as demand action at this time. I beg of the Senator to let it lie over. I do not desire to go into the discussion, but I should like to be better satisfied in relation to the terms on which the grant is to be made. It will do no injury to postpone it; there are a great many other bills of the same kind, and when we pass them, if we intend to pass them at all, let us act upon such a plan as the Committee on Public Lands shall present to us, and settle the principle.

Now, I am unwilling to go into the discussion of the claim which I consider every State in this Union has to a share of the public lands. It is not necessary for me to do so. It is thoroughly understood. If the old States intend to ask any of the rights that are due to us, now is the time, and let us not embarrass ourselves, and create a precedent during this session of Congress, by giving away the public lands, before we decide the general question.

If a majority of this body shall determine to give lands for purposes similar to that contained in the bill, I shall then take my seat, and not interpose further opposition; but I hope that this bill will not be acted upon and passed this morning. Let a particular day be designated on which the question can arise connected with the public lands, so that we can have the discussion and decision without a running debate upon every proposition of the kind.

I suppose the disposition of public lands contained in this bill will involve about six hundred thousand acres, or an amount equivalent to a million of dollars. If we were asked for this in money, there would be great discussion on the subject; and I do not see, in point of principle, any difference between granting lands and money. They are equivalent; and the appropriation of one is just on the same principle as the appropriation of the other. I hope my suggestion will be accepted and acted on.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is evident that this bill will lead to discussion. The time has arrived for taking up the special order of the day, which is the Nebraska and Kansas bill; and as it was understood that we should go on from day to day with that bill when it was taken up, and as a Senator has the floor, and is entitled to go on, I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill for the purpose of taking up the special order.

Mr. WALKER. I advocate this bill because I am instructed by my Legislature to do so, and for no other reason. I expressed myself on a former occasion in regard to it. I have nothing to say in reference to it now more than what I then said. I was anxious to get a vote, that the matter might be off my hands. If the Senate will pass the bill now, I shall be glad; but as it seems to be the opinion of those who have spoken, that we should proceed to the consideration of the special order, I will consent to the postponement of the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I suppose, if postponed until to-morrow, it will go on the Calendar, so that it can be taken up at any time; but that the postponement will not make it a special order for to-morrow. I shall ask the Senate then to go on with the Nebraska bill, according to the understanding of the Senate.

Mr. WALKER. I understand that the Senator from Ohio wishes to make a remark as to taking up the Nebraska bill.

Mr. CHASE. I wish to say that, so far as my personal convenience is concerned, I should desire a postponement of the discussion of the Nebraska bill, having the floor, and not desiring to speak at this time. The Senator from Illinois, in his speech yesterday, referred to certain historical facts, and to certain historical documents which require some examination from me in replying to his speech. I have not, in consequence of other engagements, had an opportunity of making that examination; and if I proceed to-day, I shall proceed under a disadvantage. I am, however, at the disposal of the Senate, and shall submit to such order as they think fit to make.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I stated a week ago to-day, when I proposed to take up this bill, that I did not wish to deprive any Senator of the opportunity of full investigation of, and full discussion upon the question. At the suggestion of the Senator who now asks the indulgence of the Senate, I consented to its postponement until yesterday, with the understanding that it should be the special order from day to day until disposed of. At his suggestion then, it was agreed that it should be the special order from day to day until disposed of, and not laid over until finished. Now, sir, a further extension of time is asked, on the ground that he has not had an opportunity of investigating the historical facts to which I alluded.

That is just what I complained of yesterday, that he had published a history of this question to the world without investigating those very facts which he wishes now to examine. I should have preferred that he had understood the facts before he published them to the world, instead of taking time now, and postponing the business of the Senate in order to give him an opportunity of understanding that which it seems he did not understand. I would now with pleasure yield in order to give time for him to understand the question; but if we yield now, to-morrow or next day another Senator who opposes the bill will ask the same indulgence, and so we shall go on. We all understand that the object is to prevent the action of the body upon the question. The enemies of the bill wish to keep it off—to stave it off—to run the discussion into the elections, and get up an excitement and agitation in the country, in order to prevent action.

The friends of this bill wish to meet the discussion fairly, directly, promptly, both in argument and by vote. With these remarks, I will only say that I stood pledged in the Senate to resist all postponements, and to carry out the understanding that we should proceed with this bill from day to day; I cannot, therefore, yield. I have refused friends when they have applied, and, of course, I am compelled to apply the same rules to those whom I do not choose so to designate.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, I expect no courtesy, and desire none from the Senator from Illinois. I do not think he is capable of understanding what the obligations of courtesy are. So far as my present position is concerned, I have only to say that I am prepared to defend the position which I have heretofore assumed. But the Senator introduced new facts and a new version of history into his argument. I desire to verify my position by the record, and I should prefer time for that purpose.

Sir, in regard to the understanding which the Senator seems to think existed upon this floor, all that I have to say is this: When the Senator proposed to proceed to the consideration of this bill on a former occasion, I, with other Senators—the Senator from Michigan included—proposed to defer it to a future day, for the purpose of giving Senators an opportunity to read the bill which had just been laid upon our tables.

I was willing, and I am willing that the discussion should proceed from day to day, according to the ordinary usages of the Senate; but a week ago I distinctly stated in my place that there was a question of privilege, which, in my judgment, should be determined before this measure should be pushed to a vote. That question of privilege is yet depending; it has not been settled by the Senate.

Now, sir, I have said already that I am at the disposal of the Senate. I can proceed to-day, but shall proceed at a disadvantage; and it is for the Senate to determine whether I shall proceed or not.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have one word to say, in reply to the Senator from Ohio. He says that I am incapable of understanding courtesy. I am incapable of understanding that rule of courtesy which authorizes a Senator on this floor to write and issue a libel against a brother Senator, and then come to that Senator with a smile on his face, and ask his courtesy to give him an opportunity to circulate it secretly, before the libel can be exposed. That kind of courtesy I am incapable of——The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the Senator from Illinois is out of order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish, then, to ask the President if it would not have been well to judge whether it was in order to allow the Senator from Ohio to say that a Senator from Illinois was incapable of understanding courtesy.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio was certainly out of order when he made use of that expression.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then I am content.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will deem it to be his duty hereafter in this discussion, promptly to call every Senator to order who may be out of order.

Mr. CASS. I merely rise, Mr. President, to express the hope that the comity which is due to a brother Senator will induce the Senate to postpone this discussion.

The Senator from Ohio occupies a very peculiar position before the country upon this question. Certainly, the honorable Senator from Illinois, in his able and elaborate argument yesterday, went over the field very thoroughly, and presented some very striking views; and it is the most natural thing in the world that, considering the position of the Senator from Ohio, he should want an opportunity—more than one night could have afforded him, after hearing the speech—to look into the subject, with a view of fairly meeting the argument. I do not think he can do justice to himself without examining the subject, nor do I think we should do justice to him unless we gave him an opportunity of doing so.

No man will accuse me, I am sure, of wishing to postpone this subject with a view to agitation. I am too old to allow such a charge against me; and I have had enough of agitators. I have no such wish. I must agitate very speedily if I agitate at all. But notwithstanding that, I am for giving perfect latitude of discussion. Under these circumstances, I am not for precipitating the action of a member of the Senate. I would go on with the bill from day to day; I would not allow it to be postponed in order to lead to unnecessary agitation, but still I would not precipitate the action of any Senator. I would give him ample time to look into it, and I think in that way alone can we do justice to the subject and to the States which we represent.

Mr. WELLER. I am very glad that my friend from Michigan has expressed my own sentiments upon this subject. This is by far the most important question, perhaps, that will be submitted to the Senate during the present session, and I think that ample time should be given to every Senator who desires to express his opinions in relation to it. Almost every section of the Confederacy is more or less interested directly in the questions which are involved in the organization of these Territories. I confess that I do not myself understand the feelings, the wishes, or the opinions of my constituents on the subject. I have had no means of ascertaining what their desires may be in regard to it. Nevertheless, without information, I shall unquestionably be called upon to act.

If the views presented by the Senator from Illinois yesterday be founded upon historical facts; if they be true—and, without examination, I am inclined to the opinion that they are—his argument is an unanswerable one; and when the Senator from Ohio, who occupies a peculiar relation to this subject, asks that he shall have a little time, in order to determine the truth of that argument, I think it no more than a matter of courtesy that the Senate should give him at least one day to prepare himself.

I know of no reason why we should fear the agitation of this question in the country. That agitation cannot affect our judgment, and cannot affect the truth. I am willing at all times that the questions upon which I am called to act shall be deliberated and discussed before the people—that they shall have an opportunity of expressing their opinions upon questions which are to affect their weal or woe for years to come. I say, therefore, that I can see no sort of propriety in withholding from the Senator from Ohio that degree of courtesy which I have never seen refused in this body, when he asks for but a single day, in order that he may test the truth of that upon which the Senator from Illinois has founded what I conceive to be an unanswerable argument. I am willing to yield to him one day for that purpose. If he can show that those statements are not true, I desire that he shall have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish to say to the Senator from California, that I do not understand the application of the Senator from Ohio to be for a single day. I was told it was for a week. If it is only for a day, I will cheerfully agree to it.

Mr. CHASE. My application was not for a single day. My engagements in the court below are such that I cannot be here to-morrow; and it will be necessary, therefore, if the bill is to be postponed at all, that it shall be postponed until some day when I shall be here. I hope it will not be postponed to any day nearer than Friday; but of course I must yield to the wishes of the Senate.

Mr. WELLER. I understood the proposition to be simply to postpone the consideration of this subject until to-morrow. This I think a reasonable request. The request now made by the Senator to postpone the Nebraska bill for a week, or until Friday, is, in my judgment, an unreasonable one, and therefore I cannot give my consent to it. I supposed that the Senator desired to have another day, for the purpose of investigating the questions involved in that bill. It seems to me, however, that he ought to have investigated them long ago. The Senator from Ohio is, I believe, the representative of the State of Ohio upon the single question of slavery, or upon questions connected therewith; and if there is any question which is agitated in the American Senate which one might suppose the Senator fully comprehended in all its length and breadth, it is this very question of slavery in the Territories of the United States. To my knowledge he has devoted the best years of his life to this subject; and at this time, after he has made a publication in which he endeavors to place the Committee on Territories in a false position upon a historical question, it does seem to me that he ought to have comprehended it fully before he made those charges. I cannot, therefore, consent to the postponement of this subject until Friday.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on postponing until to-morrow the bill granting a portion of the public lands to the State of Wisconsin to aid in the construction of a railroad and branch road in said State.

Mr. WALKER. I understand it to be the wish of the Senate that that bill shall be postponed, and consequently I shall not resist the motion.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

TERRITORY OF NEBRASKA.

The PRESIDENT. The unfinished business of yesterday is the bill to organize the Territory of Nebraska; and upon this bill the Senator from Ohio [Mr. CHASE] has the floor.

Mr. WELLER. If it will be any convenience to the Senator from Ohio, I move to postpone the consideration of this bill until to-morrow, with a distinct understanding, of course, that the discussion shall then proceed.

Mr. CASS. I would merely suggest to my friend from California, whether, under the circumstances, it would not be better to postpone the bill for a little longer time than he proposes? A day or two is certainly of no importance compared with the great object of avoiding any appearance of precipitation before the country; and I would suggest, therefore, that he had better substitute Friday. If this be agreed to on all hands there will be no difficulty; there can be no hard feeling entertained in any quarter; and there can be no accusation brought against the American Senate of precipitating such an important question. I hope the Senator will say Friday.

Mr. CLAYTON. There is a question of privilege, which is entitled to precedence over this and all other subjects, and which ought to be disposed of before the Senate proceeds further. That question of privilege is, whether the gentleman who holds a seat now from the State of Vermont [Mr. PHELPS] is entitled to retain that seat or not. That Senator has not pressed his claim for consideration, because, I suppose, he has felt a desire to yield to the wishes of the Senate. But it must be observed by all gentlemen here, that his situation is peculiarly unpleasant. He wishes to retain his seat, if he is entitled to it; and if not, he desires to be dismissed from further attendance.

I trust that question will not be postponed for any other subject. It can take but a little while to discuss and decide it. By parliamentary rules it is entitled to precedence, as I have said, over all other questions; and I understand from my colleague, [Mr. BAYARD] who has the floor upon that subject, that he will be ready to proceed to-morrow with the discussion. It was at his request that the matter was postponed, in consequence of his indisposition at a former day. I trust, therefore, that whether the discussion on this bill goes on to-day or not, to-morrow will be devoted to the decision of that question of privilege.

Mr. DOUGLAS. In order to secure entire unanimity upon this subject, as the first compact would not hold, I am willing to make another. Friday is now named as the day. If it can now be fixed by general consent that this bill shall be postponed to, and made the special order for Friday, I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that, by a resolution of the Senate, Friday of each week is appropriated to the consideration of private bills; and that resolution must be rescinded, or got rid of in some way, before any other disposition can be made of that day.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then I am willing to postpone this bill until Thursday, with the understanding, that it shall be the special order from day to day until disposed of, and not be interrupted by any other business.

Mr. SEWARD. Will the honorable Senator allow me to make one suggestion to him? I do not know whether he understands that the Senator from Ohio is not prepared to go on to-day; he will be prepared to go on to-morrow, but is liable to be called into the court below, which never allows any excuse for non-attendance. If he goes there to-morrow, in the argument of a cause, he may or may not get out of the court next day; for there is scarcely any cause which is taken up there which does not generally require the attention of counsel for parts, at least, of two days. I did not know whether the honorable Senator from Illinois understood that to be the situation of the honorable Senator from Ohio or not.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If we begin by postponing the bill each day when a member has a law case to attend to, and if we interrupt the proceedings of the Senate for that, it is very evident that a small minority may postpone the disposition of this subject indefinitely. All that I want is that we shall have an understanding that we are to go on from day to day with this bill until it is disposed of. If Thursday will answer, I will agree to name that day. If Friday will answer, and it be the understanding that we shall then go on with the bill from day to day, until it is disposed of, I will agree to that day. I simply make this suggestion in order to have a distinct understanding with regard to the matter.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I would suggest to my friend from Illinois, who has this bill in charge, that as Friday is private bill day, he had better, perhaps, say Monday. I think that will meet the general concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. GWIN. It seems to me that the whole of this argument turns upon one point; and that is, that the Senator from Ohio is the only gentleman who is to discuss this question. Now it is well known that there are ten or fifteen speeches ready to be delivered upon the bill, and probably we shall have at least twenty before we get through. If we postpone the bill one week for every gentleman who wishes to discuss it, of course it will be thrown over until the end of the session. I am perfectly convinced that before it is decided by the Senate there will be twenty speeches upon it. Is it supposed that all of those Senators who are to speak upon it are not ready to proceed to-day? I am perfectly confident that if the Senate keep this question before the body until disposed of, we shall hear quite a number of speeches before the vote is taken. Therefore, inasmuch as the bill has been made a special order, I hope we shall stand by it until disposed of.

The PRESIDENT. The bill to organize the Territory of Nebraska is now before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WELLER. For the purpose of testing the sense of the Senate, I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Thursday next.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If it is understood that that motion is accepted, as being the courtesy asked for, and that we shall go on with the bill on Thursday, I concur in the motion; but if the object is merely to have another postponement, I must resist the motion. I merely wish to understand the matter, that we may come here on Thursday prepared to go on with the question, and that thereafter want of preparation will be no excuse.

Mr. WELLER. I am not, of course, authorized to answer for the Senator from Ohio, but I can say that my object in moving to postpone the bill until Thursday is, that it may then be taken up, and considered, and discussed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I understand, certainly, that that was the object of my friend from California.

Mr. WELLER. I make no motion for delay. My only object is to give the Senator from Ohio what I consider a reasonable time to consider the new points which may have been presented to his mind yesterday; and on Thursday I shall insist on the bill being taken up, with the understanding, of course, that if the Senator from Ohio—being in usual health—is unable to proceed, somebody else must go on with the discussion.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Very well.

Mr. FOOT. I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until Monday next. It seems that, by a resolution adopted by the Senate, Friday is to be devoted to the consideration of the bills on the Private Calendar. The question of privilege with reference to the right of my colleague [Mr. PHELPS] to a seat here can in the meanwhile be disposed of; and it will occupy undoubtedly the intervening time between this and Friday morning. This being the case, and Friday being devoted to the consideration of the Private Calendar, it seems to me that the postponement which I propose will give us ample opportunity to dispose of these questions which are in the way of the progress of the discussion on the Nebraska bill. For these reasons, I hope the motion to postpone until Monday will prevail.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California, [Mr. WELLER,] to postpone the further consideration of the bill until Thursday.

Mr. GWIN. Is not the question first to be taken upon the longest time? If so, I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FOOT. I think that, under parliamentary rules, the first question will be on the longest time.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that, on a question of this kind, the first motion made is to be the first put.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Is it not usually the case that the question to be first taken is upon the largest sum and the longest time?

Mr. HUNTER. This is not a case as to the filling of a blank, to which that rule applies. These are competing motions.

Mr. FOOT. Will it not be in order for me to move, as an amendment, to strike out "Thursday" and insert "Monday?"

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it would not be in order.

Mr. GWIN. Cannot the Senator move to amend the motion by striking out one day and inserting another? I wish a test question as to whether this bill shall go over until Monday or not.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will make another suggestion. Out of all the gentlemen who are prepared with speeches on this question, is not some one ready to go on? If so, the Senator from Ohio can make his speech afterwards. Is there not some gentleman ready to go on and deliver a speech now? Gentlemen all came here yesterday morning with the understanding that we were to proceed with the Nebraska bill until disposed of, and of course with the understanding that they were to go on with their speeches. Is no one prepared? It seems to me that there may be Senators here who would be glad of the opportunity of delivering their opinions on the subject. We may thus proceed now, and the Senator from Ohio can wait until he is prepared, even until Monday, if necessary; but we can go on with the bill in the mean time.

The PRESIDENT. The rule is this:

"In filling up blanks, the largest sum and the longest time shall be first put."

This is a question to postpone until Thursday, and a motion is made by the Senator from Vermont to strike out Thursday and insert Monday. The Chair is of opinion that that is not in order as an amendment. The question is, therefore, on the motion of the Senator from California to postpone the further consideration of this bill until Thursday.

Mr. WADE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall vote against the motion to postpone until Thursday on this ground: The question of privilege connected with the retention of a seat in the Senate by the honorable gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PHELPS] will necessarily come up to-morrow. It may or may not be ended to-morrow; and if it be not ended to-morrow, and we postpone this subject until Thursday, an effort may be made to cut short or postpone the debate upon that question after it had been partially discussed; which, it being a question of privilege, I think ought not to be done. I see no objection, however, to the postponement of this bill until Friday, notwithstanding the suggestion of the Chair. It is true Friday is private bill day; but the first Friday in every month is what is called objection day; and if you take up your Calendar and strike out the bills that will necessarily be objected to, and those that must be passed at once, without discussion, I think it will be that you will probably dispose of the Private Calendar on Friday next in half an hour.

The PRESIDENT. The statement of the Chair was only a suggestion. There was no decision upon that point.

Mr. BAYARD. It seems to me that, for the reason which I have stated, there can be but little objection to postponing this bill till Friday. I think that on Wednesday and Thursday we shall certainly be enabled to dispose of the question of privilege. I am, therefore, in favor of postponing this bill till Friday. With that view, and that view only, I shall vote against the motion to postpone until Thursday.

The question was taken by yeas and nays upon the motion to postpone the further consideration of the bill to Thursday, and the vote was as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bell, Benjamin, Brown, Clay, Dawson, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Geyer, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Norris, Pratt, Sebastian, Shields, Sidel, Thompson of Kentucky, Thompson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, Weller, Williams, and Wright—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bayard, Brodhead, Cass, Chase, Clayton, Evans, Everett, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gwin, Hamlin, Pettit, Seward, Smith, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—21.

Before the result was announced Mr. DOUGLAS rose and said: I voted for the motion of the Senator from California because I understood the Senator from Ohio to say that he was not ready to proceed now, and because I understood, further, that to-morrow he would be engaged in court, and I therefore saw no reason why we should not proceed with this bill on the next day. As both the Senators from Ohio have voted against the postponement, I certainly have no desire to force a postponement upon them, and therefore I change my vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. TOOMBS. I change my vote to "nay" for the same reason. As the day after to-morrow seemed to be agreeable to those gentlemen, I was willing to vote for the postponement until that day; but as they have voted against the postponement, I shall reverse my vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. WELLER. I shall be compelled to change my vote for the same reason, and vote against my own motion. [Laughter.] I made the motion, supposing it was a matter of convenience to the Senator from Ohio; but as he has voted in the negative, I shall change my vote to "nay."

Mr. SLIDELL. I change my vote for the same reason.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I desire to keep with the friends of this bill, and therefore I vote nay.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not wish to be alone, and I change my vote to nay.

Mr. DIXON. I believe none of us understood precisely what we were doing, and therefore I change my vote to nay.

MESSRS. HUNTER, ADAMS, DODGE of Iowa, MALLORY, CLAY, SEBASTIAN, TOUCEY, ATCHISON, JONES of Iowa, THOMPSON of New Jersey, NORRIS, WILLIAMS, and WRIGHT, also changed their votes from the affirmative to the negative.

The PRESIDENT then announced the vote to be as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Brown, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Geyer, Jones of Tennessee, Pratt, Shields, and Thompson of Kentucky—3.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Cass, Chase, Clay, Clayton, Dixon, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Everett, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gwin, Hamlin, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Norris, Pettit, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Smith, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, Wade, Walker, Weller, Williams, and Wright—41.

So the motion to postpone until Thursday was not agreed to.

Mr. FOOT. I now renew the motion, which I made a short time since, to postpone the further consideration of this bill until Monday. My object is, not only to give an opportunity for the necessary preparation to the Senator from Ohio, who has the floor, to proceed with the consideration of this subject, but also to allow the Senate to dispose, in the mean time, of the question of privilege, with reference to the title of my colleague to a seat on this floor, which, in my judgment, as a question of privilege, supersedes all other questions, according to parliamentary law. I think we shall be well occupied in the consideration of that question in the mean time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will make a suggestion which, I think, will accomplish both objects. The Senator from Ohio only asked until Friday, and it was objected that Friday was private bill day. It has since been stated that next Friday will be the private bill day known as objection day, so that no bill can then be taken up to which there may be objection. That being the case, there will be scarcely anything to do on Friday; and as there is no objection to waiving the consideration of private bills for that day, I propose, instead of Monday, to say Friday. Between now and then the question as to the seat of the honorable gentleman from Vermont can be disposed of; and Senators can have all the time for preparation on this subject which they may want. If the Senator from Vermont will agree to this, I will vote for his motion. If not, I must ask that we proceed with this bill now.

Mr. GWIN. I wish to ask whether the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] is ready to-day to go on with his speech as to the title of the gentleman from Vermont to a seat here? If he is ready to go on now, and Mr. PHELPS is ready to assert his right here, we can enter at once upon that discussion. I am not anxious to proceed with this question to-day, but, if I understand properly, the Senator from Delaware is not ready to go on to-day, and the gentleman from Vermont is not here.

Mr. FOOT. The gentleman from California labors under a mistake. My colleague is here.

Mr. GWIN. If he is ready to go on I have no objection to our proceeding to the discussion of that question now. If either the gentleman from Vermont, or the Senator from Delaware, is ready to go on, I have no objection to taking up that subject to-day.

Mr. FOOT. I accept the modification proposed by the Senator from Illinois, and my motion, therefore, is to postpone the further consideration of this bill until Friday next.

Mr. MALLORY. We have by a resolution set apart Friday of each week, especially for the consideration of private bills. Many private bills now upon the Calendar have already been passed upon by this body at former sessions, and about them there is no dispute. If we are continually interfering with the days set apart for private business, we shall never get through with the private bills. Hence I would suggest Saturday as a proper day to which to postpone this subject. I see no objection to our coming here and devoting Saturday to the discussion of this bill; and then we shall not interfere with the regular private bill day.

Mr. BADGER. I think I can make a suggestion to the Senator from Florida which will entirely obviate his objection. No bill can be taken up on next Friday to which there is any objection; no bill, therefore, can be taken up unless it is one which will be passed immediately through the Senate. If there be no objection made, every bill upon the Private Calendar may be passed before one o'clock. If objection be made, the private bills must go over; so that, by one o'clock on Friday next, the Private Calendar will be disposed of, in any event.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to explain the reason for my vote. I have made it a rule never to vote for the postponement of any subject, with the view of allowing any gentleman, who may happen to have the floor, time to prepare himself. I take it for granted that a Senator will not obtain the floor until he is ready to make his speech. If it turns out otherwise, I cannot consent to postpone the business of the Senate to gratify him.

Mr. GWIN. Am I to understand that the gentleman from Vermont is prepared to go on at this time as to the question of his right to a seat?

Mr. PHELPS. I am not prepared to go on now. Indeed, as the member of the Committee on the Judiciary, who reported the resolution, presented to the Senate the substance of the argument which I intended to present myself, I prefer to hear the argument on the other side, before expressing my views more fully to the Senate.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, this is the most extraordinary scene that I have ever witnessed in the Senate of the United States. Here, sir, we are wasting a whole day because there is no Senator ready to speak. [Laughter.] I have never before seen the time when the evil did not rather seem to be that there was too much speaking. I hope that, if we are to postpone this bill, we shall come to some determination as to what subject we are next to take up. If the question of the right of the gentleman from Vermont to a seat here is not to be taken up to-day, I think we had better go on with this business.

Mr. SHIELDS. I can state to the Senator from California that, independently of that, we have plenty of business, and very important business, to dispose of. There are three bills on the Calendar, which I now hold in my hand, relative to the organization of the Army, which I wish the Senate to take up immediately after the decision of this question. I have abstained from pressing them forward on account of the Nebraska bill. I consider them quite as important as any business before the Senate. So far as the honorable gentleman from Vermont is concerned, it would be unfair, I think, to require him to go on with his remarks now.

Mr. GWIN. I do not ask him to do so.

Mr. SHIELDS. He ought to hear the arguments against his title to the seat before he shall be required to reply. We have plenty of other business to occupy the Senate, at any rate.

Mr. GWIN. I will state to the Senator from Illinois that the bills which he proposes to bring up, which, if I understand them rightly, provide for the reorganization and increase of the Army of the United States, and which will probably add from two to five millions of dollars additional expense for sustaining the Army, will be very thoroughly discussed here before they are allowed to pass this body. Although there is plenty of business before the Senate, the question is, what business have we that is matured for action? Here we have the Nebraska bill, which is now a special order, and was made so a week ago. Every Senator should have come here prepared to take up that question and proceed with it until it was disposed of; and so it should be with every question which is made a special order. Now I should be very willing, if the Senator from Delaware, or the gentleman from Vermont were ready, to proceed to take up the question relative to the Senatorship from Vermont, because it is a question of privilege; but I do not want to force those Senators any more than I do the Senator from Ohio. All I wish is, that we shall not embarrass ourselves by getting other questions before the Senate which we cannot dispose of before the Nebraska bill again comes up.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on postponing the further consideration of the Nebraska bill until Friday next.

Mr. FISH called for the yeas and nays, and they were taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Cass, Chase, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Douglas, Everett, Fish, Foot, Hamilton, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Pearce, Pettit, Seward, Shields, Smith, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of New Jersey, Toucey, Wade, Walker, Weller, Williams, and Wright—36.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Hunter, Johnson, Norris, Pratt, Sebastian, Sliedell, Thompson of Kentucky, and Toombs—14.

So the motion to postpone was agreed to.

VERMONT SENATORSHIP.

Mr. PETTIT. I should have called up to-day the resolution as to the right of the gentleman from Vermont to his seat, but that I had information that the Senator from Delaware is not prepared to go on. I give notice now that to-morrow, at one o'clock, immediately after the morning hour, I shall insist on proceeding to the consideration of the question of privilege which is before the Senate, involving the right of the gentleman from Vermont to a seat upon this floor. It is proper that that question should be decided at an early day, and I shall call it up to-morrow, and insist upon its consideration.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. McKean, its Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to provide a place for the holding of the courts of the United States in the southern district of New York, and for other purposes."

Also, that they had passed a bill supplementary to an act entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California," approved March 3, 1851.

The last-named bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

ENGROSSED BILLS PASSED.

The following engrossed bills were severally read a third time, and passed:

Bill for the relief of Richard M. Bouton, George Wright, and the widow of Marvin W. Fisher.

Bill for the relief of Jacob Gideon.

Bill for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Captain William G. Williams.

RAILROADS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. WALKER. As my bill was postponed until to-morrow, a short time ago, with the expectation that the special order would come up, I ask the Senate now to proceed to the consideration of that bill. In order to accomplish that object, I move that the vote by which the Senate agreed to postpone the bill "granting a portion of the public lands to the State of Wisconsin to aid in the construction of a railroad and branch road in said State," be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to, and the Senate again proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill. No amendment being proposed, it was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. DAWSON called for the yeas and nays, but they were not ordered.

Mr. WALKER. This bill is according to the form which has been agreed upon by the Committees on Public Lands of both Houses. It has been read, and it is not necessary to enlarge upon it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and there being no objection, was read a third time, and passed.

SALARIES OF CLERKS.

On the motion of Mr. ADAMS, the bill to amend the third section of the "act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854, and for other purposes," was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to enact, that of the clerks authorized by the third section of the act mentioned, those of the first class shall receive a salary of $1,200; those of the second class, a salary of $1,400; those of the third class, a salary of $1,600; that all vacancies in any of the classes, named in the act, shall be filled by promotion according to seniority; that all clerks not provided for in the bill, performing the same or similar duties with any one of the classes, shall receive the same compensation as is allowed to such class; that the stamp and blank agent for the Post Office Department shall receive the same salary as clerks of the second class, provided for in the bill; that an addition of twenty-five per cent. shall be added to the pay now authorized by law to each of the messengers, packers, laborers, and watchmen of the different Executive Departments of the Government in Washington; that instead of the salaries now allowed by law to the Superintendent of the Census, and to the Assistant Postmasters General, they shall each receive the same salary that is paid to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; and that the increased compensation provided for shall commence from the 1st of July, 1853; and the necessary money to carry the bill into effect is appropriated.

Mr. ADAMS. Before proposing some amendments, which I am directed to offer by the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform, I wish to remark that the bill is intended as a temporary relief for such clerks as the committee were satisfied were not receiving a sufficient compensation to keep soul and body together. We find that since the organization under the late law, it has been utterly impossible for the Departments to so arrange the different classes as to do justice to all those who are engaged; and I find, on examination in most of the Departments, a clerk at $900 per annum salary, one at $1,200, and another at $1,500, performing the same kind and the same amount of labor. The expense of living here is so high that if a clerk, receiving $900 a year, has a wife and one child, and nothing to live on but his salary, if his child should die, he has either to go in debt, or other clerks have to subscribe, as they frequently do, to raise money enough to bury the child. We expect to introduce a general bill reorganizing the Departments, and, if possible, doing justice to all the employees of the Government. This bill is only intended for the lower classes of clerks, who are not as well provided for as the higher classes. There are other cases where inadequate compensation is rendered by the Government; but they are so numerous that we thought it would not do to crowd them into this bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. I wish to put a question to the chairman of the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform. There are three clerks in the State Department whose salaries are $1,000, $900, and $800 per annum respectively. They ought to be placed on the same footing as the others. I do not know whether they are so placed by this bill or not; but I would suggest to the Senator that, if there is any doubt about that, the bill should be amended by inserting in the second section, before the words "performing the same or similar duties," the words "in any of the Departments," for the purpose of including them.

Mr. ADAMS. I will state to the Senator that they are fully embraced by the bill and amendments which I am about to propose from the committee.

Mr. CLAYTON. With that understanding I shall support the bill. Those clerks are not classified, as I understand.

Mr. ADAMS. Therefore we propose to provide that all the clerks in any Department, performing the same or similar labor to that performed by any of the classes, shall receive the same compensation as the bill gives to that class. The first amendment which I have to offer is to strike out the words "according to seniority," and insert "from the class next below," so that the heads of Departments will have the margin of a whole class from which to select when there is a vacancy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. The next amendment is to add at the end of the first section the following:

"And the Clerks employed in the Census Bureau shall be paid during the present year the same as is hereby allowed to the clerks of the second class."

That is for the present fiscal year.

Mr. WALKER. Does that amendment say "Census Bureau?" I expected it would come to this, but I was not aware before that it was a bureau.

Mr. HUNTER. There are a few clerks, as I understand, still employed in winding up the business connected with the taking of the census. Their employment will terminate probably during this year. I am not able to say exactly when; but I am informed that it will terminate during the year.

Mr. WALKER. I have no objection to the clerks being provided for, but I fear this will establish the Census Office as a permanent concern—a bureau.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand the Senator from Mississippi will bring in a scheme for reorganizing the Departments, when the objection can be made. This is but a temporary provision for the persons employed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BELL. I do not wish to waste time by interrupting anything that is proper now, or by interposing any obstacle to the passage of the bill; but I should like to be informed by the honorable Senator from Mississippi, whether the committee have considered the condition and salary of the clerks in the Sixth Auditor's Office connected with the Post Office Department; whether any attention has been given to their interests or wishes? I will state that I understand, from a source which I think authentic, that there are about thirty clerks employed in that office in settling or adjusting—or examining is, perhaps, a more appropriate term—twenty-two thousand or twenty-three thousand accounts which have to be settled quarterly at that office; and that the duties of each of them are the same in every respect—so equal that it is hard to say that one has a greater burden thrown upon him than another. For example: I understand that these accounts are cast in sections, and then, that the clerks individually draw for the sections. Hence, inasmuch as a portion of these thirty clerks get a salary of $1,500 a year, others $1,200, and others only $900, a $1,500 clerk is liable to draw a section which, perhaps, if there is any difference, will be an easier burden to him than another section which a $900 clerk happens to draw. I mention this for the purpose of showing the perfect equality of service and duty. Besides that, all these clerks have to work up to or against what they call "time." They are obliged to make their reports upon a certain day; and sometimes they are employed from seven or eight o'clock in the morning to nine or ten at night.

Mr. ADAMS. The same difficulty exists in all the Departments, to a greater or less extent; and therefore the committee have addressed letters to the heads of all the Departments, with a view of ascertaining what changes in the classification are necessary; and we intend to bring in a general bill to correct the evil. This is intended merely as a temporary relief for the very persons to whom the Senator refers.

Mr. BELL. It seems to me this is one of the clearest cases of hardship which can be presented—a $900 clerk having to perform the duties of a $1,500 clerk—there being a difference of pay when there is no difference in their duties. Sometimes one will draw a section somewhat more difficult than another. There may, and of course will, be some difference in the scale of these various accounts; but it seems to me there is no justice whatever when you mix up in this way $900 and $1,200 and $1,500 clerks, and make them do the same duties. If these arduous services are worth $1,500 per annum, all the clerks in that office ought to have $1,500. This, it seems to me, is a case which calls as promptly for redress as any other that can be presented. I do not mean to interpose any difficulty or objection to doing what may be called justice to others. I am not prepared to go into that question without knowing precisely what class of cases it is that the Senator from Mississippi thinks are the more urgent in their claims for justice before Congress.

Mr. ADAMS. The very class the Senator speaks of.

Mr. BELL. The honorable Senator does not include the $900 clerks.

Mr. ADAMS. We raise the salary of the $900 clerks to $1,200; that of the $1,200 clerks to $1,400; and that of the $1,500 clerks to $1,600; and I stated at the same time that we intend to bring in a bill reclassifying the different clerks, so as to do justice to all.

Mr. BELL. I have only to say if this is to be a permanent provision incorporated in the new bill to be brought in—if a $1,500 clerk is to be required to perform precisely the same duty which a $1,200 clerk is to be called upon to perform, the lower salaried clerk is entitled to the same compensation as the other; either the $1,500 clerk gets too much, or the other too little. The provision as it now stands is unjust and unequal.

This question is one of very great delicacy, and one of policy; we should consider well as to what is to be the effect of this indiscriminate raising of salaries. There is a class of clerks employed in the various offices of the Government, particularly young men without families, who come here merely with a view of staying a few years, and have no idea of spending their lives here, to qualify themselves, who should not get more than $900 or $1,000 a year, unless they have special qualifications; and if they have, I presume they would get a higher place. The effect which will be produced by taking the lowest grade of copying clerks, and giving them $900 or $1,000 a year, upon wages in this and the adjoining communities, and throughout the country, is a consideration which will deserve the serious attention of Congress, whenever they come to settle this matter upon a sound and permanent principle.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Mississippi whether the bill grants relief to those called temporary clerks. There are a large number of them, particularly in the Pension Bureau, who receive three dollars and thirty-three and a third cents or four dollars per day. They are there permanently, although called temporary clerks. Will this bill afford them relief? They are not classified.

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly it will. The bill provides that all persons employed, who are not classified, shall receive the same compensation as is allowed for the same or similar work, in the different Departments to those who are classified.

The next amendment of the committee is in the second section to strike out "five," so that it shall provide for "an addition of twenty per cent." to the compensation of the messengers, packers, and laborers in the Departments here.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. The last amendment is to add at the end of the second section:

To the clerks employed at the navy-yard and marine barracks at Washington; to the clerk, messenger, and laborer in the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings; to the doorkeeper and assistant doorkeeper at the Executive Mansion; to the public gardener and the laborers employed in the public grounds and President's ground; to the additional watchmen and police of the Capitol, the watchmen employed at the President's house and reservation No. 2; to the lamp-lighters, general superintendent, and draw-keepers of the bridge across the eastern branch of the Potomac. And that the provisions of the second section of the act of August 31, 1852, making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1853, be, and is hereby, extended to such persons herein enumerated, who were in employment during that fiscal year, and were excluded from the benefit of said act by the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury.

This is to be added to the clause which provides for the addition of twenty per cent. to the salaries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendments were concurred in; the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time, and passed.

ARMY RETIRED LIST.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope the Senate will indulge me by taking up the bill "to promote the efficiency of the Army, by retiring disabled officers." I move that it be now taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to enact that if any commissioned officer of the Army shall have become incapable of performing the duties of his office, by reason of age, the result of many years of faithful service, or by wounds received in the line of duty, or by disability, caused by exposure in service, he shall be placed upon a retired list, and withdrawn from active service and command, with the pay proper of the highest rank held by him at the time, whether by staff, regimental, or brevet commission, and the service rations to which he may then be entitled, but without any other allowances; and the officer next in rank shall be promoted to the place of the retired officer, according to the heretofore established rule of the service.

It also proposes to authorize the President to direct the Secretary of War to refer the case of any officer applying to be retired, to an army board, to be composed of not more than thirteen nor less than seven commissioned officers, to be detailed from those of superior rank to him whose case is under consideration; which board shall determine upon the case. If the board determine that the disability was incurred in the line of duty, and the President approve their judgment, the disabled officer shall be placed upon the list of retired officers; but if the board are of opinion that the disability was the result of vicious habits, or of exposure unconnected with official duty, and the President concur in that opinion, then the disabled officer may, at the discretion of the President, be dropped from the rolls of the Army.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Committee on Military Affairs have instructed me to offer some amendments to the bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I desire to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, whether it would not be better to set some subsequent day for the consideration of these military bills which have been reported from his committee. They are very important bills. If he will set such a day, we shall come in then and be ready to consider them. To-day we are all taken by surprise. None of us expected that the Senator would propose to consider them now. I hope, therefore, he will give us time to examine them. If he will fix any future day, I will agree to be ready to vote when the day comes. I did not suppose that the bills would be called up so soon, and I have not examined them sufficiently to be enabled to vote properly upon them.

Mr. SHIELDS. The bill now before the Senate for consideration has passed this body three several times, and always been lost in the House for want of time. It is a bill to retire disabled officers. I think the Senator from Virginia himself has heretofore voted in favor of it. It has been printed and laid on our tables for some time. It was reported at an early part of the session. It has been prepared with great care by the War Department in concert with the Committee on Military Affairs. I know of no measure which is more necessary for our Army at this time than a bill for the retirement of disabled officers. The reason why I should regret the postponement of the bill to another day is this: That if all these military bills are postponed until the privileged question, which is pending, and the Nebraska bill are settled, I doubt very much whether they will pass this body at this session. I have taken up the bill which is now immediately under consideration first, because I did not expect it would lead to any discussion, or to any opposition.

Now every man at all acquainted with the present condition of the Army knows, that it is reduced and diminished in number until it is a mere skeleton. These bills have been prepared by the War Department principally, and have been examined and corrected, in concert with the Department, by the Committee on Military Affairs. The bill which is now under consideration, as I have already stated, has passed this body again and again, and the whole Army are now anxious for it to pass, so as to retire the officers who are superannuated, disabled, and unfit for duty, and who are not able, and in fact ought not, to be placed at the head of a command. I did not expect that it would lead to any opposition, and that was the reason why I called it up first. There are two other bills which I had intended to call up afterwards.

Mr. HUNTER. I was only asking for time. No doubt, as the Senator states it, it is true that the bill has passed the Senate heretofore. I do not know whether I voted for it or not. I have not had time to examine the bill, and I do not suppose when it passed before that I could have given it much examination, for these bills are often called up and passed without much consideration. I understand that the Senator has a series of bills—I have no doubt well considered and well matured—contemplating very great and radical changes in the Army; and it seems to me that such bills should be considered by other members of the Senate, and a future day should be fixed for their consideration, when we may come prepared to vote upon them. That is all I ask. If the Senator will fix a day, I will be ready on that day to act upon the bills, and ask for no further postponement.

Mr. SHIELDS. I was about to do that in regard to the two more important bills for increasing the Army, and increasing the pay of the Army; but I took it for granted, that a bill which had been discussed, over and over again, and passed by this body, would be passed now without any opposition. If the gentleman sees there is anything wrong in the bill, and will point it out, I shall be glad to amend it, if I think it is wrong. I speak of this bill in particular, because I look upon it as one essentially necessary at present for the Army. Senators will remember the case of the late most calamitous disaster to the steamship San Francisco, where, I understand, the superior officers, from disability on account of age, were compelled to leave their command. That of itself should induce us to pass the bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I am not opposing the Senator's bill. I only ask for time to examine it. I do not know whether it is right or wrong—whether any provision in it is wrong or not. I want time to examine it, to ascertain that fact.

Mr. GWIN. I propose that all these military bills be made the special order for this day two weeks, when we can take them up and decide upon them.

Mr. WELLER. I do not see with what propriety the Senator from Virginia asks for the postponement of this bill. If this were the first time the question had been presented to the Senate for providing a retired list for the Army, there would be very great propriety in the Senator asking its postponement until he had determined in his own mind if the public interest required that such a retired list should be provided; but, as my friend at the head of the Committee on Military Affairs says, this question has been before the Senate time and again. We are told that a bill containing all its provisions has passed the Senate, and the fair and legitimate result is, that the attention of so watchful a guardian of the public interest as the Senator from Virginia is, has been directed to this particular bill.

Now, if the Senator says that he has not determined in his own mind whether the interests of the Army require that a retired list should be provided; if he has not yet had an opportunity to investigate that question, I would be in favor of giving him time from his other duties to devote to this; but I see no reason presented, so far as this discussion has gone, why the delay should be given. There are other bills reported by the Committee on Military Affairs which will be opposed; I know they will. They propose to make important changes in the Army of the United States, and will undergo, no doubt, full discussion. That I desire should go on; and I am willing to give an opportunity to Senators to examine and discuss them. But, sir, as the question which is presented by the bill now before us is, in my opinion, one upon which every Senator has formed an opinion, I am in favor of having the action of the Senate upon it now.

Mr. BAYARD. I will ask the Senator from Illinois if this bill is identical, in all its provisions, with the one which has heretofore passed the Senate?

Mr. SHIELDS. There is some change in the phraseology.

Mr. BAYARD. Not in the substance?

Mr. SHIELDS. Not in the substance.

Mr. BAYARD. The portion of the bill which does seem to me objectionable—

The PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is on postponing the further consideration of the bill for two weeks from this time.

Mr. SHIELDS. I desire that every member of this body should come prepared to vote upon any measure which I call up for consideration. Acting upon that principle, I have postponed asking the taking up of the other two bills, and have taken up the one now under consideration, as I took it for granted that it being the same measure that had passed the body again and again, and had been lost in the House for want of time, we might pass it this session at so early a period that it could not possibly be lost. This I desire to do; and then to postpone the two more important bills—the one to increase the Army by adding three regiments, and the other to increase the pay—to a day to be appointed, as designated by the Senator from California, for their consideration. I think that would be the better way.

Mr. GWIN. I will give the reason why I think all these bills should go together. I have not examined them particularly. I take it for granted that the three bills should be taken as one measure for the reorganization of the Army. If we pass this bill, by which we retire certain officers of the Army, the subsequent bill provides for the filling of the offices thus to be vacated by the retired list.

I have examined the question of reorganizing the Navy with some degree of attention. It has been my duty to do so as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I believe the proper way of reorganizing the Army and Navy is to have a system by which, if you establish a retired list on either branch of the public service, you should at the same time be prepared to fill up the vacuum thus created by the retired list. For that reason, and no other—not from any opposition to them—I wanted all the bills to go together.

Mr. SHIELDS. I desire to correct a little error into which the Senator has fallen. This bill does not create a vacancy. It does not increase the number of officers. It applies to the Army as it is now, or to the Army if increased. It has no reference whatsoever to the other two bills. They stand on a different footing altogether. It is merely designed, as I thought every person knew, to retire disabled and superannuated officers upon their pay proper, and leave other officers to get the emoluments and fill the places from which they are retired. I am not, however, disposed to enter into any contest about it now, if honorable Senators think it better that it should be postponed and taken up at another time; but it has no connection whatever with the other bills.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator will consent that the two other bills shall be taken up, and with the one now under consideration, be postponed till this day two weeks, when we can go into the consideration of them all.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on postponing the bill to promote the efficiency of the Army by retiring disabled officers. The other bills are not before the Senate.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will suggest, then, that the bill to increase the present military establishment of the United States, and for other purposes; and the bill to regulate the pay, and increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes; be postponed until the same day.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, all these bills will be considered as before the Senate. The question will then be on postponing them to, and making them the special order of the day for, this day two weeks.

The motion was agreed to.

KEARSLEY AND BIDDLE.

Mr. STUART. I move that the Senate proceed to consider the bill to provide for the final settlement of the accounts of Jonathan Kearsley, late receiver of the public moneys at Detroit, and of John Biddle, late register of the land office at that place. It simply authorizes the accounting officers of the Treasury to audit and settle their accounts upon principles of equity and justice. It has passed the Senate twice, and I believe three times—twice, certainly.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time and considered, as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being proposed, it was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time, and passed.

PORT OF NEW ORLEANS.

On the motion of Mr. BENJAMIN, the bill to extend the limits of the port of New Orleans was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that the port of New Orleans shall be so extended as to embrace the right bank of the Mississippi river for the same distance up said river bank as it now extends on the left bank.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will state that the port of New Orleans embraces both banks of the river, but at different distances on each side. It is desired to make the termination of the port on both banks the same. That is the only object of the bill.

Mr. BADGER. I hope my friend will strike out the word "river" in the last line. It is a superfluous word, and makes the bill read badly.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the word will be struck out.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

PUBLICATION OF DEBATES.

Mr. BADGER submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate pay the proprietors of the National Intelligencer, out of the contingent fund, for publishing in that paper the debates and proceedings of the Senate of the last Congress, at the rate of one half the price which was allowed the Washington Union for the same service.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 31, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Commissioner of Public Buildings, showing the manner in which all the appropriations for public buildings and grounds coming under his charge have been expended.

Also, a communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, containing the names of the clerks and other persons employed in his office.

The SPEAKER. Some days ago an adverse report was made from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, on the petition of John Drout and Eliza Merrill, which was ordered to lie upon the table. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] moved to reconsider the vote by which it was laid upon the table, his object being to return the adverse report to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The question now is on the motion to reconsider.

The question was put, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the vote was reconsidered.

The report was then recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up a resolution of inquiry, offered by me a week since, in reference to the appropriations for the Hudson river.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will not that resolution come up after the committees have been called for reports?

The SPEAKER. When all the committees have been called, that class of business—resolutions lying over—will be in order.

Mr. JONES. Then I must object to the taking up of the resolution now.

A message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, announcing the passage by that body of sundry private bills, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate had appointed a committee to act with the committee of the House, on the subject of the amendment of the Constitution.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to call the committees for reports, commencing with the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. ORR, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back Senate bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Joshua Kennedy, deceased," without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GREENWOOD, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back Senate bill "for the relief of John Fagan," without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I believe that such bills necessarily go to the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. If the bill contains an appropriation it must go to that committee under the rules.

The bill was then referred to the Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. FAULKNER, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the preamble and resolutions relative to the Petersburg volunteers in the war of 1812, and that they lie upon the table.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, from the Committee on Territories, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and, with the report, ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Grafton Baker."

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS TERRITORIES.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on Territories, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

"A bill to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas."

Mr. R. yielded the floor for explanation to

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, as an humble member of the Committee on Territories, I desire to say that the bill which has been just reported does not, in its present shape, meet with the approval of all the gentlemen upon that committee. Some, I believe, oppose it because it conflicts with the act of 1820, known as the Missouri compromise. I am not going to make a speech; but there are a few objections to the bill which I beg to put forward on the present occasion, so that my position may not be misunderstood by my constituents.

In the first place, I object to the boundaries proposed. The country to be organized into Territories, as gentlemen are aware, lies, in the main, adjacent to and west of the States of Missouri and Iowa, and extends westwardly to the Territories of Utah, Oregon, and perhaps Washington. Now, what are the natural boundaries of these proposed Territories? I design speaking more particularly to the Territory of Kansas, which is the lower and more southern of the two Territories, and the one in which slavery will exist, if it exist in either.

Now, of course, all will say that the eastern boundary of the proposed Territory of Kansas should be the present boundary of the State of Missouri; and I think it is equally clear that the western boundary of the proposed Territory of Kansas should be the present boundary of Utah Territory. And I think that this will appear in a much stronger light when we come to consider the nature of the existing boundary of Utah. Sir, what is it? We find it established by law. We find that it is the crest or summit of the Rocky Mountains; a boundary, sir, which no man can mistake; a boundary, sir, erected by the hand of the Almighty, that all men can understand it. I say, sir, that this is the natural boundary which should be assigned to that Territory, and I think that this House will be surprised to know that it is not the boundary proposed by the bill now under consideration.

Sir, the framers of this bill propose extending the territory of Kansas not only from the State of Missouri westward to the Rocky Mountains—a distance, perhaps, of eight hundred miles—a distance equal to the width of the great States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois—not only to take it to the summit of the mountain—but to take it beyond, and run it down to the region of the great Salt Lake, so as to include about one third of the Territory of Utah. To that I am opposed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yielded the floor to the gentleman from Indiana to make an explanation, but I did not suppose that he was going to make a speech. I wish to indicate the line of policy which the committee has pursued in reference to this bill.

Mr. ENGLISH. I am not proposing, sir, to enter into any extended remarks, but I have some objections to this bill, and I desire to point them out now. I voted in committee against the bill, in its present shape, and I think it due to myself, with the permission of the House, to state here, for the information of my constituents, some of the objections which I have to it. I will say, too, for the information of the gentlemen, that my objections to the bill are not of such a vital character but I may ultimately vote for it, even in its present shape.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I propose that the gentleman take the floor after me, and not take his time out of mine. I certainly would not be discourteous to him under any circumstances.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois insists upon his right to the floor, the Chair rules that he is entitled to it.

Mr. ENGLISH. This is about all that I have to say on the subject of boundary. I think that gentlemen will be satisfied when they have examined the map that the plan proposed of incorporating the territory west of the Rocky Mountains and east of the Rocky Mountains in the same Territory is injudicious. There is no community of interest between the people on each side, and but little intercourse, nor can there be. They have but little intercourse with each other, and ought not to be placed in the same territory. I have no particular love for the Mormons, nor for their peculiar institutions; and I know that there is much prejudice existing against that people, and perhaps justly so, in parts of Illinois and Missouri. Yet I am not willing to carry these prejudices to the extent of extending the boundary of this new Territory, already too large, so as to include a large portion of Utah. This is all I have to say on that subject at present.

I pass now to another subject, on which I purpose briefly to speak.

Sir, there is another question involved in this bill, a question of immense magnitude, and great delicacy, and one which I know it behooves gentlemen who reside in certain quarters to speak of with a great degree of caution; but I, for one, am not afraid to face the music, and I am willing to give, as far as I am able, a reason for the faith that is in me. I, of course, allude to that most exciting of all subjects—African slavery. Sir, I am a native of a free State, and have no love for the institution of slavery. I regard it as an injury to the State where it exists, and if it were proposed to introduce it where I reside would resist it to the last extremity.

But, sir, I never can forget that we are a confederacy of States possessing equal rights, under our glorious Constitution. That if the people of Kentucky believe the institution of slavery would be conducive to their happiness, they have the same right to establish and maintain it that we of Indiana have to reject it; and this doctrine is just as applicable to States hereafter to be admitted as to those already in the Union. I approve, then, of that part of the bill which provides that these Territories, when they come to be admitted as States, shall be admitted with or without slavery, as their Constitutions may prescribe. But, sir, I go a step further—further, sir, than the bill under consideration, unless it be by implication—I am willing to trust the people with the power of regulating their domestic institutions in their own way, through their regularly constituted Territorial Legislature. I hold that if the people are of sufficient numbers and importance to merit a territorial government at all, they are capable of governing themselves in all things. I would refer the question of slavery, and all other questions, to that best and safest of all tribunals—the people to be governed. They are the best judges of the soil and climate, and wants of the country they inhabit; they are the true judges of what will best suit their own condition, and promote their welfare and happiness.

I am opposed to admitting slavery into these Territories, and placing it out of the reach of the people until the formation of a State government. And it is, in part, because the bill is not explicit on this head, that I dislike it. I want to see the power expressly given to the people from the beginning to regulate their domestic institutions in such manner as they think proper, not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States. For these reasons I shall propose an amendment in lieu of the following words, which I shall move to strike out of the bill:

“Except the eighth section of the act preparatory to the admission of Missouri into the Union, approved March 6, 1820, which was superseded by the principles of the legislation of 1850, commonly called the compromise measures, and is hereby declared inoperative.”

Now I am opposed to making war upon a lifeless body, or mutilating the slain. If the act of 1820 was superseded by the act of 1850, why repeal the former? Or, when repealed by express words, why go on to recite that the act repealed has already been superseded by another act; and still further, to declare that act inoperative which has already been superseded and expressly repealed! I neither propose to legislate slavery into these Territories or to legislate it out; but I do propose to give the people of the Territories the right to pass such laws as they may think proper, not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States; and I expressly propose to repeal all acts of Congress (if any there be) conflicting with that right. This, I conceive, is the only principle upon which a permanent and final settlement of this unfortunate question can ever be made.

The substance of the amendment which I propose in reference to the slavery question, is to give to the people of the Territory, through the regularly constituted legislative authority, the right to pass such laws in relation to the institution of slavery, not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, as they may deem most conducive to their happiness and welfare. And I propose to repeal so much of any existing act of Congress as may conflict with the right of the people to regulate their domestic institutions in their own way.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall not present these amendments with an over degree of confidence. They seem to me to be right, but if they are not, I shall not persist in them. I am open to conviction. If they are adopted, or if satisfied they ought not to be, I shall probably vote for the bill. My inclinations at the present time are that way, and I may vote for it, even in its present shape. The question was not agitated in the canvass which resulted in my return to Congress, and I have, up to this time, heard no expression of sentiment upon the subject from any of my constituents. I should of course carry out the wish of the people I represent, should their will be made manifest. I have not examined the treaties existing between the United States and the Indian tribes inhabiting in part the country proposed to be organized into Territories, and do not know but some of the provisions of this bill would violate the compact we have made with them. I am told, however, that it does not conflict with these treaties; and this being the case, I consider speedy and definite action upon this measure as least likely to promote agitation and bad feeling, and best for the quiet of the country. For one, I am ready to act.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I proposed simply, upon the introduction of this bill, to send it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to afford to every gentleman upon this floor the ample opportunity to investigate it for themselves, unaccompanied with any debate or remarks from myself. Gentlemen will there have the opportunity to present their amendments.

The legitimate and proper course of legislation is to send it to the Committee of the Whole, where members will have the opportunity to investigate and examine it in all its parts and details; to propose to it such amendments as they want, in order to perfect the bill, and then to vote as they think their duty to themselves and their country may require.

I must be permitted, however—and it is my duty—to reply to so much of the objections of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ENGLISH] as have been stated upon this floor. I would prefer not at this time to be hurried into this debate upon the boundaries contained in the bill. There are reasons so manifest and so potent in favor of the boundaries which the committee have determined upon, that no man here can resist them when stated.

The gentleman from Indiana says that the great natural boundary must be observed, and that there should be nothing interposed to prevent it. I do not agree with him. Governments ought to be formed to accommodate to some extent the people who reside in them. One reason why this boundary is extended to another Territory placed inside of it is this, that every man residing in that portion of the territory taken from the Territory of Utah, comes here, and asks this Government to take them from under the power under which they are now placed. Bridger, who has lived here thirty years, emigrated to that Territory in 1823, established trading posts in the mountains, built up in the waste and howling wilderness a home for himself and family, was finally driven from the possession of that property by the hands of the power of that Government, and is now here in this city. For one, I desire to yield to the application made by this man, and those placed in similar circumstances, when they ask to be placed under a different government.

There is another reason which I have for making the boundary as reported in this bill. I intend only to reply to so much of the argument of the gentleman as interposed objections to the bill, for I do not choose that they should go to the country unanswered.

The gentleman has stated that there is in the States of Missouri and Illinois some prejudice against the Mormons. I do not doubt that this statement is true, and that this prejudice exists in the community in which he lives. If such prejudice does not exist, it ought to exist, I am sure. The lawless hand that characterizes these people ought not to be encouraged and promoted by this Government, and, for one, I am not for doing so. It is a sufficient reason, I have no doubt, when I have stated to the House the reasons which have influenced the committee of the two Houses to change this territorial boundary; and it is a sufficient reply to all that has been said about it.

There is another very good reply to the gentleman. He says that there is no sympathy between the people of the different parts of the Territory. One grand object for establishing territorial government there now is to cover that line of travel which is pursuing its way to the Pacific ocean, affording protection to the interests that lie along that road of travel. It strikes me that the interests of the emigrants, as they go towards the Pacific ocean, are identical with those of the Territories through which they must pass; and there cannot be any antagonism between them, I think. There may be antagonism between rival routes, but between settlements lying along the same route of travel there must be sympathy and the same interest.

The gentleman is mistaken about another thing. The gentleman is very much mistaken when he thinks that we have established an ideal boundary—that we have passed over the natural boundary, and established a mere ideal one. The boundary proposed in this bill is as good a one as can be fixed, and I repeat that the gentleman is mistaken in supposing it an ideal one.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me for one moment?

Mr. RICHARDSON yielded the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. This is to be a very exciting question. It is a very important bill. We shall all of us desire to participate in the discussion, and if we are to go into that discussion now, I call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. DEAN. This is the same bill which has been introduced into the Senate, and has been printed. Gentlemen can read it for themselves. I hope we shall not take up the time of the House by hearing it read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have been hurried into this debate. I should have preferred to have it referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, without debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has the right to have the bill read, if he insists upon his demand.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has the gentleman a right to have the bill read as a part of my speech?

The SPEAKER. Not as a part of the gentleman's speech; but he has the right to have it read before it can come up before the House for its consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the reading of the report. What I desire is, that the bill may go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be printed, where an opportunity for full discussion may be had.

Mr. DAVIS. If the debate is to be stopped, I will withdraw the demand for the reading of the bill. My only object was to have the subject fairly before the House, if the debate was to go on.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask the gentleman to allow me to make a single remark. I know it was the intention of the gentleman from Illinois, as it was of the Committee on Territories, that a bill of this importance should not be brought up thus hastily in the House for discussion. I know it was his intention to carry out the wish of the committee, and have it referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, and printed, without discussion, and laid upon the desks of members, that when it came to be taken up for consideration, it could be done with the deliberation which a bill of its importance demands.

I know my friend from Illinois has been hurried from this rule of propriety laid down by the committee, by the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ENGLISH.] He is pursuing a course which he did not intend originally to pursue. I now ask him, that notwithstanding what may have been said by the gentleman from Indiana, he will adhere to the course originally laid down by the committee, and desist from any further reply to remarks already made.

Mr. DEAN. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield the floor for me to offer an amendment, which I will send up to the Chair, that it may be printed, and go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If I should start upon that road I do not know where I should stop. I must decline to yield the floor.

I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and in order that I may avoid all difficulty, and not be again drawn into any debate upon the subject until it shall come up in committee, I move the previous question.

[Cries of "No! no!" "That's right!" and considerable excitement.]

Mr. EDGERTON. I appeal to the gentleman to allow me to offer a substitute to the bill, that it may go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with the bill itself.

[Cries of "Don't yield!" and confusion.]

Mr. CLINGMAN. The gentleman can offer his substitute in committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should be glad to accommodate the gentleman; but if I withdraw the previous question for one, I must do it for others, and the thing will never stop. I cannot withdraw the demand. If I have the majority of the House with me, let the bill take the direction I have indicated, and let us have no more discussion upon the subject for the present.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. With the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, I wish to make one suggestion. I think that justice and fairness will require it at his hands that he should—

Mr. BISSELL. I object to all this, unless it is strictly in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. Debate cannot be allowed, unless by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. ENGLISH. When I had the floor—
[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" all over the Hall.]

Mr. ENGLISH. Just one word.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the gentleman to order.

Mr. PRESTON. I rise to a point of order. The previous question has been moved, and I think it is the universal sense of the House that the bill should take the course indicated by the gentleman from Illinois. It is certainly the only proper course—

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind the gentleman from Kentucky that discussion is not in order.

Mr. PRESTON. Well, sir, I make the point of order, that the previous question having been called, no motion can be made in order to amend, and I hope the Chair will enforce the rule.

Mr. ENGLISH. I had the floor a few moments since, and indicated my intention to offer an amendment to the bill, now in the hands of the Clerk. Now, I want to know what becomes of that amendment?

Mr. DISNEY. It was not in order to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ENGLISH] will recollect that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] yielded the floor to him for explanation only, and not to offer an amendment.

Mr. ENGLISH. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will at least allow the amendment to be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If I was sure that gentlemen would only offer amendments, and not engage in debate, I would withdraw the previous question.

[Loud cries of "No, no!" "Order!" and great confusion.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to accommodate them in any way—

[Cries of "No, no!" and "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. All discussion is out of order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to make an inquiry of the Chair. My impression is that my colleague, who desires to offer a substitute, and other gentlemen who have amendments to offer, can do so when we come to discuss the subject in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I ask the Chair if that is not the case? If I thought it was not, I should be unwilling to deprive them of the opportunity of doing so now.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen upon all sides of the House know that the bill will be open to amendment in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair. If the House should refuse to sustain the previous question, and then vote down the reference of the bill, will not these gentlemen be able to offer their amendments, and have them referred and printed?

Mr. MACE. There can be no question of that.

Mr. JONES. I want to see the thing done fairly—

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a question of order. I would inquire whether my colleague, [Mr. ENGLISH], as the minority of the Committee on Territories, has not a right to make his report to the House?

The SPEAKER. It has always been the practice of the House, so far as the Chair recollects, to indulge such a proceeding; but there is no rule authorizing it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The House never denies the minority of a committee the privilege of reporting.

The SPEAKER. That has been the universal practice.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will assume the responsibility of letting gentlemen offer their amendments, and have them printed. But I hope that when I withdraw the demand for the previous question gentlemen will not bring the debate on now. If it can be understood that they shall only offer their amendments, and have them printed, I will withdraw the demand.

Mr. DISNEY. I rise to a question of order.

My point of order is this: that pending a motion to commit a matter, it is not in order to offer an amendment; and that, even if an amendment is pending, the motion to commit cuts it off.

The SPEAKER. Certainly it does. But the Chair supposed that the gentleman from Illinois intended to withdraw the motion to commit also.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If I can retain the floor and enable gentlemen only to present or give notice of their amendments, I am willing to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. It can be done only by unanimous consent. The question pending is on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and order it to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If I am not mistaken, the gentleman from Illinois can withdraw the motion to refer the bill. He is upon the floor. He can yield it for any gentleman to give notice that he will, in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, propose a particular amendment to this bill, and ask that it be printed. He can then yield it to any other gentleman to give a like notice, and make a like request, and so on until all are gratified. He can then move to refer his bill, with all of these notices, and to order their printing. Everything will be then before us.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I withdraw the call for the previous question and the motion to refer the bill.

Mr. ORR. Mr. Speaker, I seek the floor on my own account.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] is on the floor on his proposition to commit the bill. Does the gentleman yield the floor to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly, sir.

Mr. ORR. Do I understand that the gentleman from Illinois proposes to retain the floor?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will state frankly to the gentleman from South Carolina that I do. Gentlemen want their amendments printed.

In consequence of confusion in the Hall business was suspended for a few moments, and until order was restored.

Mr. ENGLISH. I would ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield me the floor for a minute.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ENGLISH. I desire to give notice, that I propose, at the proper time, to amend the bill, as indicated in the paper which I send to the Clerk's desk, to be read.

[Cries of "Read it!" "Don't read it!" "Let it be printed," &c.]

The SPEAKER. The course indicated by the gentlemen from Illinois and Indiana, and other States, can only be pursued by the courtesy—the consent of the body. The gentleman from Indiana cannot demand the reading of his proposition. There is no rule under which he can do so. The Chair would like to see each gentleman accommodated, but he must enforce the rules.

Mr. ENGLISH. All I can say is, that, as a member of the Committee on Territories, as a minority of that committee, I desire to get the matter I have indicated before the House.

The SPEAKER. Is it the unanimous consent of the House that the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana be printed?

Mr. LETCHER, and several other members, objected.

Mr. DEAN. I desire to give notice that I shall move to amend the fourteenth section of the bill, by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this bill contained shall be construed to legalize or establish slavery, or involuntary servitude, within the said Territories or either of them.

Mr. DISNEY. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. EDGERTON. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] has withdrawn his point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not heard the point of order withdrawn. The Chair cannot allow business to proceed until order be restored. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] will state his point of order.

Mr. DISNEY. The point of order is this: a motion to commit, as I understand parliamentary law—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] is stating to the Chair his point of order; he has the floor.

Mr. WASHBURNE. I do not know who has the floor, or what is going on, there is such noise and confusion in the Hall.

Mr. DISNEY. My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is this, that by the parliamentary law a motion to commit is a privileged question, only to be overridden by a motion to lay upon the table, or a call for the previous question. Neither of these privileged motions in the present case is in order, nor any suggestion pending the question to commit. I renew my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair states to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DEAN,] and to the House, that his notice of his intention to amend the bill cannot be entered on record at all, unless by the unanimous consent of the House. No amendment is in order, and no notice of an intention to amend is in order, unless by unanimous consent. The question pending before this body is, shall the bill be committed?

Mr. EDGERTON. I would appeal to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] to permit me to offer a bill as a substitute for the bill reported by the committee, and that that substitute may go to the committee.

Now, sir, if by the courtesy of the gentleman from Illinois I am permitted to offer a substitute for the bill I will do so now, and if not I would like hereby to give notice of my intention to offer it. And that substitute is the bill organizing the territory of Nebraska, which passed the House last session, with some modifications.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to accommodate all these gentlemen. They are on my good nature, and on your's, Mr. Speaker, I fear, and on everybody else's. The gentlemen have got the advantage now of presenting their amendments, and of giving notice of them. They are on the record, and in the newspapers. They have accomplished a good deal. I move to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be printed; and on that I move the previous question.

Mr. HENN. I would wish to have double the usual number of copies printed.

The SPEAKER. Extra numbers cannot be printed, unless by the unanimous consent of the House.

The question recurring upon the demand for the previous question, it was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The main question being "Shall the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and printed?" it was put, and agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced that reports were still in order from the Committee on Territories.

MINORITY REPORT ON THE NEBRASKA BILL.

Mr. ENGLISH. As a member of the minority of the Committee on Territories, I ask the consent of the House to make a minority report.

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, the report will be received.

Mr. BRIDGES. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ENGLISH,] being a member of the Committee on Territories, asks the privilege of making a minority report from that committee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRIDGES] rises in his place, and objects to the introduction of that report. There is no rule, that the Chair is aware of, which gives to the gentleman from Indiana the right to make the report. The Chair states, however, that it is a privilege which he has never known denied to a minority. That is the practice.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is it not within the province of the House, when a gentleman requests to make a minority report, and it is objected to, to decide whether he shall do so or not? The majority can decide whether he shall have the privilege—for it is a privilege—or not. Having asked the privilege, his request is now before the House, and it must determine the matter, and not the objection.

The SPEAKER. If you go to the law of the House it will be difficult to find any rule which authorizes such a proceeding. It is a mere matter of practice, and being such, the Chair will propound a question to the House, "shall there be made?"

Mr. BRIDGES. I withdraw my objection.

The question was then taken on allowing the minority report to be made, and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. ENGLISH. I now make, from the minority of the committee, the report which I have referred to.

It was read, as follows:

Amend the section defining the boundary of Kansas so as to make the eastern boundary of Utah, viz: "the summit of the Rocky Mountains" the western boundary of Kansas.

Strike out of the 14th and 34th sections these words:

"Except the eighth section of the act preparatory to the admission of Missouri into the Union, approved March sixth, eighteen hundred and twenty, which was superseded by the principles of the legislation of eighteen hundred and fifty, commonly called the compromise measures, and is hereby declared inoperative."

And insert the following:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent the people of said Territory, through the properly constituted legislative authority, from passing such laws in relation to the institution of slavery, not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, as they may deem best adapted to their locality, and most conducive to their happiness and welfare; and so much of any existing act of Congress as may conflict with the above right of the people to regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, be and the same is hereby repealed.

Mr. FARLEY. I wish to state to the House, as one of the Committee on Territories, that I do not concur in the reports which have been made.

Mr. ENGLISH. I move to refer the minority report to the same committee to which the bill was referred, and that it be printed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. To avoid confusion upon the subject, I desire, as a member of the Committee on Territories, to make a single remark. I wish merely to state, that there was no formal minority report. The committee stood—five in favor of reporting the bill, and three against it.

I objected to the bill in its present shape; and was not satisfied that any bill should be reported at the present time. If any bill was to be reported, I was rather in favor of the bill passed by this House, at the last session, with some modifications suggested by my friend from Missouri, [Mr. MILLER,] who introduced a bill at the present session. I objected to the report of any bill, at the present time, and did not agree to either a majority or a minority report. No report was prepared by the majority of the committee, other than the bill now before the House; and the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ENGLISH,] one of the minority of three, I suppose merely desired to present what he may offer as an amendment at the proper time. We shall all have the same privilege.

The question was then taken on referring the report or amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ENGLISH] to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordering it to be printed; and it was decided in the affirmative.

REPORTS CONTINUED.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to call upon committees for reports.

Mr. MIDDLESWORTH, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an adverse report in the case of Susannah Spear; which was ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

Mr. MIDDLESWORTH also, from the same committee, made an adverse report in the case of Elmira White, widow of Captain Thomas R. White, for back pay; which was ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

Mr. FLAGLER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made adverse reports in the following cases; which were severally ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed:

In the case of Ira Whitaker, asking for interest on the compensation allowed his father Ephraim Whitaker, a revolutionary soldier;

In the case of Joseph Wheaton and heirs, of the Rhode Island line, asking half pay, less the commutation, at its actual value of one eighth;

In the case of the widow Sarah Liscomb, of New Hampshire, for an amendment of the pension act of February 3, 1853;

In the case of Enoch Perkins, heir of Lophow Perkins, a revolutionary soldier, claiming a pension on account of the services of Lophow Perkins in the war of the Revolution.

Mr. FLAGLER, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of William Woodbury, of Maine; directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of William Woodbury, pension agent at Portland, Maine; which was read the first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLER, of Indiana, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an adverse report in the case of David Taylor, asking an extension of the laws granting pensions to revolutionary soldiers; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported bills; which were read the first and second time by their titles, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Mary Deany, widow of the late Lieutenant James A. Deany of the United States Army;" and

"A bill for the relief of John S. King, of Virginia."

Mr. STUART, from the same committee, made adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed:

In the case of Charles W. Blakeman, asking increase of pension;

In the case of Elijah L. Pomroy, asking for a pension;

In the case of Washington Porter, a soldier of the war of 1812, for an invalid pension.

On motion by Mr. DUNHAM, the Committee on Roads and Canals were discharged from the further consideration of petitions in the following cases; which were referred as indicated below:

In the case of captains of vessels praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the channel of Rondout Creek, in Ulster county, in the State of New York. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

In the case of A. Stone, John Farce, and twenty others, citizens of the State of Indiana, asking an appropriation of land to the States of Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Fort Wayne to Council Bluffs city. Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

In the case of officers of the Army praying for an increase of commutation and rations. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

In the case of William Livingston and others, citizens of the city of Lowell, in the State of Massachusetts, praying that an appropriation of land similar to that donated for the construction of the Sault St. Marie Canal may be granted to aid in the construction of a channel suitable for ship navigation between Lake Ontario and Lake Erie. Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

In the case of John M. Butterfield, Alfred Churchill, and thirty-six others, citizens of Utica, New York, praying for a grant of land for the construction of the Niagara ship canal. Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Proceedings of a public meeting held at Ontonagon, in the State of Michigan, in favor of the construction of a railroad from Lake Winnebago, in the State of Wisconsin, to Copper Harbor, on Lake Vieux Desaret, in the State of Michigan. Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

"A bill to cede to the State of Illinois that part of the Cumberland road lying within said State."

The SPEAKER. What direction does the gentleman propose to give the bill?

Mr. RITCHIE. The committee have instructed me to report the bill with a recommendation that it do pass. It is precisely similar in its character to bills which have been previously passed with reference to other States. If there is no objection, I will move to put the bill on its passage. We might as well pass it now as at any time.

The bill was read in extenso by the Clerk. It provides that that portion of the Cumberland road lying within the State of Illinois, with all the timber and other property appertaining thereto, shall be ceded to the said State.

It was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and having been engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, made an adverse report upon the petition of Thomas McAnaspie for a grant of money and protection of patent, so as to enable him to establish a manufactory of patent Portland stone and hydraulic cement; which was ordered to lie upon the table.

Mr. TRACY, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, reported back Senate bill "for the relief of Hiram Moore and John Hascall," without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. MACE, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John S. Simonson, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EDGERTON, from the Committee on Claims, reported back Senate bills of the following titles, without amendment, and with a recommendation that they do pass:

No. 125. "A bill for the relief of Ezra Williams;"

No. 90. "A bill for the relief of Charles Cooper and Company;" and

No. 91. "A bill for the relief of James Dunning."

The bills were severally referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDGERTON, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 86) "for the relief of John Boyd, of Louisiana," with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The bill was ordered to lie upon the table.

Mr. READY, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Thomas S. J. Johnson, of the Territory of New Mexico."

Mr. LETCHER, from the Committee on Claims, made an adverse report in the case of William H. Topping; which was ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of the administrators of Oliver Lee, deceased."

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed:

"A bill authorizing the purchase or construction of four additional revenue cutters, and for other purposes."

He also, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 139) entitled "An act for the relief of Charles A. Kellet," with the recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a marine hospital at St. Marks, in the State of Florida," with the recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back Senate bill entitled "A bill granting lands in alternate sections to the State of Arkansas to aid in the construction of the Mississippi, Ouichita, and Red River railroad," with an amendment in the nature of a substitute; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the amendment, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HIESTER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and, with the report, ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Joseph Mitchell."

On motion by Mr. HIESTER, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Charles Simmons, of Madison county, New York, for an invalid pension, and that it do lie upon the table.

On motion by Mr. HIESTER, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of fifty-one citizens of Venice, Washington county, Pennsylvania, praying a grant of one hundred and sixty acres of land to actual settlers, to be located in the Territory of Nebraska, and that it lie upon the table.

Mr. H. stated that the homestead bill, which had been reported, covered the whole subject.

Mr. LATHAM, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass, "A bill to grant certain privileges to the trustees of the University of the Pacific, situated in the county of Santa Clara, State of California;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION TO THE-MAILS ON RAILROADS.

Mr. OLDS, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported "A bill to secure the safe transmission of the mails of the United States upon railroads;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. OLDS. I wish to say, in reference to this bill, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. PACKER,] a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, desires to make a minority report. He has not yet prepared his report. The friends of the bill are anxious to put it upon its passage. It is in reference to the passage of the mail through Erie at the present time. I am not particularly anxious about it one way or the other. I leave it to the House to dispose of.

At the request of Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, the bill was read through.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania. It is manifest that the power of this House, under the Constitution of the United States, to enact this bill will come up for discussion. It is desirable, therefore, to have the bill printed, so that members may have an opportunity of examining it.

Mr. OLDS. I would say with reference to the bill, that the committee have endeavored to avoid anything which could bring the United States courts into collision with the Pennsylvania courts. I am not, however, disposed to debate the bill to-day.

Mr. MAY. I move to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. HIESTER. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Several MEMBERS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The state of the case is this: The bill has been read a second time; the leading question is on laying it on the table, and there is a motion pending to commit the bill. If both these motions are voted down, the House will proceed to vote on ordering it to a third reading.

Mr. MILLSON. I should like to know if the first reading of a bill is not always for information, and if it is ever to be considered that the bill is read twice till it is read entirely the first time? because the rule requires a first reading for information, though that is very often disregarded in practice.

The SPEAKER. The universal practice is to read a first and second time by the title merely.

Mr. MILLSON. But that is always when there is no intention to press the bill to a vote. The rule requires that the bill be read a first time for information. I submit that this bill should be read again.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been read entirely through, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HIESTER] asks that it be read again.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object.

The question was put on the reading of the bill again, and it was agreed to.

The Clerk again read the bill in extenso.

The question recurring upon the motion to lay the bill upon the table, it was put, and there were—yeas 57, nays 106; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barry, Boocock, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caskie, Chandler, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Curtis, Dawson, Dick, Dowdell, Drum, Everhart, Ewing, Florence, Gamble, Goode, Hamilton, Sampson, W. Harris, Hibbard, Hiester, Houston, Howe, George W. Jones, Kurtz, Lane, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maxwell, Middlesworth, Smith Miller, Millson, Orr, Packer, Powell, Pratt, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Shaw, Skelton, Snodgrass, Straub, Trout, Vail, Witte, and Daniel B. Wright—57.

NAVS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Benson, Benton, Bissell, Boyce, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chastain, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Culom, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dean, Dent, Dickinson, Disney, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmonds, Ellison, Etheridge, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Greenworth, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hill, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Latham, Lindsley, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Mayall, John G. Miller, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Phelps, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Thomas Ritchey, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Shower, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Tweed, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Warren, Bilihu B. Washburne, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, and Yates—103.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania. I move that the bill be committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be printed.

The SPEAKER. That motion is now pending.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is upon the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. I called for the previous question before the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] rose. Gentlemen all around me heard the call.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman from Alabama recognized by the Chair as having the floor?

Mr. HOUSTON. In the confusion I cannot tell when I am recognized. I arose and addressed the Speaker, and called the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the call, and the gentleman from Ohio is upon the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to occupy the floor but a moment. I think this bill is one the necessity for which has attracted the attention of the House, and it ought to be passed upon immediately. We have had the bill read twice. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS,] the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, states to me that his health is such that he is not able to make the statements he desired, to show the necessity of passing the bill. It is well known to every gentleman upon this floor that the mails of the United States have been, and are now, frequently obstructed, and that there is no law of Congress to punish any obstructions to the United States mails upon railroads which have been made post roads by act of Congress.

Now, if a committee of this House has fully examined this subject—as this Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has done—and if they report to this House that there is an absolute necessity for such a bill as this, it is one of our highest duties to act upon the subject, and to act promptly. For I believe if there is an injury to the public of a higher grade than any other, it is that of interfering with railroads, and thereby endangering the lives of innocent passengers, and of obstructing the United States mails—upon railroads, made post roads by act of Congress, when passengers as well as the mails are carried—by mobs or by some malicious and vile miscreant, who ought to be punished severely and promptly. The public should know that Congress will put an end to such injuries and obstructions as soon as we can pass a law for that purpose.

I think this bill should be put upon its passage immediately, and not referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where we may not reach it for some time. In order to test the sense of the House upon the subject, I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The main question being, "Shall the bill be committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be printed?"

Mr. HAMILTON called for the yeas and nays thereon.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired; but the main question has been ordered, and it must be put.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 108, nays 70; as follows:

YFAS.—Messrs. James C. Allen, Appleton, Ashe, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bissell, Bocock, Boyce, Bridges, Carpenter, Caskie, Chandler, Chastain, Clark, Clingman, Craig, Curtis, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dent, Dick, Disney, Dowdell, Drum, Dunbar, Edmonds, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Etheridge, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Florence, Gamble, Goode, Grow, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Henn, Hibbard, Hiester, Houston, Howe, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, Macdonald, McDougal, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Macy, Maurice, Maxwell, Mayall, Middleswarth, Smith Miller, Milson, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Packer, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Richardson, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, Skelton, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Warren, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, and Witte—108.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Ball, Bugg, Campbell, Chamberlain, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, Dickinson, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, Ellison, Canton, Franklin, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Hill, Hughes, Johnson, Kerr, Knox, Lindsey, Matteson, John G. Miller, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Olds, Parker, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Thomas Ritchey, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Tweed, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, Wheeler, and Yates—70.

So the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The business first in order is the consideration of the bill to supply the deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1854. Debate having been closed upon the bill, amendments are now in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. Under the rules governing the committee, I have a right to close the debate, by occupying the floor for an hour; but I am very anxious to get this bill through. It is important that a portion of this money, at least, for some of the Departments, should be put into a condition where it can be used at an early day; and I therefore waive my right to address the committee, and suggest that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read through by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, that course will be pursued.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the bill by sections.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to offer the following amendment—to strike out lines 33 and 34, which read as follows:

"For outfit of a Commissioner to reside in China, $9,000."

The appropriation is not necessary to be made. The question was taken upon the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The following clause was then read:

"For the usual return allowance for Ministers of the United States to Great Britain, France, Russia, Prussia, Spain, Brazil, Mexico, Peru, and Chili, $20,250."

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the same committee to offer an amendment—to strike out the word "Peru," and also to strike out "$20,250," and insert in lieu thereof "$18,000."

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The following clause was then read:

"For the usual return allowance of chargé d'affaires, as Ministers resident to Portugal, Austria, Denmark, Sweden, Holland, Belgium, Naples, Sardinia, the Papal States, New Granada, Venezuela, Buenos Ayres, Bolivia, Guatemala, Ecuador, and Nicaragua, $18,000."

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the same committee to offer an amendment—to strike out the word "as" in the first line of the clause, and insert in lieu thereof the word "or;" also to strike out the words "the Papal States," and the word "Guatemala;" also to strike out "$18,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$15,750."

The question was taken upon the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The following clause was then read:

"For outfits of chargés d'affaires, $2,439 02."

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the same committee to propose an amendment—to insert at the end of the clause the words: "For an outfit of the chargé d'affaires to Austria, $4,500."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

When the following paragraph was read:

"For the employment of workmen, materials, and other necessary expenses to put the branch Mint at San Francisco, California, in operation, $40,000."

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, moved to amend by adding the following:

To purchase a site for the custom-house at Providence, Rhode Island, $24,000: Provided, That the entire cost of said building shall not, in any event, exceed the sum of $74,000.

To complete the public buildings in New Mexico, $50,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. The appropriations made for a custom-house at Providence, Rhode Island, were $40,000; and for the purchase of a site, the Department being satisfied that a proper site would cost that amount, also asked for $24,000, in addition to $16,000 already appropriated. The object of this appropriation is to enable the Department to purchase a site that they have selected, and that the amount originally intended for the erection of the building shall still be appropriated to that purpose.

I desire to say to the committee that, in this case, as has been very unusual, the Department, being restricted by a proviso in the precise language of the one which has just been read, has not attempted to move in the matter, in violation of law; but finding that a site could not be purchased and a building erected with the appropriation, has reported the fact to Congress. That being an important point, the committee thought the appropriation ought to be made.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLE. I offer the following amendment:

For continuing and completing, in a fire-proof manner, the works upon the custom-house, post-office, &c., at Wilmington, Delaware, the sum of $12,000.

Mr. RIDDLE. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly the necessity for offering this amendment. I regret that the prominent gentleman upon the Committee on Ways and Means, whose knowledge of political economy seems confined to the too prevalent idea that a dollar detained in the public treasury is a dollar saved to the country, did not, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, save me this trouble. But, sir, this committee, for reasons best known to themselves, have refused to comply with the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury, and by so doing, or rather refusing to do, have devolved upon me that duty. I am well aware of the difficulty which any member has to encounter when he differs with so formidable a committee as that of the Ways and Means of the House of Representatives; and I am equally well aware of the little influence which I, or any individual member of this House, can bring to bear personally in such a case; but if the committee of this House will listen to me a few minutes, I think they will be satisfied, not only as to the justice but the propriety and economy of the appropriation contained in my amendment.

With a view to do that, it will be necessary for me to state to the committee, that when this appropriation was asked for in 1852, three committees—two of this House and one of the Senate—unanimously recommended that $25,000 should be appropriated for the construction of public buildings in Wilmington, Delaware.

They made this appropriation, because they were aware of the fact that the General Government was already paying an annual rent which exceeded the interest on the amount appropriated for insecure buildings. Plans were drawn at the instance of the Secretary of the Treasury. I assured the Committee on Ways and Means at that time that the building could be constructed for $25,000; and so it could, if it had been contracted for at that period; but every member of this committee knows that during the last two or three years the price of labor and the price of material have advanced at least 30 per cent. in this country. Consequently, when the Secretary of the Treasury received proposals, he found that the lowest bid was $12,000 above the appropriation. Now, what does the Secretary say? and I would ask the committee to listen to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, and they will not certainly accuse me of extravagance.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Of all the extraordinary speeches I have heard in this Hall during the course of ten years' service, I think that the five-minutes' speech just made by the gentleman from Delaware is one of the most extraordinary. Has he forgotten the circumstances under which the original appropriation was made?

Mr. RIDDLE. I stated those circumstances in my remarks.

Mr. JONES. It was at his request—at his repeated and continuous appeals to the committee to give him a custom-house appropriation for Wilmington, Delaware. He assured the Ways and Means Committee that $25,000 would be amply sufficient to purchase a site, and to erect the structure. I believe that he went so far as to say that he was willing to enter into bond, with sufficient security, upon his own personal responsibility, that the work should be effected for that price. When we did recommend the appropriation, we added the proviso that the work should be completed for $25,000; and nothing that the gentleman has said, nothing that the Secretary has said, has yet convinced me, nor would it convince anybody who had looked into the subject, that $25,000 was not amply sufficient for the structure of a building adequate to the business of Wilmington, Delaware.

Sir, if he had complaints to make he should have made them against the Secretary of the Treasury—against that officer who, in violation of law, has contracted for a structure which the appropriation did not authorize him. If the price of labor and material has advanced, and if the Secretary was unable to make the contract for $25,000, he, as a faithful public officer, should have refused to have commenced the work, reported the fact to Congress, and let them have supplied the defect—let Congress give him an appropriation sufficient to commence and complete the work, or to change it as circumstances might require.

Sir, that is the way with regard to the construction of these custom-houses; not only there, but in other parts of the country. Every appliance which can be brought to bear is used to get an appropriation to commence them; and when they have commenced them—when they can get an appropriation sufficient to buy the ground, and contract for the laying of the foundation—for they will expend all that is given to them, perhaps, in buying the site and laying the foundation—then they come back here and tell you that unless you make them another appropriation all that you have already made will be lost.

My belief is that a public officer should not act without law; and when the appropriation made is not sufficient, and there is a restriction on it, he should make no contract, he should not expend a dollar of the money, but report to Congress, and let them increase the appropriation, if they think right to do so—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RIDDLE. I wish to make an amendment to my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware cannot amend.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Delaware, [Mr. RIDDLE,] so that the additional appropriation be $12, instead of $12,000.

Mr. Chairman, in respect to the remarks of the gentleman from Delaware, I wish simply to call the attention of this committee to one fact, which appears on miscellaneous document No. 5, eighth page. It is a statement showing the amount of revenue collected during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, at each of those ports where custom-houses are being constructed, and including this one at Wilmington, Delaware. The amount collected at Wilmington for the last year was $899 10 only.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to collect this sum of $899 10 annually we have had a custom-house establishment of some kind, one which has been found amply sufficient, I suppose, to collect that sum; for the committee will see, that it does not require a very large building, nor a very great number of employees, to collect that amount of money. It has been done, sir; the work has been performed. But during the last session of Congress, or rather the session before last, an appropriation of $25,000 was made for the purpose. But they were not content with that; and I well recollect the assurances given us by my honorable friend from Delaware, [Mr. RIDDLE,] who, I have no doubt, made them in good faith, made them emphatically, made them earnestly, and made them repeatedly—that this sum should be sufficient. The appropriation was made. I did not think the appropriation a wise one then; I do not now. Congress appropriated the sum of $25,000 in addition, to collect a revenue of $899 10 yearly. And now it is proposed to increase it $12,000 more, making $37,000 appropriated to collect a sum which, if aggregated for three years, would scarcely equal the annual interest ($2,220) on the amount appropriated.

Well, now, Mr. Chairman, this statement presents the whole case in a nut-shell. It is for the committee to say, as well upon this proposition as upon any other, what shall be the policy to be pursued here. It is the opening to a series of propositions which have been heretofore submitted, and probably will be again, to overrule the recommendation of the Committee on Ways and Means. If we have done wrong here, the committee will vote this additional appropriation. If not, they will refuse the appropriation.

Mr. RIDDLE. I am opposed to the amendment of my friend from New Hampshire, [Mr. HIBBARD.] I am very sorry to find that the gentleman should offer such an amendment; and I beg the attention of this House for one moment longer, to what I have to say in reply to his statements. I am aware that in the city of Wilmington very little revenue is collected. But let the gentleman from Cincinnati [Mr. DISNEY] tell me how his revenue of $200,000 is collected. The goods are entered in New York, in Philadelphia, in Baltimore, and New Orleans; and they are sent to Cincinnati in original packages, and, by a law of Congress, the duties are paid at those places. Now, I say upon this floor, that if the duties upon original packages came to my city—being only twenty-seven miles from Philadelphia, where the duties are paid—we should have $200,000 of revenue a year. It cannot be expected that a city which is but a suburb, as it were, with a population of twenty thousand, should command a trade equal to that where they receive the commerce of all the world.

There is another fact connected with this matter which I will state. The collector of customs of the Delaware district is the superintendent of lights and light-houses in the fourth district—the greatest district in the United States. All the important papers in connection with that office are there collected. Are you not warned, is this House not warned, of the necessity of making this building fire-proof, by the recent destruction of the custom-house at Portland? There the Government has lost two hundred thousand dollars by not having their custom-house at that point fire-proof. Now we can go on and complete this building, with the present appropriation; we can make it as pretty a building, without its being fire-proof, for twenty-five thousand dollars, as we can for thirty-seven thousand dollars, and make it fire-proof. As far as it concerns an ornament to my city I care nothing; but the interest of the Government requires that the building should be fire-proof. The interest of the Government requires that these records, which are of importance to the country, should not be kept in a building which is liable to be consumed by fire at any moment, and at the instance of any person who may be disposed to set it on fire.

I am not in collusion with any members of this House in regard to any appropriations which they may desire. I have stated the plain facts to this committee. I believe that the interest of the Government require that not only its light-house records, not only its custom-house records, but all its post office and United States court records, should be secure. Hence it is that I appeal to this committee to vote down the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Hampshire.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HIBBARD. If there is no objection, I withdraw my amendment.

No objection being made, the amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Delaware, [Mr. RIDDLE.]

The question was then taken upon the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. DISNEY. I offer the following amendment, providing an additional appropriation of $40,000 for the custom-house at Cincinnati. I offer this amendment because it is recommended specially and specifically by the Secretary of the Treasury as being required by the public interests. Permit me here to make one general remark. If the House will examine the bill now pending, they will find that the Committee on Ways and Means have disregarded the recommendations made by the Secretary in every instance, in relation to the completion of the custom-houses designated and set forth in his estimates. Why is this? Is it not incumbent upon that committee to present before this House and country some good and substantial reason why, in each and in every case of this kind, the recommendations of the Secretary have been disregarded? I repeat the question, why is this? I know not how it may be in other parts of the country, I do not know how it may be in the case of the Wilmington custom-house, but I do know that at Cincinnati contracts have been entered into, ground purchased, and that the building is in course of erection; and that the Secretary, after a fair and full examination of the subject, has decided that an additional appropriation of $40,000 is demanded by a just regard for the public interests of the country. Then I repeat it, why is it that the Committee on Ways and Means have disregarded so clear and specific a recommendation?

The late conflagration of the custom-house at Portland has given us warning of the necessity there is for constructing these buildings fire-proof, and making them safe places for the custody of the public archives. I presume it was a reason of this sort which influenced the Secretary to make the recommendation he has in the case of the custom-house at Cincinnati. Certain it is, that contracts have been made for the erection of the building; and these contracts are all within the limits of the appropriation now standing upon the statute-book. I have had no particular consultation with the Secretary in regard to this matter, nor did I deem it necessary, for I supposed it to be one of those obvious cases where the necessity of the appropriation recommended by the Secretary was clearly apparent, and needed no argument to sustain it. I did not suppose that the Committee on Ways and Means would, in the face and eyes of the recommendation of the Secretary, so disregard it as to feel it incumbent upon them to stand up and justify their action in regard to it before this House and country.

I repeat it, sir, I have made no inquiry into the particulars of the case; but I know the general facts of which I speak. I know that contracts have been entered into for the construction of that building, which will cover the whole amount for which I ask, and that that amount will be necessary to render the building fire-proof.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Ohio, who has just taken his seat, seems to be very much astonished that a committee of this House should dispute, or not yield implicitly to the estimates of one of the Departments of the Government. I take it for granted that when the gentleman has attended a few more sessions of this body—if he should have the luck to do so, as I hope he will—he will find that Congress is as proper a judge of an estimate as a department; and that it is the province of the committees of this House and of Congress either to grant or withhold, in whole or in part, any estimate that may be presented to them for their approval.

But the gentleman says, "in the face and eyes of such an estimate, why did we reduce it?" Why, sir, the gentleman knows very well why we reduced it. It was because we believed it to be unnecessary. We reduced it because we have been led on by promises and pledges of one sort or another, made by the friends of that custom-house, to make appropriation after appropriation, until we came to the conclusion that to go on further would but be a waste of money.

Mr. DISNEY. Why a waste of money?

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Ohio has, on more than one occasion, when the subject of the Cincinnati custom-house was up for consideration, pledged himself to the House that the amount, then sought, should be sufficient to complete the building. The first appropriation for the construction of this custom-house contained a proviso that the entire cost of the building should not exceed the sum of $75,000.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to say that I never pledged myself that that amount should complete the building?

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman may have never pledged himself that that amount should complete the building, but he stated to the House, on more than one occasion, as the records will show, that that amount would be all that would be required to complete it.

Mr. DISNEY. I said that was the estimate.

Mr. HOUSTON. The estimate, under the Administration which has just gone out of power, was that $75,000 would be sufficient to complete a fire-proof custom-house in Cincinnati, sufficient for every purpose required by the wants of that city; and this estimate was made by a gentleman who was himself a citizen of Ohio.

Now, sir, who is to be employed in the custom-house at Cincinnati? It is true that it is to furnish a court-room, and city post office, but when you come to the custom-house proper, how many officers are to be employed in it? I think only one or two. The surveyor of the port; and I do not know that there is any other. The revenues that are collected at Cincinnati, as was very well remarked by the gentleman from Delaware, [Mr. RIDDLE,] are upon packages entered at New Orleans, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, or Boston. All the labor, machinery, and paraphernalia attendant upon the collection of the revenue for which Cincinnati gets the credit, is at those places, and not in Cincinnati. There is nothing to do there but to receive from the collector at New Orleans, or from the collectors of the other places, a certificate of the amount of dues to be collected. That is all. Cincinnati shows a large amount of revenue, but not a single vessel from which it is collected goes there. It is not a port of entry, and there is no officer employed there except a surveyor of the port, and perhaps a clerk.

A MEMBER. How much has already been appropriated?

Mr. HOUSTON. A gentleman very appropriately asks, how much has already been appropriated for the erection of this building? The first appropriation was for $50,000; the next for $25,000; and then they came in and asked for $150,000, on the ground that it was absolutely necessary, or else the building would go to rack, and never be completed. Congress gave them $50,000 more; and a year or two afterwards they came here again and asked $80,500 more, saying that without that sum the building could never be rendered useful or valuable to the Government, and Congress gave them that also. Congress has given $212,000 for the erection of a custom-house building at that point, when $100,000 would have been ample, and ought to have sufficed.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to amend the amendment by increasing the amount to $45,000, in order that I may get a little further information about this matter. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to state, if he can, what amount is collected at the port of Cincinnati?

Mr. HOUSTON. Two hundred and fifty-one thousand six hundred and forty-nine dollars and ninety cents was the amount collected at the port of Cincinnati last year, and collected in the way I have stated.

Mr. TAYLOR. I cannot lay my hands on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the necessity of this appropriation of $40,000, which I understood my colleague [Mr. DISNEY] to say he has recommended. But I wish to say a word or two in reference to these appropriations generally for the western country.

I understood the gentleman who has just taken his seat—the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means—to say that this building, when erected, is to answer the purpose of a United States court-house for that district, and a post office for the city of Cincinnati, as well as a custom-house. I cannot speak of the accuracy of the estimates—which are nothing more than guesses—of Mr. Secretary Corwin, or of any Secretary who preceded him, or of the present Secretary of the Treasury; but I do say that it is the duty of Congress to provide for the necessary custom-houses at Cincinnati, at Louisville, and at St. Louis, and also for the necessary court-houses to hold the Federal courts in the western States. I do not believe that Congress has ever appropriated one dollar for the erection of court-houses in the great State which I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor; and the appropriation for this building, which is to accommodate the Federal courts, the custom-house, and the post office at the great and beautiful city of Cincinnati is, in my estimation, a very small one. Look at the appropriations which have been made for other sections of the country. I think I do not exaggerate when I state that two or three millions of dollars have been appropriated for the city of New York, and for other northern cities. These appropriations for the city of Cincinnati accommodate a vast portion of the people of this country; and such appropriations are properly made, when made with due economy, and judiciously expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury for such objects as the one now proposed. Ohio asks very little from the Government of the United States. She stands there in all her pride, and beauty, and splendor, and independence, getting very little from the administration of the General Government either in the shape of offices or appropriations; and I insist that, while we contribute our full quota to the building up of all necessary buildings for custom-houses, and so forth, in the eastern cities, and to keep up the Army, the Navy, and the foreign establishment, when we come to Congress, and ask for the small sum of $40,000 for the establishment of a custom-house at one of the greatest and most beautiful cities in the Union, we ought not to be twitted for the extravagance of our demands, and the largeness of the appropriations asked for.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Ohio places the question on the wrong ground. He says that they have obtained more at Boston, and at New York, and some other points, than they have obtained at Cincinnati; that Ohio contributes her portion of the public money; and he seems to consider that as conclusive that she ought to have it, whether it was necessary to expend it on this object or not. Now, that is not the issue presented. Is the amount necessary to complete the building so as to answer all of the wants of the Government at that place or not? That is the real issue; and whether Ohio wants this money under the pretext made, or any other, let her make such application as is based on justice and propriety—let her make the necessity evident, and Congress will give it; for, as the records show, Congress never hesitates to give when properly approached.

Now, I wish to illustrate the impolicy of this appropriation. At Cincinnati there are one surveyor and one clerk—two officers of the customs in all—and we have appropriated, for the construction of the custom-house in that city, $212,000. No vessel from a foreign port ever enters there. It is not a port of entry at all. My friend from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON,] who represents the Norfolk district, under his determination to indulge no improper applications for the wasteful expenditure of the public money, has refused to ask additional appropriations for the Norfolk custom-house, which is at a point much more important than that of Cincinnati. The building and lot will cost altogether only $110,000. Now, by turning to a table, which was brought out in a correspondence between the Secretary of the Treasury and myself, it will be seen that eighty-nine vessels from foreign ports entered during the last year at the port of Norfolk; at which there are some eighteen or twenty persons engaged in the collection of the customs, while there are but two engaged in Cincinnati. The custom-house at Norfolk is being completed under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, at an entire cost of $110,000. No deficiency has been asked for; and yet, here is a deficiency of $40,000 asked by Cincinnati, after she has received double the amount already given to Norfolk. Why is this?

Such are the facts, and yet gentlemen complain that the West has not got enough. The Secretary of the Treasury tells us that it will greatly diminish the appearance and safety of the building if this appropriation be not granted. He tells us that it will not be completed in a style and finish commensurate with the city in which it is being built, if this appropriation be not granted. I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that a great deal of money is being wasted upon all of these public buildings—upon your marine hospitals and your custom-houses. To prove it, I have but to show that at Norfolk, an important, a very important point, one hundred and ten thousand dollars was amply sufficient to build a fire-proof custom-house, and to purchase the lot on which it was erected; while in this inferior place—a place where a foreign vessel never goes, and where you only employ one or two persons in connection with the revenue—they want three times that amount. It is wrong, and it is time that we should look to these appropriations. The Secretary says that he can complete the building with the money already appropriated. I am not in favor of appropriating any more, when we have the best reason to know that it will not be well applied.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I desire to ask of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means what is the amount of customs collected at Norfolk?

The CHAIRMAN. No discussion is in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. The amount collected at Norfolk during the last fiscal year was $31,153.

The CHAIRMAN. No further discussion is in order. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY.]

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BISSELL. I propose an amendment. I will make the amount proposed to be appropriated $5,000. But I merely want to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to give me information as to the state of forwardness in which the building now is; whether it is nearly completed, or whether the building is exposed to the weather, and likely to deteriorate?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois, if he gets miscellaneous document No. 5, and also the report of the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress, page 274-5, will get all that information. I will state, however, what is true in regard to it. I do not know its precise condition as to forwardness; but I know this, that the Secretary says he has money enough now to complete the building, and has made a contract conditional with the contractor that it shall be completed in the manner which would require this additional $40,000; but the contract is conditional that if Congress do not grant this $40,000, the contractor is bound to proceed and finish it under the original estimate. No fear need be entertained that the building will deteriorate or fall into decay.

Mr. DISNEY. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has at last got through his explanation. That gentleman was kind enough to advise me a while ago that, after I had served a session or two on this floor, I would find that Congress had some little to do in the disposition of affairs. I am not sure whether the information of the gentleman is not gratuitous. His own splendid and towering intellect having led him to discoveries of this sort, it may not be exactly just in him to attribute the same facility of success to me. How long it took him to find out the fact he has not informed us.

But, sir, I have not time, under the rule, to proceed in this way so far as I might desire. The point of all this matter here is not, as the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has said, to enlarge a building. What is the use of talking about the number of persons employed in it? Let them either pass the appropriation or refuse it. They will not diminish or enlarge the size of the building. The contracts are entered into for the construction of the building, and the proposed appropriation, after all, is that the building is to be furnished so as to render it a safe receptacle for the keeping of the public papers; and whether there is one or fifty individuals employed is not a matter of the slightest moment toward the just decision of the question before us.

The question, and the only question before this committee is, whether they will proceed to finish the building in a manner such as the Secretary says, in his judgment, the public interest require. Now, I have paid little or no attention to the matter with regard to the appropriation asked for. I am entirely unfamiliar with the facts of the contract, and the state of the building; and I take it for granted that the recommendation of the Secretary was made in view of the fact that it was in a state of considerable forwardness, and with a single view to the mode of finishing the building, without regard to the enlarging or contracting it; and that recommendation ought to have a fair and just weight in this House.

But the Committee on Ways and Means have paid no regard to that recommendation. They have not even called the attention of the House to it. What I spoke of was their stifling in committee every recommendation in regard to each and every one of these custom-houses, without regard to their merits. I asked them to stand up here and give some reason to this House why they had disregarded them; and I appeal to this House if they have heard from the committee a solitary statement of fact, or a solitary reason, going to show that the additional appropriation is not called for by the condition of the country?

One word as to what the gentleman said in regard to my action. I never did pledge myself, upon or off this floor, that any particular sum of money would be sufficient, and that such a sum would be all that would be asked for. I have said that the estimates exhibited required the amount indicated by them, and I advocated the appropriation of those amounts. To that extent I went, and no further.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BISSELL. I withdraw the amendment, if there be no objection.

No objection being made, the amendment was withdrawn.

The question then recurring upon the amendment of Mr. DISNEY, it was put; and there were, upon a division—ayes 78, noes 64; whereupon

Mr. HIBBARD called for tellers; which were ordered.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 49, being a bill to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854, and had come to no resolution thereon.

On motion by Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, the House then adjourned, at half-past three o'clock, till to-morrow.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 1, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

NATIONAL FOUNDRY.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I submit the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Secretary of War to select a site for a national foundry, at some suitable place in the State of Pennsylvania.

By unanimous consent the resolution was considered.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I believe that the propriety of establishing a national foundry is now conceded, and I am convinced that the plan indicated in the resolution for selecting the site is the only practicable one. The Secretary of War will, no doubt, as is usual, appoint a board of experienced and disinterested officers, to make a personal examination and inspection of the various places recommended, and report to him on the subject. It is the way in which navy-yards, naval and military asylums, marine hospitals, &c., are selected. Congress cannot select the site, because so many members think their own particular localities the best, and hence preconceived opinions and sectional rivalry prevent action.

For the last ten years, Mr. President, I have urged the propriety of establishing a national foundry. On the 27th day of April, 1844, then being a member of the House of Representatives, I submitted a report from a select committee, recommending, for the reasons therein stated, the establishment of a national foundry in the district I then had the honor to represent. Now, for the first time, the Secretary of War has made a similar recommendation, without indicating the place. By an act passed the 3d of March, 1853, the Secretary of War was "directed to report to Congress whether, in his opinion, it would not be more economical, proper, and advisable to cause all the arms of the United States to be made by contract." The enlightened Secretary, in his recent report, clearly shows that it would not be more "economical, proper, and advisable" to cause all the small-arms to be made by contract, and adds:

"It is not known whether, by the use of the term 'all the arms of the United States,' it was intended to include the heavy guns or cannon, I will, however, remark, that all cannon are now made by contract, Congress having made no provision for a national foundry; and will take this occasion to recommend an appropriation for that object. The just admixture of metals, and the casting of bronze pieces, require much mechanical skill, and no little scientific attainment. The examination of ores, and the casting of iron into cannon, are subjects which have attracted much consideration from the Ordnance Department, and present a wide field for further investigation and experiment. The rigid inspection which such guns now receive has improved, and is still improving, their quality; but it is believed there would be a more rapid advance in knowledge, and a higher standard of excellence attained, if the advantage of a national foundry were possessed."

I presume, Mr. President, in view of many considerations, it will be admitted that if the recommendation of the War Department is adopted, that the foundry should be located at some point in the State I have the honor in part to represent. Pennsylvania is the great iron producing State of the Union, and has been such since the foundation of the Government. She is located between the dividing interests of the North and the South. She has water communication with the Northwest, West, and Southwest, and the Atlantic; while her railroads and canals, constructed without the aid of the General Government, penetrate every portion of the State.

But there are other reasons why this establishment should be yielded to Pennsylvania. One of the national armories is now located at Springfield, Massachusetts, and the other at Harper's Ferry, Virginia. The Eastern States will not, therefore, claim it, nor will Virginia. For the last few years New York has been so much favored by the expenditure of public moneys, and the establishment of governmental enterprises within her borders, that I believe that even she, although a rival State, will act worthy of a generous rival, and yield upon this question to Pennsylvania. Again, there is no State in the Union north of Mason and Dixon's line that has stood so firmly by the constitutional rights of the South, and hence we look for aid upon this question to our southern brethren.

It is proper that I should add that my opinion remains unchanged in regard to the place that should be selected. I believe the valley of the Lehigh, in Pennsylvania, presents greater advantages than any other place; but as there is a difference of opinion upon this point between my colleagues in the House and myself, and as a difference of opinion is certain to prevent success, I am willing to leave the question to the Secretary of War and a competent board of officers. I am willing that the different points, not only on the valley of the Lehigh, but those also upon the valleys of the Schuylkill, Susquehanna, and Juniata, as well as places west of the Alleghany mountains, and elsewhere throughout the State, should be carefully and personally examined. It seems to me that no fair-minded person can object to this course. I hope, therefore, that the resolution will be adopted, and that the committee will give the subject that consideration which its importance demands.

Mr. PRATT. I move to strike out the latter clause, "at some suitable place in the State of Pennsylvania." If a national foundry is to be established for the Government, the question should be left open for its selection to the committee of the Senate and to the Secretary of War. I think Maryland would probably be as good a location as Pennsylvania for such a purpose. I therefore move to strike out the words which I have mentioned.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

INJUNCTION OF SECRECY.

Mr. SLIDELL. I offer the following resolution, which I ask may now be considered:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be requested to inquire into the expediency of so amending the rules of the Senate that the injunction of secrecy shall be removed so far as regards the final action of the Senate on any nominations submitted to it for confirmation, and enjoining said injunction in relation to any debate, discussion, or report which may have occurred in Executive session in relation to said nominations.

Mr. BADGER. I suppose that is not a proper resolution for open session. I understand it is a resolution proposing to take off the injunction of secrecy on certain nominations.

Mr. SLIDELL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I will explain very briefly the object of the resolution. I voted a few days since against the motion to lay on the table a resolution introduced by the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE,] repealing altogether the rules which now exist in relation to the obligation of secrecy as to what may be done in Executive session. I think recent experience, the experience of but a few days ago, has demonstrated that there is no such thing as maintaining secrecy in regard to our action upon nominations in Executive session.

I am in favor of still retaining the injunction of secrecy, so far as relates to any debate, discussion, or remarks in Executive session; but I am decidedly opposed to retaining that injunction in relation to the action of the Senate upon nominations. I believe the Committee on the Judiciary is the appropriate committee to which this subject should be referred. I think there can be no objection to the resolution; for we are all satisfied that secrecy in regard to our action upon nominations is a farce.

Mr. BADGER. I heard the resolution read, indistinctly, and I did not then understand its exact purport. I have now no objection to it.

Mr. SLIDELL. It is a mere resolution of inquiry, and I hope it will now be considered.

Mr. BUTLER. I decline to take charge of matters of this kind. The resolution ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, though if it be confined to nominations, it may be perhaps proper to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary. Do I understand the honorable Senator to say that it is confined to nominations?

Mr. SLIDELL. It is confined entirely to the action of the Senate upon nominations.

Mr. BUTLER. And has no reference to treaties?

Mr. SLIDELL. None at all.

Mr. CLAYTON. I doubt very much whether that resolution will alter the rules of the Senate as they now stand. I think there is a great mistake in the public mind, and even among Senators themselves, in reference to this whole matter. There is nothing in the rules requiring secrecy with regard to the votes of Senators upon nominations. I mean to say, that whenever a nomination has been acted upon by the Senate, it is considered, and always has been considered, perfectly competent for any member of the Senate to state the result of the vote. Whether the nomination is confirmed or rejected is no secret, and never was any secret. The only matters upon which the injunction of secrecy rests are treaties, debates upon nominations, remarks of Senators of a personal kind with regard to the character and fitness of the nominees, and upon all papers which the President sends here that are marked "confidential."

I suppose that nobody wishes to change the rule as it now stands. It is perfectly competent for a Senator to state whether a nomination has been confirmed or not; but in reference to communications from the Executive marked "confidential," I trust no one desires to remove the injunction of secrecy. So, too, in regard to treaties; no one desires to change the rule in respect to them. The common idea that everything that we do in Executive session is covered by some injunction of secrecy is an entire error. I, of course, do not object to the resolution going to the committee, but I cannot see how any essential change will be made by the committee.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I think myself it would be a very great improvement upon the rules of the Senate if we were to allow the reporters, as sworn officers of the body, to be in Executive session when we are acting upon nominations made by the President. Then, when we choose to remove the injunction of secrecy, the debate which may have taken place upon a nomination can also go out to the country with the vote which we have given. I am desirous that every vote which I may give upon Executive appointments shall be known to the country; but I oftentimes desire that the country should also be put in possession of the facts and the reasons why I voted as I may have done.

Now, sir, this cannot be obtained, in my judgment, except by the introduction of reporters into Executive session. If they were to be sworn officers of the Senate, the same injunction of secrecy which operates upon us would also apply to them; and whenever we saw proper to remove that injunction, the debates which may have taken place upon the nomination with the vote, could go out to the country. As the case stands at present, the country can determine nothing upon our votes, and often great injustice may be done to Senators here, because the reasons which operated upon their minds are not submitted along with their votes. I desire, in all cases, that whatever I may say with regard to any Executive appointment should be known to the country. I am willing that they should know the manner in which I vote, and I am equally anxious that they should know the reasons which operated upon my mind in the giving of that vote.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I recollect that at the last legislative session of the Senate, when we were in Executive meeting, a report was read to the Senate which had been made many years ago in Executive session upon this subject—a report, I think, made by Mr. Hayne, of South Carolina.

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BADGER. The Senate directed the injunction of secrecy to be removed from that report, and ordered that it should be printed. I have never seen anything of it since, and do not know whether it has been printed or not. I think that if it were here it would throw a good deal of light upon this subject. I would suggest to the Senator from Louisiana, having no sort of objection to the adoption of this resolution, whether under the suggestion thrown out it would not be better to frame it somewhat in this way: that the Judiciary Committee be directed to examine whether any alteration should be made in the rule of the Senate upon the subject of proceeding in Executive session, and if any, what?

Mr. WELLER. I should prefer that.

Mr. SLIDELL. I would accept that amendment with great pleasure. I think, however, the Senator from Delaware does not understand precisely the object of my resolution; and perhaps I am altogether mistaken as to what are supposed to be the obligations of Senators. It is very clear that we have a right to say that such a nomination has been confirmed, or that such a one has been rejected. Perhaps we might go further, and say it was confirmed or rejected by so many votes. It is also understood that each individual Senator has a right to say how he voted; but I certainly have been laboring under very great misapprehension, if it be the general sense of the Senate that any Senator has a right to say in public how any other Senator has voted in Executive session upon a nomination. That is the point at which I wish to arrive. Experience shows that there is really no secrecy; and I do not choose to be trammelled by obligations which others do not observe. We saw the other day, with regard to an appointment, in reference to which there was a great deal of interest excited, and to which the public attention was very much directed, that the rule had no effect. I met a gentleman the next morning, and in conversing with him, he told me how every Senator had voted.

I had supposed, myself, that it was incumbent upon me to keep the vote of every other Senator secret. If I am wrong in that impression, then my resolution is useless. If we have a right to say how each person has voted in the Senate, then I am satisfied with the rule as it stands. If that be not the case, I think an amendment is imperatively called for.

Mr. BADGER. I have the report now to which I just referred, and which has been printed. According to the view entertained by the committee which made this report, it is very clear, I think, that what has been stated by the Senator from Louisiana is correct. So I have always understood the rule, that though a Senator has a right to state his own vote, he has no right to state the vote of any other Senator without his consent. The part of the report which refers to it is this:

"So far as this rule embraces 'information' given, or 'remarks' made, there can be no difficulty. But it may be asked whether any injunction of secrecy is imposed by this rule.

"1st. In relation to the fact that an individual has been nominated to any office before the nomination has been acted on.

"2d. In relation to the confirmation or rejection of such nomination.

"3d. In relation to the state of the vote by which such rejection or confirmation has taken place.

"4th. In relation to the votes of individual members of the Senate on such nomination.

"That the words of the rule do not impose secrecy in any of the three first named cases, can hardly admit of a doubt; and it seems equally clear that they are not embraced within the reason of the rule. The only point that can be considered at all doubtful, is whether a disclosure of the vote of any individual member of the Senate does not come within the reason of the rule which forbids the disclosure of 'the remarks' of any member touching the character and qualifications of any person nominated by the President. A note, though not, strictly speaking, a remark, is clearly the expression of an opinion; and if the former ought to be kept secret, so ought the latter. On the whole, therefore, the committee are of opinion that, in addition to keeping secret all 'remarks on the character and qualifications of persons nominated,' the votes of individual members must also be kept secret. Though they think that this rule ought not to prevent a gentleman from making known his own individual vote on such nomination, taking care to keep secret the votes of others."

Mr. CLAYTON. I have only to say, in regard to that report, that I remember well when it was presented here. I think it was never adopted—never acted upon. It was a report made by a very able committee; and the principles contained in it have governed the Senate, so far as my knowledge of its course extends. The Senator from Louisiana was right in saying it has been understood that a Senator is not at liberty to mention the votes of other Senators; and that understanding has grown out of that portion of the report which has been read by the Senator from North Carolina.

It might, however, admit of a doubt, whether the construction given in the report and the remarks of the Senator be a fair one or not. It is rather a strange interpretation, I humbly submit, to contend that the vote oration comes within the same provision as the remarks. However, this has been the understanding, and Senators have generally conformed to it; and what has been the result? Every man has related to everybody who asked him, as soon as he came out of the Senate Chamber, what his own vote was, and consequently it was very easy to ascertain what the votes of all were; so that there has not been any secrecy at all in relation to the actual votes of Senators upon nominations; nor has there been any secrecy in regard to the votes of Senators upon treaties. Each man being at liberty to say how he voted, it was ascertained very soon how all voted.

I am very willing that the question shall go to the Committee on the Judiciary, as the Senator from Louisiana desires; and I trust they will have the report made in 1830 under their consideration, if it be necessary to alter the rules of the Senate, and make a report to that effect; but I very much doubt whether any amendment is necessary to the rules.

Mr. BUTLER. The report which the Senator from North Carolina has referred to and read, was before this body, I think, no longer ago than the last session.

Mr. BADGER. In Executive session.

Mr. BUTLER. In Executive session last year. I recollect the remarks of Senators then, and the decision of the Senate. I am perfectly willing that the resolution should go to the committee; but I think the general opinion was, that the subject should not be further discussed or acted upon. I know it depends upon each one's sense of propriety as to whether that shall be the case. I agree with the Senator from Louisiana, that I have heretofore regarded myself as under an obligation to keep secret what others have said or voted, though I may have been at liberty to say how I voted. If the Senator insists upon his resolution, let it go to the committee.

Mr. SLIDELL. I prefer that it should go to the committee—

Mr. BADGER. I should like to know from the Senator from Louisiana whether he adopts the suggestion which I made? I should be very glad to hear if it meets his approbation.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have determined to modify the resolution, in accordance with the suggestion, so that it will read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be requested to inquire whether any additional rule, or amendment of the existing rules, in relation to the proceedings of the Senate in Executive session, be necessary; and if, in their opinion, any such rule or amendment be necessary, to report such rule or amendment to the Senate.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives to secure the rights of citizenship to children of citizens of the United States born out of the limits thereof, reported back the same with an amendment.

He also submitted a report on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill to constitute Palatka and Bayport, in the State of Florida, ports of delivery, respectively, reported back the same without amendment, and recommended its passage.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of the president of the "Accessory Transit Company," asking the enactment of a law to enable that company to hold title to any steamers or ships that may be necessary to enable said company to transport passengers and freight between the ports of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, reported a bill to authorize the issue of registers to vessels owned by the Accessory Transit Company; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the memorial of John C. F. Salomon, praying an act of incorporation for the purpose of supplying the cities of Washington and Georgetown with pure water, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the petition of L. P. Holladay & Co., praying to be allowed to build an hotel upon one of the public lots, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. ALLEN presented the petition of Harriet H. Saunders, widow of Camillus Saunders, an officer of the revenue service, who was lost on board the cutter Hamilton, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STUART presented the memorial of Joseph Smith, assignee of a certain land warrant, asking the right to locate the quantity of land therein described; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. WALKER presented the memorial of the mayor and aldermen of the city of Milwaukee, relative to the mode of expending money appropriated for the harbor of that city; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a presentment of the grand jury of the United States, for the district of Wisconsin, representing the necessity of providing suitable buildings for the custom-house, post office, and courts in the city of Milwaukee; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of Abraham Boileau, one of the grandchildren of Amable Boileau, an officer in the army of the Revolution, praying to be allowed commutation; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, presented a petition of citizens of Hackensack, New Jersey, praying the erection of a monument over the remains of Brigadier General Enoch Poor, of New Hampshire; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of Sarah L. Hine, widow of E. C. Hine, an officer of the United States revenue service, who was lost on board the cutter Hamilton, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CLAYTON presented a memorial of citizens of Delaware county, Pennsylvania, praying a modification of the late bounty land law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to pass no law for the extension of slavery in the territory from which it was excluded by the Missouri compromise act; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FISH presented the petition of Ellen Martin, praying that the commutation pay to which Francis Martin was entitled, for services during the revolutionary war, may be paid to his grandchildren, or legal representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. STUART, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers relating to the claim of Joseph Sanfacion and others, of Michigan, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion by Mr. CLAYTON, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Catherine Crosby and the representatives of Thomas D. Anderson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

On motion by Mr. TOUCEY, it was Ordered, That Ann Dodd have leave to withdraw her petition and papers.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the petition of William D. and Julia Acken be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the heirs of Robert Sewall have leave to withdraw their petition and papers.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill to cede to the State of Illinois that portion of the Cumberland road lying within that State, in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate.

VERMONT SENATORSHIP.

On motion by Mr. PETTIT, the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, affirming the right of the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS to retain his seat in the Senate.

THE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] is entitled to the floor on this question.

Mr. BAYARD. Before I proceed to the discussion of the question before the Senate this morning, I desire to state that the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] one of the majority of the committee in reporting the resolution, has stated to me that it is his desire to make a very few remarks in explanation of the report of the majority. I cheerfully yield the floor to the Senator for that purpose, with the understanding, of course, that I shall proceed when he has concluded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter into the discussion of the resolution before the Senate. That is safely and more properly left with others. As a member of the committee reporting the resolution, I desire merely to correct some inaccuracies which appear in the adverse report presented by the minority of the committee. It is stated in that report, that the majority of the committee ask that the words "until the next meeting of the Legislature" shall be construed to mean beyond the next meeting of the Legislature. Now, so far from asking this construction of the words referred to, it is contended by the majority of the committee, that these words have no relation whatever to the case before us, or any reference or respect whatever to the time or duration of office, but are limited in their application to the time in which appointments can be made by the Executive. The clause in the Constitution which provides "that if vacancies happen by death, resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancy," has attracted the attention of statesmen of much ability and purity of purpose, and has received from them, ever since the organization of our Government, very different constructions.

The words contained in this clause are of doubtful and equivocal import, not having that clear and definite meaning which precludes misconstruction and difference of interpretation. Some suppose they contain a limitation on the power of appointment and on the continuance or duration of the office conferred by the appointment; while others conclude that the limitation is applicable only to the time in which the Executive may exercise the appointing power, and make appointments, and has no reference whatever to the term or duration of the office held under the appointment. Though the ground of this last conclusion may not at the first view be apparent, on a critical and careful examination of the clause referred to, it will be found a sound conclusion, and fully warranted by a fair and grammatical construction of language. The word or adverb "until," in that clause or sentence, qualifies the word or verb "make;" and in that relation can only fix the time in which the Executive may make appointments, and is not used to determine the period for which the appointee shall hold his seat under a temporary appointment, and has no respect to the period or duration of the office, and imposes no limits whatever upon it.

Temporary appointments made by the Executive under this clause of the Constitution have ever been construed as appointments made to endure until the vacant term expired, or the place occupied by the temporary appointee could be constitutionally filled by the Legislature.

This is not the interpretation put on the Constitution in the minority report, but is the interpretation placed upon it by the Senate in the numerous cases cited by the committee, and is in harmony with the letter, spirit, and design of that sacred instrument. This construction has too long been approved and sanctioned to be now reviewed and departed from, unless the evils arising from it imperiously demand a change of interpretation. The minority report adverts to an evil that may arise, if the appointee fails to represent the people of his State; and might not a Senator, elected for six years, or to fill out the vacancy left of an unexpired term, be as liable to misrepresent the people as an Executive appointee, either of whom are further removed from them, and more independent of their control, than the Senator appointed by the Governor, whose office can be terminated by the people through their Representatives whenever they meet?

The debates on the Constitution fully demonstrate that those who adopted it expressed their fears that the number of members in the Senate might prove too limited for the numbers in the House, and their determination to provide for a full representation in the Senate from each State; and to prevent, as far as practicable, any failure of administration on account of vacancies in that branch of the Government. To carry out this desirable object, we conclude that this clause of the Constitution, which we have under discussion, was undoubtedly provided.

This conclusion is generally admitted; and to me, a strict constructionist, as unwilling to violate the Constitution as the honorable Senator from South Carolina can be, it appears just, reasonable, and irresistible. In order, however, to derive authority from this clause of the Constitution to effect its purpose, some contend they must give to its language a technical or artificial construction which they are unwilling to adopt.

If so, sir, and doubts exist against a construction regarded sound, arising from criticism, to which language, by its uncertainty, is exposed, let the great fundamental rule for the adjustment of cases of doubtful construction be applied by giving to this clause of the Constitution the interpretation intended by its framers. The object of providing for temporary appointments by the Governor will then be obtained. The appointee will retain his seat in the Senate till the vacant term expires, or the vacancy is filled by the Legislature; and the benefit of all doubts will be given where they belong, in support of safe precedents, and of the rights and representation of a sovereign State.

Mr. BAYARD addressed the Senate at some length, and elaborately argued the subject in opposition to the position of the majority of the committee.

[Mr. B.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. President, if it be the pleasure of the Senate that I shall proceed to-day with the remarks which I purpose to make on this subject, I will most cheerfully do so; but at the same time I should much prefer if the Senate would postpone the further consideration of the matter until to-morrow. The question involved in the discussion is one of secondary importance, as it relates to the case now under consideration, but is of paramount importance, as it tends to settle a question of constitutional law.

After the very full discussion of the question by the Senator from Delaware, it will be impossible to discharge what I conceive to be my duty to the State which I profess to represent, without consuming much more time than the Senate will be disposed to devote to the debate to-day.

Under these circumstances, I prefer that the argument should not be divided, but that I should have an opportunity to-morrow of presenting my views in full.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the Senate ought to adjourn, and therefore I will move an adjournment, but with this suggestion: I think the honorable gentleman from Vermont would do well to reserve his remarks, by common understanding, until the close of the debate. I think that by reserving himself to close the debate, his argument will have more effect upon the decision, perhaps, than if he spoke now, particularly as others intend to speak.

I intend, for myself, to make but a very few remarks on the subject of justification of the views which I entertain. I do not intend to go into a long argument, and I do not wish to have it appear at all that I would mingle in the debate in any spirit of controversy with the honorable gentleman. It is with that view that I prefer that he should reserve his remarks, by common understanding, to close the debate. However, this is a mere suggestion.

Mr. PHELPS. That matter can readily be disposed of in the morning. If other gentlemen prefer to speak first, it can then be ascertained, and we can settle the matter.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 1, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, Mr. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the annual report of the Commissioner of Patents, containing the first or the mechanical part of the Patent Office Report.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I rise to a question of privilege. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill for the relief of J. Boyd, of Louisiana, was laid on the table, with the view of moving that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The question was then taken, and the vote was reconsidered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon recommitting the bill for the relief of J. Boyd, of Louisiana, to the Committee on Claims.

The question was then taken, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

THE ERIE DIFFICULTIES.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill that came from the Post Office Committee to secure the safe transmission of the mails of the United States was sent to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. OLDS. I wish to make a single remark in reference to that bill.

Mr. DRUM. Is it in order to discuss this matter of reconsideration?

Mr. OLDS. Although this bill was general in its application—

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Ohio suspend a single moment until the House disposes of the report of the Committee on Patents.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to refer the report of the Commissioner on Patents to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, and that it be printed.

Mr. HAVEN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion? Would it not be well to make a motion to print some extra number of copies, so that the matter may go to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. TAYLOR. I would make such motion, that the report be referred to that committee, with instructions to inquire what number of extra copies it is proper to print. Perhaps it would be well to say 100,000 copies.

Mr. ORR. Seventy thousand is the number we have heretofore printed.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I understand this is the first part of the Patent Office Report. It has never been usual to print more than fifty thousand copies of that part.

Mr. HAVEN. Will the gentleman allow me one word? Inasmuch as this is a proposition to print extra copies, no matter whether it is one hundred thousand or fifty thousand, I submit that the question goes at once to the Committee on Printing without discussion, and they can determine whether it shall be one hundred thousand or fifty thousand.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, that reference will be made.

TRANSPORTATION UNITED STATES MAILS.

Mr. OLDS. I said yesterday that the bill reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to protect the transportation of the United States mail upon the railroads of the United States, was general in its terms, although the Erie difficulties had given rise to its introduction at the present time. I felt then too much indisposed, owing to soreness in the throat, to make any remarks, and I scarcely feel able to do so at this time. It appears to me that there is a state of affairs now existing in Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania, that demands of this House that it should take some action upon the safe transportation of the United States mails over the railroads passing through that town. This bill was drawn with special care to guard against any conflict between the jurisdiction of the United States and the jurisdiction of the courts of Pennsylvania. Any order coming from any court of Pennsylvania for the construction of the railroad—

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order—that this debate is out of order. When this bill was submitted yesterday, and a motion was made to commit, the previous question was demanded and sustained. The vote was taken, and the bill was committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Now a motion is made to reconsider that vote. The previous question had not exhausted itself; because if the motion to commit had failed, the question then would have been, "Shall the bill be read a third time?" That being the condition of the question before the House, debate is not now in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from South Carolina, and holds that the previous question had exhausted itself.

Mr. OLDS. I do not wish to trouble the House at any length upon this matter. I wish to say, however, that since the action of the House yesterday, a telegraphic dispatch has been received from Erie, to the effect that the mob have again taken possession at that place, and have torn up the rails. I will read the dispatch to the House. It is dated at Erie, January 31, and is as follows:

"Men commenced clearing away platform to connect tracks. Bell was rung, and a thousand people rushed up and destroyed our track on Sasfrass street."

It seems that as soon as, under the order of the United States court, they commenced replacing the track, the alarm bell was rung, and the people of Erie, to the number of one thousand, rushed on and tore up the tracks. Now, sir, all that I have to say upon this matter is, that some action is required upon the part of Congress to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the United States mail through that portion of the country. I will now read an extract from a New York paper upon the same subject.

Mr. FLORENCE, (interrupting.) If I may be allowed to ask the gentleman from Ohio a single question, I desire to know the authority of that dispatch—whether it may be relied upon?

Mr. OLDS. The gentleman knows the people of Pennsylvania better than I do. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLORENCE. I do not know who sent that dispatch.

Mr. OLDS. Neither am I acquainted with the gentleman who sent it.

Mr. FLORENCE. I only want to know the facts, and I therefore inquired of the gentleman whether he knew that the dispatch came from good authority.

Mr. OLDS. I take it for granted that the dispatch is authentic. But I disclaim any feeling in reference to this matter. I have no feelings against the people of Erie. What I am saying, and what I am doing, is simply in discharge of my duty as a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. That is all. I have no feeling upon the subject. The extract from the New York paper—I believe it is from the Tribune—is the following:

"ATTENTION, ERIE!—The Detroit papers acknowledge the receipt of New York and Buffalo papers, per the Western railroad through Canada, twenty-four hours in advance of the mail. A fact of this sort should arouse the Erie people to a sense of their condition. If they wish to escape total annihilation they had better behave rationally, and leave undisturbed the rail track passing through their town."

This shows, from the quotation from the Detroit paper, that the western people are seriously discussing the question of the propriety of petitioning the Post Office Department for the transmission of the great western mail through Canada to Detroit, which they think preferable to the present arrangement, in consequence of these disturbances at Erie. We have it here announced that, in consequence of these disturbances, the New York papers are received by this route, through Canada, twenty-four hours in advance of the United States mail.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by Mr. MACHEN, its Clerk, informing the House of the passage by that body of bills of the following titles:

Senate bill (No. 122) "to amend the third section of the act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1854, and for other purposes;"

Senate bill (No. 55) "to extend the limits of the port of New Orleans;" and Senate bill (No. 149) "granting a portion of the public lands to the State of Wisconsin, to aid in the construction of railroad and branch railroad in said State;"

Also, of the passage of sundry private bills.]

Mr. OLDS continued. Now, sir, it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to make such provisions as may be necessary to secure the safe and speedy transmission of its mails through its territory. That is the question for them to determine. If we act in this matter at all, we should act speedily, and at once. If the bill has been drawn loosely, and is incorrect, let the House perfect it. But the exigencies of the mail service of the United States require some speedy action in relation to this matter. I am unable, from the state of my health, to say more upon the subject at present.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a question, before he concludes.

Mr. OLDS. I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. JONES. I understand that this bill provides for the safe transmission of the mails by and through Erie?

Mr. OLDS. No, sir; the bill is applicable to all the railroads of the United States.

Mr. JONES. Well, Erie is the only point now to be provided for.

Mr. OLDS. I have already stated that the bill is general in its provisions.

Mr. JONES. I wish to inquire of the gentleman if he can devise any bill by which he can make the railroads which have contracted to carry the mails between this city and New York, through the State of New Jersey, carry them in proper time?

Mr. OLDS. I have a bill in my desk to be reported to the House, which will perhaps answer the gentleman's question at the proper time.

Mr. RITCHIE. I wish to say, with regard to this matter, that that bill reported by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads is a long bill, and it is palpable to me, from hearing it read—I have had no time to examine it, for it has not yet been printed—that it is very doubtful whether it does not exceed the constitutional power of this House. It needs, at least, a careful examination. It is well known to every member of this House that there are already abundant laws in existence, punishing criminally any attempt to stop the transit of the mails of the United States. But the endeavor of this bill, so far as I comprehend it, from the hasty manner in which it was read in the House, is not to protect the mails, but, under cover of protecting the transportation of the mails, to put the railroad companies of the United States in this attitude: that where they are fraudulently invading the territory of any State, in defiance of the laws of that State, and without a charter, every act that is committed against that fraudulent invasion of the territory of the State shall be construed into an obstruction of the mails of the United States, and punished as such. The mails of the United States are already protected; and if any one at Erie or elsewhere does any act with an intent to hinder or obstruct the passage of the mails, he is a criminal, and will be punished criminally.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman allow me, at this point, to propound a question to the Chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

Mr. RITCHIE. No, sir; I will not yield the floor. I say, further, that there are also abundant laws of the States punishing criminally any obstruction of railroads, making it a penitentiary offense, and consigning to the doom of a prison any man willfully obstructing the passage of cars on railroads.

But it is manifest, from the first, that the intention of this bill is to interfere with the common-law right of a man to abate a nuisance, and to defend his own property, when it is fraudulently and violently invaded, without a shadow or pretense of right, by making it an obstruction of the mails of the United States, and punishing him in place of those fraudulent railroad contractors and violators of the sovereign rights of a State and of individuals; it is to shield them by a law preventing obstructions to carrying the mails. There already exist abundant laws punishing all obstructions to the passage of the mails, and all obstructions to the passage of railroad cars; but here it is attempted to abolish the common law right to abate a nuisance, and to make the man who attempts to abate a nuisance and resist a fraudulent and violent invasion of his property by a railroad company, a criminal, and to confine him as such.

As to this very road, with respect to which the House has been alarmed this morning, that part of the road which has been taken up in Erie is on the western side, and belongs to the fraudulent Franklin Canal Company, which the supreme court of Pennsylvania has already decided is a fraud and violation of the rights of the State, and which the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania has also decided is a fraud, a violation of the rights of the State, and of every man living in it; and in regard to which, that same circuit court of the United States refused an application of its directors to issue an injunction restraining the people from tearing up the rails of the road. The court did issue an injunction in reference to the road from Erie, eastward to the New York line; but, on the application of this Franklin Canal Company for an injunction to prevent the people of Erie taking up the rails from that part of the road which the dispatch just read states they have taken up, it refused to do so, on the ground that the road was a fraud, an invasion on the eminent domain of Pennsylvania, and also of the rights of the citizens of the city of Erie. I call for the previous question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to be heard in reply to the gentleman, [Mr. RITCHIE.] and I would appeal to him to withdraw his call for the previous question. If he withdraws it I will renew it when I shall have concluded what I have to say.

[Cries, all over the Hall, of "Withdraw it!" "Hold on to the call!" "Their side has been already heard!" &c.]

Mr. RITCHIE. I withdraw the call, on the condition that the gentleman from Ohio renews it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am obliged to the gentleman for withdrawing the call for the previous question. I shall renew it.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. With the permission of my colleague, I will now put the interrogatory which the gentleman from Pennsylvania denied me the opportunity to make. The gentleman from Pennsylvania seems more disposed to cultivate than repress the mobs at Erie.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I cannot yield to my colleague now, though I will do so before my time expires.

I do not participate in any of the feelings which grow out of local interests. I am so fortunate as to represent a district not largely interested in this Erie question—I may say a district comparatively not very much interested in the speedy transmission of the mails. But a few weeks ago, when on a visit to my family, I had occasion to spend an evening in Cincinnati, the great commercial metropolis of the West; during which I attended a meeting composed of the people of all parties and all interests of that city, and had an opportunity of conferring with them to some extent in regard to the effect of the Erie riots upon the commercial interests of the valley of the Mississippi. The great complaint made by them was, not of any thing which grew out of the interest of these railroad companies, but that, by the obstruction of the mails of the United States, they were subjected to very serious inconveniences.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS.] through my colleague, whether there are not petitions and evidences of the obstructions of the mail before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I cannot yield the floor at present. At that meeting, which was overwhelming in point of its numbers and of its character, they entered upon this subject, and passed no agitating resolves. Immediately on my return, at the first opportunity that was presented to me, I introduced a resolution, calling on the President to give this House information as to the official evidences received in the Departments in relation to the obstruction of the mails of the United States. I did it, not that I was the representative of that great commercial constituency, for I know that it is ably represented on this floor; but because I knew that one of the gentlemen who represents the city of Cincinnati [Mr. HARRISON] is a gentleman not in the habit of public speaking, and unaccustomed to participating in the discussions of this House. The other, [Mr. DISNEY], I know full well, is overwhelmed by the important business in his hands as chairman of one of the most important committees of this House. And hence, sir, representing as I do a district contiguous to Cincinnati, I introduced that resolution in order that this House and the country might have information on which they could act intelligently. Where did the opposition to that resolution come from? It came from the State of Pennsylvania, on the one hand, and from the State of South Carolina, on the other; for the honorable gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] when we were about to pass the resolution the other evening—at the only time when the resolution could be called up under the rules—moved to lay it on the table. I understand that he did so because of his platform of strict construction; and the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, who last addressed the House, [Mr. RITCHIE.] is standing himself, I believe, on the position that the Federal Government has no right to pass a law to protect the transportation of the mails.

I well recollect, Mr. Speaker—and I advert to the fact for the purpose of showing the reason why I think gentlemen from Virginia are putting themselves in a false position on this question—I well recollect, I say, that a few years ago a very strong effort was made in the Keystone State to destroy the most beautiful structure across the river Ohio, at the city of Wheeling. She went into the courts of law, and there procured a decree declaring that bridge a nuisance, and ordering it to be removed. This House and the Federal Government exercised its power, and declared the bridge a "post road," and thereby preserved it; and let me say to Virginia, that it was the power of Congress, thus exercised in relation to the transportation of the mails of the United States, that saved that structure.

And now these gentlemen say that the Government of the United States, though it may have the power to establish post routes, has no power to protect the mails by punishing those who obstruct them. We have the right, according to this doctrine, to build custom-houses in the city of New York or in the city of Cincinnati—for that subject was up yesterday—we have the right to purchase the ground, to get materials, and to build elegant edifices, and yet we have no power here to punish the man who would apply the torch at midnight and destroy the edifices we have erected.

I hold to the doctrine that the Federal Government, if it have the power to build custom-houses, has the power to protect them; if it have the power to transport the mails, it has the power to protect the mails. And this bill, so far from seeking to apply a rule to the city of Erie alone, is a bill which provides generally that any person who shall obstruct the mails, unless such obstruction—and I call the attention of honorable gentlemen to this reading of it—unless such obstruction be made by virtue of competent legal authority, shall be punished. So that if one of his Erie friends—if one of the thousand or ten thousand, who run at midnight when the bells ring to tear up the track, thereby obstructing the United States mails, and endangering the lives of the people who are passing over that road—if he does it by virtue of legal authority—he cannot be held criminally guilty under this law. It is, after all, a question of law, which must be submitted to the judicial tribunals.

Mr. STRAUB. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Any question.

Mr. STRAUB. I would inquire of the gentleman whether the proposition to interfere upon the subject to which the gentleman is now directing his remarks, was not brought before the Ohio Legislature, and whether that Legislature did or did not refuse to act in the premises? And if they did refuse, will he be kind enough to tell us the reason?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I confess that I am not very fully posted as to the proceedings of the Ohio Legislature, for the reason, which I give very frankly, that I have not the very highest degree of respect for what they may do; and I have seen some things recently, from that quarter, which confirms me in my disposition to pay but little regard to what they may do. [Laughter.] I do not know that they have anything to do with this subject at all. I can tell the gentleman what he will find the Ohio Legislature disposed to do. I observed, the other day, that the Legislature of Pennsylvania repealed the charter of the Franklin Canal Company, thereby obstructing the connection between the Atlantic and the West. Such a bill has passed both branches of the Pennsylvania Legislature. I do not dispute the right of Pennsylvania to repeal that charter if it sees fit, but I repeat what I said the other day on this subject of repealing charters, that if Pennsylvania is disposed to go into this business, I have no doubt that the radical Democracy of Ohio, now sitting in the Legislature, are ready to take their part in playing that game.

But this has nothing to do with the question before the House. The question now is, as to the power of the Federal Government to protect the mails of the United States. This bill has come from your Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. STRAUB, (interrupting.) I desire to propound another question to the gentleman. I was not in the House yesterday when this bill was read.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is not my fault. The gentleman ought to have been here.

Mr. STRAUB. The proposition, as I understand it, will amount to this: Pass this bill, and then you have at once your General Government and your State government at issue.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is that all?

Mr. STRAUB. Another thing.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The whisky insurrection was another thing.

Mr. STRAUB. I wish to ask this question: whether, if you pass this bill, the Constitution will not be violated in this respect—that a man who may choose, out of any ill will or malice, to interfere—by burning down a bridge, if you please—cannot be tried twice? whether, under the General Government, you do not try him; and under the judicial powers of the State you do not try him again? Where are your State rights?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman's argument against legislation, to wit, that he was not in the House when this bill was read twice, has not a great deal of force, if he means, by the suggestion proposed, that we shall not legislate to protect a great national interest like this, if he is absent.

Again, he says that there is danger that a man will be tried twice. I do not apprehend any such danger. There is nothing in this bill which is calculated, in any manner, to violate the Constitution. As I said before, there is an express clause in the bill, which provides that no man shall be punished for obstructing the mail, who acts by virtue of competent legal authority; so that, if Pennsylvania asserts her sovereignty in this particular instance, and the power of her State enactments, the whole question goes, where it ought to go, before the judicial tribunals of the land—and an Erie mob could not be sent to the penitentiary, under this bill, so long as the question was pending before such tribunals.

Immediate protection should be afforded in this case. There is danger in delay. People representing the great commercial interests of the West, as well as the Atlantic coast, are awaiting, with deep anxiety, national legislation upon this subject. If we are tardy—if we refuse to protect an interest like this—if we leave this bill in the great vortex of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, although I have a great and strong faith in the law-abiding spirit of those people who have been holding meetings in reference to this subject, at Chicago, Cleveland, and other places, yet I am not prepared to say that there will not rise up a power there that will make an effort to protect its interests, without asking any legislation. It seems to me that this measure ought to be passed immediately, and therefore I move the previous question. Before doing so, I will yield for a moment to my colleague, [Mr. TAYLOR,] who wishes to ask a question of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I wish simply to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

[Cries of "I object!"]

I would then ask my colleague the question, because I wish to get at the facts in this matter I wish to know, in opposition to the views of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STRAUB,] whether we are not acting under petitions in relation to the obstruction of the United States mails at Erie, and whether such petitions are not on file?

Mr. CAMPBELL. In reply to the question of my colleague, I will say that I have myself received numerous petitions, and that I have received the proceedings of various public meetings, some of which have been presented to this House, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; and upon these petitions and proceedings I understand this report has been based.

Mr. OLDS. I will say that the report was based principally upon the petition of—

Mr. STRAUB. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know whether one gentleman has the right to demand the previous question—

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have not done it yet.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Ohio to have demanded the previous question, but to have withdrawn it, and yielded to his colleague for explanation.

Mr. STRAUB. How is it, then, if the Speaker please to answer, that the gentleman from Ohio has the right to pick out his men and say who shall speak, and who shall not speak?

The SPEAKER. He cannot do that; but the gentleman has the right to yield the floor to others for explanation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I propound this question to the Chair: Is it competent for a gentleman occupying the floor to yield it except for personal explanation; or has he the right to yield it for explanation of the measure under consideration? If he may yield it for the latter purpose, it opens the whole question to debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will obviate all difficulty in the matter, by propounding, while I am upon the floor, a question to my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, [Mr. OLDS.] I ask him whether any petitions have been presented to this House, and referred to that committee upon this subject?

Mr. JONES. That is not personal explanation. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLDS] may answer the question of his colleague in order, if he desires so to do.

Mr. OLDS. I will say, then, that a petition was presented to the House, and referred to our committee, from the agent of the company who had contracted with the Government for the transmission of the mail over the road passing through Erie, stating that in consequence of the disturbances at that place, he had been unable to carry out his contract. And not only this, but this House passed a resolution, instructing the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to inquire into this matter. In obedience to this resolution, we have made the report, which is now under discussion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think that is satisfactory, and I therefore move the previous question.

Mr. PACKER. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the call for the previous question a moment, to allow me to ask his colleague, the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads [Mr. OLDS] a question.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon the motion of the gentleman from Maryland I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. HAMILTON's motion, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 83, nays 102; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bock, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Curtis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Dowdell, Drum, Edmundson, Elliott, Everhart, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Hibbard, Hiester, Houston, Howe, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lane, Letcher, Lilly, McNair, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, Meacham, Middlewarth, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Orr, Packer, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Skelton, George W. Smythe, Snodgrass, Stratton, Straub, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Walsh, Tappan Wentworth, Witte, and Zollicoffer—83.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Appleton, Ball, Banks, Benson, Bissell, Bliss, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chase, Chastain, Chrisman, Clingman, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dean, Dent, Dickinson, Disney, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Ellison, English, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Giddings, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Hill, Hillyer, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kerr, Knox, Latham, Lindsey, Macdonald, Maurice, Mayall, John G. Miller, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Rogers, Sage, Sapp, Shannon, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, Sollers, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Tweed, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, and Wheeler—102.

So the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion to reconsider, on which the previous question has been demanded.

Mr. GROW. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw the demand for the previous question for a few minutes; I will renew it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I refused to withdraw it for one of my colleagues, and I cannot do it now without involving myself in trouble.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put, and, on a division, there were—yeas 77, nays 81.

Mr. FLORENCE. I demand tellers.

Mr. GROW. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GROW. I withdraw the call.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays having been ordered, it is not in the power of the gentleman to withdraw the call.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 92, nays 93; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bocock, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Caskey, Chamberlain, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Curtis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Dowdell, Drum, Dunbar, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Everhart, Ewing, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Grow, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Henn, Hibbard, Hiestler, Houston, Howe, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Macdonald, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, Middlesworth, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Noble, Orr, Packer, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Pratt, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Skelton, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Stratton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Walsh, Witte, and Zollcoffer—92.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Appleton, Ball, Benson, Bissell, Bliss, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chase, Chastain, Chrisman, Clingman, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dean, Dent, Dickinson, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Ellison, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Hill, Hillyer, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, McDougall, Matteson, Maurice, John G. Miller, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Reese, Rogers, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Shannon, Simmons, Sollers, Hester L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Tweed, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wheeler, and Yates—93.

So the House refused to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FLORENCE. I rise to what I presume to be a privileged question. I move that the House do now adjourn, and on that motion demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Faction!

Mr. WHEELER. Faction!

Mr. FLORENCE. If it be faction, make the most of it.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. FLORENCE. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. GROW. Is it in order to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? If it be in order, I submit it, and demand tellers.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would suggest to the gentleman to move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. No action has been had since the House voted down the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the gentleman's motion, therefore, is not in order.

Mr. GROW. I move, then, that we proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order until the morning hour has expired.

A MEMBER. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not commenced yet.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the Chair decide that the morning hour has not commenced?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so decided.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understood that the Speaker called the committees for reports this morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not done so to-day.

Mr. HOUSTON. I know that we have disposed of some business to-day.

The SPEAKER. This business, together with another privileged question, have intervened, and there has been no morning hour.

Mr. GROW. I have submitted the motion that we proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair has decided it to be out of order. It would be in order at the expiration of the morning hour, but it would not supersede this proposition.

Mr. GROW. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not in order to move that we proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table at any moment gentlemen can obtain the floor to do so? I know that the floor cannot be taken from any gentleman to submit that motion until the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman turn to the rule which sustains him?

Mr. HOUSTON. I have not got a copy of the rules here. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. And the gentleman does not understand the rules if he makes that proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have no doubt that the decision of the Chair is right, because we are now in the consideration of a privileged question, which would supersede the motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table. No motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table is in order until one hour has been spent in calling committees for reports.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. JONES. But a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is a privileged question, and can be made when a motion to reconsider is pending. I think that it would be the policy of gentlemen—

Mr. BISSELL. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. JONES. This bill has not been printed. [Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. Discussion not being in order, the gentleman will excuse the Chair from allowing him to proceed.

Mr. JONES. Certainly, sir. Let the bill lie over until it can be printed, and be placed on our desks.

The question was taken, and the House refused to order a call of the House.

Mr. GROW. I now move that the House resolve duty itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FLORENCE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Bocock, and Ritchie of Pennsylvania, were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 81.

Mr. BOCOCK. Mr. BISSELL, who is not able to be present, requested his vote to be also taken in the negative. If it be allowed, the vote will stand—ayes 82, noes 82.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 96, nays 95; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Chamberlain, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Curtis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Dowdell, Drum, Dunbar, Eastman, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Everhart, Florence, Gamble, Goode, Grow, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Hibbard, Hiestler, Houston, Howe, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Letcher, Lilly, Macdonald, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, Middlesworth, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Orr, Packer, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Walsh, Tappan Wentworth, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—96.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Appleton, Ball, Benson, Bissell, Bliss, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chase, Chastain, Chrisman, Clingman, Cook, Corwin, Cullom, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dean, Dent, Dickinson, Disney, Dunham, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Ellison, Farley, Flagler, Franklin, Giddings, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Hill, Hillyer, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Lindsley, Lindsley, McDougall, Matteson, John G. Miller, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Shannon, Simmons, Sollers, Hester L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Tweed, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wheeler, and Yates—95.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Seymour in the chair.)

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported back, as correctly engrossed, the following bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

"An act to constitute Quincy, in the State of Illinois, a port of entry;"

"An act to provide a place for holding the courts of the United States in the southern district of New York, and for other purposes;" and

"An act granting the franking privilege to the Superintendent of the Coast Survey and the assistant in charge of the office of said Coast Survey."

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Previous to the Speaker vacating the chair, a message was received from the President of the United States, by the hands of SYDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose, the pending question was on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY,] on which tellers were ordered.

The Clerk read the amendment: "For continuing and completing the custom-house at Cincinnati, Ohio, $40,000."

Mr. HIBBARD. I move to amend the appropriation by reducing the sum to one dollar. The gentleman from Ohio, in his remarks yesterday, called upon the members of the Committee on Ways and Means—

Mr. DISNEY, (interrupting.) I would inquire of the Chair what the condition of the question was when the committee last rose?

Mr. HIBBARD. There was a division called upon the question, but it was not taken, and the question is now pending and open to amendment. I remember it distinctly.

The CHAIRMAN. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY,] the Chair finds that tellers have been ordered upon the amendment; but a motion to amend the amendment will be in order. When the question is taken upon the amendment it will be taken by tellers.

Mr. HIBBARD, (resuming.) My amendment is to reduce the appropriation to one dollar. In reply to the call of my honorable friend from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY,] upon the Committee of Ways and Means, as to the reasons which influenced them in their decision, I can only respond by stating the reasons which influenced my own actions.

I may premise by saying, that the whole amount (in order to present the whole question) of duties collected in Cincinnati for the year ending June 30, 1853, was $251,649 90. It will be seen that this is a larger sum than the average sums collected at the different custom-houses. It will be seen, also, from the estimates, that there are no vessels landing there from foreign ports. None, I believe. The amount of work, therefore, to be done there, is very small. All vessels which trade at Cincinnati are entered at New Orleans. In the ordinary course of business they would be all entered there. The number of employees at that point is only two, for there is nothing to be done but to receive the money. There is a surveyor and a clerk. That is all. The pay of both persons is $3,600. We have already appropriated at this place $213,745. Of that sum there has already been expended $74,274 14, and consequently there are appropriations now on hand, and available, to complete this custom-house of $138,470 86. Not content with that, the gentleman asks—and I believe the Department also—$40,000 more. I am constrained, sir, with all respect to the Department, and with every feeling of regard to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY,] as he knows, to say that such an appropriation is unwarrantable. I have found fault before with the estimates of the Departments of former Administrations. I have found fault with estimates of this kind made by Whig Administrations. I wish to be just before I am generous, and I cannot consent to an appropriation of this nature, under a recommendation from a Democratic Administration. The amount of money heretofore appropriated, and heretofore used, is altogether too large, because it will be seen at once that the business there is comparatively small—almost nothing. A single counting-room is sufficient for the collection of this money. While I do not speak of honorable members here, nor censure their course—while I dare say that they have done nothing but what they deemed to be their duty—yet the effect of all this is to bestow a gratuity, to appropriate large sums of money as a gratuity, for the benefit of local interests. We build up large and splendid buildings, at great expense, for the adornment and benefit of these cities. It is generosity, but it is not justice. I hold that it is not proper, and that we have not the right to make these benefactions from the public Treasury. I have none but friendly feelings towards the West, which contributes so much to the greatness, the commerce, and the patriotism of the country. I am opposed to all these appropriations at the North as well as at the West. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] has given the House

another illustration of the mode of reasoning adopted by the Committee on Ways and Means. The appropriation asked for in this case is for a single and solitary purpose, to wit, that of making fire-proof certain buildings in the city of Cincinnati. This is the only question before this committee; and I repeat what I said on yesterday, so far as the construction of that building is concerned, so far as the action of Congress is concerned, an appropriation for that purpose has already been made, the plan of the building has been agreed upon, the building has already been commenced, and contracts have been entered into for the construction and completion of the building. Why then this talk about the amount of business to be done there? However pertinent the question might be as an original one, whether the building should be of this or that description, or whether it should or should not be constructed of certain dimensions, considerations of the kind suggested by the gentleman from New Hampshire have no relevancy to the pending question. But the Committee on Ways and Means—to whom was referred the solitary question, whether it is necessary, out of a just regard for the public interest, that the building to be erected at Cincinnati should be made fire-proof—go into the question, what the amount of business is to be done there. The gentleman from New Hampshire represents that the appropriation asked for is a mere matter of gratuity and donation; but it presents itself to the House in no such aspect.

The Secretary of the Treasury, after an appropriation has been made by Congress for building a custom-house at Cincinnati, with a full knowledge of the importance of protecting the property to be placed within it, with a full knowledge of the subject in all its various aspects, decides that the appropriation now asked for is demanded by the public interests, and not by those of a particular locality. Yet, notwithstanding all this, the Committee on Ways and Means sit down and look at this matter as a question of donation and gratuity to a particular locality. What interest is it to the people of Cincinnati whether the building in that particular locality be rendered fire-proof or not?

The building, I repeat, is to be erected in a particular form, in a particular manner, and according to particular directions; and whether this appropriation be allowed or not, the building will be completed in that way. The only question for this committee to determine is, whether they will render this building fire-proof. The judgment of the Secretary is—and he tells you that he has come to that conclusion—that the public interests demand that this appropriation should be made; and that is the only question for us now to determine. Against the necessity for such an appropriation we have not heard a solitary word from any member of that committee. It is true that the gentleman tells us that the committee have come to the conclusion that the appropriation is unnecessary. Unnecessary in what regard? Why is it unnecessary? Have they undertaken to show that there is no necessity for rendering that and similar buildings fire-proof? Not a word; but they have gone into extraneous matters, to show that the great amount of money which has been asked for and expended from time to time in different sums was more than sufficient in order to erect a building sufficient to carry on the business. Why, as I said before, arguments of this sort might have been perhaps appropriately addressed to the question, whether you will have a building there or not, if that question were up for decision. But you have decided that; and there is but a single question before you, that which I have presented, viz: Will you or will you not make the building fire-proof?

Mr. HIBBARD (there being no objection) withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

The question then recurred upon the amendment offered by Mr. DISNEY, upon which tellers had been ordered, and Messrs. HENDRICKS and VAIL were appointed.

The question being taken, they reported—ayes 76, noes 62.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRESTON. I offer the following amendment:

For completing the custom-house at Louisville, Kentucky, $40,000.

Mr. Chairman, it will be perceived by the committee that the Secretary of the Treasury requests an appropriation of $40,000 to complete the custom-house at Louisville, Kentucky. The Committee on Ways and Means have declined to put it in the bill, and I therefore move to supply the deficiency by granting what the Secretary requests. I have, however, to say, that I did imagine last year, when I asked for the sum which was granted at that time, that it would cover the whole expense; I believed it adequate at that time, and I feel that in asking now from the House a further sum I trespass somewhat upon its indulgence, for I thought that the amount voted last year was sufficient; but the Secretary, in order to render the structure more perfect and safe, has let contracts outside of the bids that were then in, and unless the building is to be left incomplete this sum ought to be given. I stated last year that the sum then voted would be sufficient; the estimates show that more is required, and it is in conformity with them that I move the amendment.

I am aware that this system of building custom-houses is liable to many objections, and I believe that too much money may have been spent in some cases; but the same objections might be urged against every undertaking of the Government.

Mr. HIBBARD. I wish to ask the gentleman one question. How many persons are—

Mr. PRESTON. I have but five minutes, and cannot yield to the gentleman. I desire to present this question fairly. I do not wish to mislead the House by anything I may say. I state that it is with some degree of regret that I am compelled again to ask an appropriation for this purpose; but I do it, believing that it is necessary to carry out contracts that have been entered into, or to leave the building unsafe or unfinished.

If the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means desires to curtail expenditures, let him propose a law, that the Secretary shall not enter into any contract contemplating a larger expenditure than an appropriation contemplates; but there never can be an exact correspondence between estimates and expenditures, and if contracts are modified, or circumstances increase the cost of construction, additional sums must be given, or the works be left unfinished.

I have inserted "for the completion of the custom-house at Louisville" to limit the expenditure to the amount asked for the building.

Mr. HOUSTON. This custom-house has been before Congress for appropriations for several years. I hold in my hand a letter from Secretary Corwin, addressed to this House in February, 1852, in which he said that all he wanted to build fire-proof custom-houses at Cincinnati and Louisville was $75,000. Here it is on record. Here is the letter of the Secretary, and his estimates for these buildings. We gave the $75,000; and we have given altogether $180,000 for the custom-house at Louisville. At the last session of Congress the gentleman spoke of the bids that had been received; and he proposed to give an amount that would cover the precise bid that had been offered to complete the custom-house at Louisville. He said, in two places, in his remarks, that it would require $162,000 to complete the custom-house at Louisville. He declared it was true that the Secretary of the Treasury wanted only $25,000 to continue the work; but that he would be candid with the House and say, on correct data, that the amount asked would not avail. He proposed to ask for all that was necessary to complete the building, and he asked for $80,000, or upwards. After the representatives of that district came here three or four times, for additional appropriations, and repeated on several occasions that $160,000 would be all that would be needed, and when they have obtained $170,000 or $180,000, the gentleman comes here now and asks for the appropriation of $40,000 more. Why is this? They only collect about $45,000 or $47,000 revenue, all told, at Louisville. No vessel goes there from a foreign port. It is not a port of entry. You have a surveyor there merely to collect the customs. Though only collecting $45,000 or $47,000 of custom there, and while the labor is nearly all done at New Orleans, they want $200,000, and upwards, to build a custom-house. We had better abolish the custom-house there altogether, and let the gentleman have the amount of revenue collected there. It would be cheaper for the Government of the United States to do so than to make these continued appropriations from the public treasury.

The gentleman says that he uses the word "complete." If he will refer to the laws that have already been passed, he will ascertain that the word "complete" has been used on more than one occasion. "To complete the custom-house" means nothing. He told us, in his remarks before, that it would take $162,000, or thereabouts, to complete it. He asked for $80,000, for the purpose of not misleading the judgment of the House. That was candid in him, and I was glad that he made the statement. He declared that he did not mean to mislead the House—that he desired that it should know exactly what amount was necessary to be appropriated to complete the building.

Now, sir, I cannot understand why, if that appropriation was made upon an express bid of the contractor, $40,000 more is required. If Mr. Corwin could build fire-proof buildings in Cincinnati and Louisville for $47,000, I do not see how it is that Secretary Guthrie cannot do the same thing. The gentleman made a mistake. Secretary Guthrie only proposes to carry out the contract which was conditionally made by Secretary Corwin before he went out of power. The gentleman need not attempt to shift that responsibility. If the gentleman will read the correspondence which took place between Secretary Guthrie and myself, he will find that in the fall or winter of 1852 this contract was made; and I take it for granted that Secretary Guthrie had nothing to do with Government contracts at that time. This very demand grows out of the recommendation of Secretary Corwin.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is it in order to submit an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion is exhausted on the amendment under consideration. An amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the amendment be so amended as to make the appropriation $30,000. I do not suppose that anything I can say will change the course to be pursued by this committee, or by Congress. I have stood here for four years, firmly resisting this course of legislation, and I have uniformly failed.

But yet, sir, I intend again to express my views upon it. I think it is high time for us to stop and consider the tendency and end of it. If we intend to maintain our own self-respect—if we intend to maintain our individual dignity as Representatives—if we intend to maintain our constitutional dignity as a legislative body, it is time that we put an end to this course of legislation. Now, sir, there is a law on the statute-books which requires that before any of these public works are entered upon, plans and estimates shall be made and submitted. When the various appropriations for these custom-houses were made, they were made upon express stipulations that such plans had been or should be adopted as should bring the whole expense of the respective works within the sums appropriated. And yet, sir, as has been very correctly stated by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] they have come here year after year asking for additional appropriations, stipulating at each time that the amount they then asked was all that would be necessary to complete the several works.

In this connection I will also refer to another matter contained in this bill, (and I would especially call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to it,) as an evidence that our legislation here is tending to become a mere registration of the decrees of the Executive Departments, and nothing else—that the Executive, in the expenditures of the public money, is taking the lead and control, and not this House, as the Constitution contemplates. We undertake to say what shall be expended, and for what it shall be expended. The Departments take the appropriation and go on with the expenditure of it, paying no sort of attention to the amount or limitation which our legislation has fixed. They expend the money as they please, without paying any attention whatever to the plans, stipulations, or limitations upon which the appropriation was made, consulting their own tastes and judgments only, and then they come back to Congress and ask, as a matter of necessity, that we shall give them more money to carry out, not our plans, not our intentions, but their own.

I refer to an appropriation of $72,666 asked for in this bill for the Navy Department—last year estimates covering this very item were sent in from that Department. After most elaborate investigation by the Committee on Ways and Means, the appropriation they asked was cut down by that committee just this precise amount. The House, after, if I am not mistaken, the fullest discussion, sustained the action of that committee; and yet I find, by the estimates sent in for this year, they have asked as a deficiency, for precisely the same purpose, exactly the same sum; and, what is more singular, the Committee on Ways and Means, which, for a similar reason, had refused to report these appropriations for custom-houses and other purposes, have reported that item in this bill. In other words, we undertook to say, by our legislation, how much money should be expended by a Department in a particular branch of the public service for a particular purpose; and that Department gives no heed to our legislation, but goes on without the slightest regard to it, and then unblushingly asks that we shall, as a matter of necessity, make additional appropriations to pay what they have thus done, not only without our authority, but in spite of our wishes and intentions.

The dignity and self-respect of this House, and the respect of the country for us, depends upon our assuming our constitutional rights, and exercising our constitutional control over the expenditures and action of this Government. Our constitutional duty requires it. If we do not do it, we might as well at once abolish Congress, and give the right to the Departments to go on and take out of the Treasury whatever money they may consider necessary to carry out their plans and purposes. If we do not do it, Congress will soon sink, as it is fast doing, into a mere court of registration, to register the decrees and carry out the behests of the Executive Departments; for, sir, it amounts to this, and nothing less. The Departments send in plans; we legislate, and, by our legislation, alter those plans; we say to them, "for this purpose you can spend so much money, and no more, in such a way, and no other." They pay not the least attention to it, but go on and spend the money just precisely as they may have laid out their plans in the first instance, and then ask us to ratify what they have done. This has been practiced year after year, and I think it is time an end was put to it. I, for one, never have, and never will, sanction it.

Take this very custom-house at Louisville, as meritorious as any in the West, and more so than many in the East, yet I have steadily and uniformly opposed most of them as useless and extravagant expenditures. In the first instance, a large appropriation of money was made, which was said to be amply sufficient for the work; and so it was. The law requires that a plan should first be adopted and estimates made, and that it should be built according to that plan and estimates. They assumed to act upon them. Yet, next year they asked for an additional appropriation; and again and again—and here they are again asking still more.

Mr. PRESTON. I desire to add a word in reply to the remarks of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, [Mr. Houston.] I stated here last year that the total sum required for the Louisville custom-house was $162,745. This was the sum asked of the House, and they voted it. Now, the chairman of the committee says that these contracts were made in Mr. Corwin's time. The present Secretary of the Treasury, (Mr. Guthrie,) in the recommendation which I hold in my hands, says:

"The Department, being anxious to bring the whole expense of this within the amount appropriated, directed some alterations and curtailments in the plans, and readjusted for further bids; but owing to the great advance in the price of labor and materials, and other causes, the bids were not within the appropriation, and contracts were only made for the foundations and carpentry work."

"The other contracts are awaiting the action of Congress in the matter, and the building cannot be erected in a satisfactory and proper manner without the additional sum of $40,000 estimated for; but would have to be cut down in such a manner as would very much injure its appearance, utility, and safety."

Aggregate cost of original design by bids..... $179,015
Contingencies, estimated at nearly ten per cent. 16,877

Appropriation available..... $195,892
155,892

Amount asked for..... $40,000

Mr. HOUSTON. Read from page four of that paper.

Mr. PRESTON. On page four he says:

"Louisville, Kentucky, Custom-House, &c.—The plans and specifications for this building were prepared to meet the purposes contemplated by the act authorizing its erection—to make it fire-proof, and of a suitable stone exterior."

Bids were solicited by advertisement of December 4, 1852, for sixty days, the lowest of which were reported to the Department, by the local architect, as amounting in the aggregate to $179,015, and the appropriation of March 3, 1853, was intended merely to cover that amount, and was 'for proceeding with the construction of the custom house at Louisville,' leaving the incidental expenses of its construction for a further appropriation."

Mr. Corwin never signed the contracts, but they have been let under this Administration, and if the gentleman asks the reason, I might state that it is possible Democratic contractors may require a few more thousand dollars than Whigs would; but the Secretary gives us the true reason, I presume, which is to be found in the advance of the price of labor and materials, and the durability of the building. The old bids were not received, but the contracts were reopened and relet by the present Secretary of the Treasury.

I have kept faith with the House, both in the demand made last year, and in the request made now. I asked for the appropriation then, and stated the reasons, and if the price of labor and materials has risen since this Administration came into power, or if the permanence and safety of the building require it, those reasons are sufficient. It is this Administration which advises the $40,000 to be expended in addition; and I believe they have good grounds for doing so.

Mr. LETCHER. What is the question pending?

The CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment to an amendment, proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DENHAM,] to reduce the appropriation to $30,000.

Mr. DUNHAM. I do not insist upon the question being taken, and will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Let the question be put.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LETCHER. I propose to amend the amendment by moving to strike out all of the sum except fifty cents. If I should be here for ten years to come I have no expectation that I shall ever hear the last of this Louisville custom-house. When I came here at the first session of the last Congress, the gentleman from Louisville [Mr. Marshall] came into the House with an amendment, asking for $16,000 to purchase a site upon which this custom-house was to be located. He told us that $75,000 had already been appropriated for the building, and all that he wanted was $16,000 to pay for the site. The gentleman came here at the same time with plans and specifications—everything ready to be exhibited—to show that $75,000 would be sufficient to build this custom-house, if we only pay for the lot. At the last session of Congress, my friend from the same district, [Mr. PRESTON,] who succeeded Colonel Marshall in this House, came forward then and told us that it was utterly impossible to complete this custom-house unless we would give them $87,745 more. On the 18th day of February, 1853, he used this language here:

"I have thought it best to state at once, on accurate data, the total cost, and to embrace in my amendment a sum sufficient to insure the necessary progress and certain completion of this structure, and I think that $87,745 is amply sufficient for that purpose."

The gentleman brought bids and plans here, and we were told that the fact had been demonstrated clearly, definitely, and conclusively, that the sum of $87,745 would accomplish the result. That sum of money was voted for the completion of this custom-house; but here they come back again at this session of Congress, and tell us that the sum of $40,000 is still needed to finish the building. I really do not understand how this can be. We have had presented here, session after session, bids and plans showing what was necessary to build this structure, and after all, when this House has acted upon them in good faith, and when we have voted every dollar which they asked for, they come forward a third time, and tell us that the representations they have made to us are not so in point of fact, and that this custom-house cannot be built for the sum of money which they said was sufficient for that purpose. Can it be completed for $40,000? Is there the slightest guarantee offered to this House, judging of the future by the past, that they will not come forward, and at the next session ask us for forty or fifty thousand dollars more? Does not every man know the fact, that in the construction of these custom-houses, one of the chief objects in locating and building them, is to adorn and beautify the cities of the country with public buildings at the expense of the Government? To accomplish this purpose, demand after demand is made upon this House; appropriation after appropriation is asked, not for the accommodation of the public, but for the purpose of adorning and beautifying the cities of Louisville, Cincinnati, and other cities where these buildings are located.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EWING. I have listened with some attention to the objections which have been urged against this appropriation, but it seems to me that they do not apply to the case under consideration. They are objections to the whole history of the legislation of the country in reference to such subjects, and which might very well be made to a proposition for universal reform; if such a proposition were before us; but do they go to show that the sum asked for in this solitary case, for the completion of the custom-house in Louisville, should not be granted? I do not learn that a single argument has been offered by any of the various gentlemen who have spoken to-day to show that the sum is not needed.

We know the fact exists, that in the history of the legislation of this Government, an expenditure of untold millions has been made upon the Atlantic sea-board, and in the support of the Army and Navy of the country. Now, if this expenditure can be reduced—if a general reform can be effected—let us have it. But if the amount already expended be insufficient for the completion of this building—and that is the only controversy at issue—why, make this appropriation; but if the amount already appropriated be sufficient to complete this work commenced by the Government, then grant no more; but what sort of policy would it be to undertake to expend a hundred and sixty-odd thousand dollars upon a custom-house, and then leave it unfinished, as a monument of the disapprobation of this House in regard to the previous course of the Federal Government, or as to the course of the Executive Department of the Federal Government in the management of appropriations made by Congress?

Sir, what is the objection? Has a solitary gentleman upon this floor presented a single argument to prove that the money is not necessary to finish this custom-house? They tell you they have been promised heretofore that the amount already appropriated would be sufficient. Well, sir, suppose the Representative from Louisville did make a mistake in his calculation—suppose a former Secretary made a mistake in his calculations, and the sum heretofore appropriated is still not enough for the completion of the work—is it best to leave it a monument of the prodigality of the Federal Government, and make no further appropriations?—for, as I have said, no one has attempted to show that further appropriations are not necessary to its completion.

Sir, we cannot undertake to effect that reform upon this solitary appropriation. For one, I as earnestly desire to see it effected upon all the appropriations of the Federal Government as any member of this House; but can you accomplish it by denying this petty appropriation for the completion of a custom-house at Louisville? If it be not opposed upon that principle, upon what principle can it be opposed? Has too much been given to the city of Louisville by the Federal Government?—too much for the State of Kentucky? If we regard only the relative appropriations made to the different States of the Union, I tell gentlemen that we, in Kentucky, have seldom asked for appropriations upon this floor; and while I would not ask for this appropriation simply from the fact that we have not heretofore had our share, still, if the principle upon which the money necessary for the Louisville custom-house rests be that we have had too much in Kentucky, I deny that we have had more than our fair share of appropriations.

I cannot see the appropriateness of the arguments of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, who have addressed the committee upon this subject, nor of other gentlemen who have followed upon the same side of the question. I have listened, and listened in vain, for some objection which could be legitimately urged against the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.] Whatever may have been the errors in the estimates of the different Secretaries upon this subject—whatever may have been the mistakes of the former or the present member from Louisville in reference to the amount necessary for the completion of this custom-house—and whatever may have been the prodigality of the Government in former appropriations, it can have no proper bearing upon the question of granting this appropriation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

No further debate being in order upon the amendment to the amendment,

Mr. LETCHER asked unanimous consent to withdraw it.

The question was put, and the amendment to Mr. WALSH. I object.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to amend the amendment so as to increase the amount of the appropriation to $41,000, in order that I may say a few words.

It appears to me that the opposition to these appropriations, which are said to be necessary by the Secretary of the Treasury to complete the various custom-houses in question, is based upon very erroneous grounds. If I understood the honorable gentleman who is chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means yesterday, he said that Cincinnati asked for an appropriation of $40,000. Sir, I deny it. I say the United States Government asks for the appropriation, and the Government of the United States, through the Secretary of the Treasury, now says that $40,000 is necessary for the completion of the custom-house in progress of erection at Louisville. It is not, in my humble judgment, Louisville and Cincinnati that ask these appropriations, but the Government of the United States, to enable them to collect the duties upon imported goods at the great cities in the western country, which gentlemen seem to overlook, in the vast amount of appropriations necessary to be made now to carry on the Government of the United States.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] endeavored to show the House yesterday that there was no necessity for an appropriation for Cincinnati, by instituting a comparison between the custom-house at that city and the one at Norfolk; and there was one fact elicited in the discussion to which I wish now to allude. It is said that at Norfolk we have a custom-house built at an expense of $110,000, with eighteen or twenty employees, while at Cincinnati $212,000 have been expended on a custom-house where there are but two employees. Now, what is the necessity for employing twenty persons at Norfolk, and but two at Cincinnati and Louisville? If there is no such necessity, why there is a fine field of reform for gentlemen to enter on. Cut down the number of employees at Norfolk, where only $30,000 is collected, and give an equal number to Cincinnati, where they collect $250,000 a year. Place there, and at Louisville, at St. Louis, and in other portions of the great western country that will soon control the destinies of this nation, suitable custom-houses, court-houses, and post offices, with a suitable number of employees.

Sir, this is a petty business in my view of it. If we are to commence reform, strike at something larger than the small sum required for the completion of the custom-houses at Cincinnati and Louisville. Do not begin by striking off $40,000, which the Secretary of the Treasury says is rendered necessary by the increase in the prices of labor, of real estate, and of provisions. Why, while we are talking about these custom-houses, the prices of real estate, as you are well aware, have advanced to double, treble, quadruple what they were four years ago; they have advanced all around us, in Washington, to four times what they were four years ago. These buildings belong to the United States, and not particularly to Louisville, Cincinnati, and St. Louis; and I trust there will be no further opposition on the part of the Committee on Ways and Means to appropriations which seem to be imperiously called for, if we are to believe the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sir, I dislike very much this indirect censure of a former Secretary of the Treasury, because he put in what are called estimates of what might be necessary to build these custom-houses. What are estimates? They are mere guesses, after all. Can you keep up with the progress of these things in this country, and say what provisions, and real estate, and so forth, will be held at three or four years hence? You cannot do it. Experience shows that you cannot; and therefore no Secretary is justly censurable for a failure to make his estimates cover all that may be required in cases like this. I think that as the present Secretary of the Treasury asks for it, $40,000 ought to be granted—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOUSTON. This may be a very "petty business" in the estimation of the gentleman from Ohio who has just taken his seat; but I think that if the gentleman attempts to meddle in a "petty business," he might just as well examine into it before he enters upon the discussion.

Mr. TAYLOR. I take it for granted that I understand it quite as well as the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no doubt the gentleman thinks he understands it much better than I do. I may be, unfortunately, in his position.

Now, the gentleman says, why not cut down the number of employees at Norfolk to two, as at Cincinnati? Does any gentleman who has looked into the subject not know an answer to that question at once? Norfolk is a port of entry, while Cincinnati is a port of delivery. At Norfolk you have necessarily a collector, surveyors, day and night inspectors, and watchmen. Such officers are necessary to all ports of entry. A port of delivery is an entirely different thing. All the watching, all the inspecting, all the labor of the collections made at Louisville and Cincinnati is performed at New Orleans, or at some of the ports on the Atlantic coast. You then see the reason why the number of employees at Norfolk should not be decreased. That number is absolutely necessary. It is a port of entry, and all inspections, examinations, and appraisements, and things of that kind, have to be conducted there. You cannot get along without them.

My friend from Louisville [Mr. PRESTON] puts the application upon a ground that I desire to notice for a moment. He presumes—and I desire Democrats to listen—that this $40,000 is wanted for Democratic contractors, superintendents, or what not.

Mr. PRESTON. I stated the Secretary had said that the price of labor had risen, and that—

Mr. HOUSTON. I heard what the gentleman stated. I ask the Democratic portion of this committee if the gentleman who lives in that district, and represents it in this House, puts the appropriation, which I believe to be extravagant and useless, upon the ground that it is intended to be given to Democratic contractors for jobs, because they are Democrats—that it is intended to put fees in the pockets of Democratic superintendents, as he has more than intimated in the presence of the committee, whether they will vote the appropriation? When the appropriation is charged in our teeth to be designed by this Democratic Administration for its Democratic appointees, will the Democrats of this committee vote for it?

The gentleman from Ohio says, furthermore, that Cincinnati did not ask for this appropriation. That, certainly, is an important discovery. I do not know that Cincinnati did ask for it; but that is the reference usually made to such things. The appropriation was asked for this place; and my friend from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] says that he has heard no reason why this curtailment should be made. Well, I will give a reason: You have got enough of money to finish the house now. He argued as though the house, if this appropriation were not granted, would have to remain in an unfinished condition. That is not so; for the documents before us show that the building can be finished; but the Secretary says that it would be considerably injured in its appearance and safety, if it be finished without the present appropriation. The Secretary of the Treasury has made all the contracts on the condition that if Congress do not grant any more money at this session, the custom-house shall be finished for what has already been given.

Mr. EWING. What does the gentleman mean by finish?

Mr. HOUSTON. That the building shall be completed upon the plans and estimates which have been before Congress, and which my honorable friend from the Louisville district [Mr. PRESTON] exhibited here at the last session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLSON moved, pro forma, to reduce the sum proposed to be appropriated.

Mr. M. said: Certainly, sir, I had no intention whatever to engage in this discussion. I did not wish to do so, and, indeed, declined an invitation tendered to me to take part in the present debate. The reference, however, made on both sides of the House to the district I represent, make it, perhaps, somewhat obligatory on me to say a word or two.

I really do not know why the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] should deem it necessary to refer to the number of persons employed in the Norfolk custom-house. There is no question before the committee, and none likely to come before it, respecting that custom-house. I say to the gentleman, that the fact that the present number of persons employed there has been retained for many years past, and through many Administrations, would seem to show that their services were required by the Government. But I now say also to the gentleman from Ohio, that if there are more employed there than a proper regard for the public interest requires, I should be, perhaps, the last man on this floor to demand that they shall be continued in office.

I would not, sir, attempt to justify the employment of an unnecessary number of agents, because that employment might be of my constituents, and in my district. But the number employed at the ports of Norfolk and Portsmouth has been overstated. The whole number, including the collector and his deputy, clerks, surveyor, inspectors, weighers, watchmen, and three surveyors at Hampton, Suffolk, and Smithfield, is only fifteen. I state to the gentleman from Ohio, that there is an obvious necessity for the employment of these agents. He must remember that Norfolk—though the amount of duties actually collected there is not very large, and is, perhaps, not commensurate with its importance—is connected with the customs in very many particulars. We have a very large coasting trade; we have a tonnage greater than that of any port between Norfolk and New Orleans, except Mobile, Charleston, and Savannah—and it is nearly equal to Savannah. Norfolk, too, is the headquarters of the light-house establishment of that district; it is, also, the headquarters of the revenue marine for the Chesapeake Bay and the waters of Virginia. Unfortunately there are occasional shipwrecks on the coast in the neighborhood, and within the district of Norfolk, making it necessary that a number of inspectors and other officers should be appointed, for the purpose of visiting the scene of shipwreck, and of protecting the interests of the revenue.

This much I deemed it necessary to say, because the gentleman seemed to suppose there was an unnecessary number of agents employed at Norfolk. It is true I have been opposed to these lavish appropriations for building custom-houses, involving in some cases a cost of millions of dollars, as I am opposed to other extravagant expenditures; yet there is one consolation that I feel when I contemplate the prodigal legislation in which some gentlemen would plunge us, and that is, that these wasteful appropriations of the public money will necessarily require a considerable reduction in the duties on imports for the purpose of meeting these large expenditures. Yes, sir, unless very considerable reductions are made in the duties on imports, so that we may collect revenue from articles now excluded by protective duties, our revenue will hardly be sufficient to meet the enormous expenditure we are incurring—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CAMPBELL obtained the floor.

Mr. PRESTON. There is one statement which I desire to make. It is, that for all the custom-houses recommended here by the Secretary of the Treasury—including that of St. Louis, Mobile, Cincinnati, Louisville, and Wilmington—the whole of the appropriations amount to somewhat less than three hundred thousand dollars—an appropriation which would not be sufficient to build one good frigate. And yet we hear the cry of enormous expenditures; the enormous demands for these custom-houses; while the whole are not equal to the cost of building one good frigate of the Navy of the United States.

A VOICE. I want to put a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I cannot yield the floor further. I have only about two and a half minutes, and that I need for my own use. It is all the time I want. I have not participated in the discussion when my own State was interested in these custom-house appropriations, for the reason that I felt that the commercial interests of Cincinnati were safe in the hands of the gentleman who had charge of them, [Mr. DISNEY;] but I desire now to say a word in behalf of the interests of Kentucky. I feel disposed to stand by and protect the interests of that gallant State.

I have looked into this matter, and I am satisfied that there is something in the old saying that there is such a thing as being "penny wise and pound foolish." With all due deference to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, I am a little inclined to think that he is one of that sort.

Mr. Chairman, the Democratic party represented on this floor by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HUSTON,] came in under a pledge that there should be a system of public economy pursued. A day or two ago an eloquent gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] complimented very highly the economical efforts of the Democratic party now in power. He said that if the people could but see their labors to enforce the principles of economy, they would rejoice over it with exceeding great joy, &c.

Well, sir, I find that in the exercise of this wholesome economy, your Secretary of the Treasury has recommended this additional appropriation as necessary to complete the custom-house, and protect the public interest. This comes from our political opponents. It comes from an Administration to which I am opposed—an Administration pledged to economy—and I feel bound, as one of the Representatives of the American people, sent here as a guardian of the Treasury, to sustain this estimate of Secretary Guthrie, because he recommends them on the principle of economy. Besides, when you build a custom-house at Louisville, it is to be a national work. Should it ever fall to my lot to pass through that beautiful city with a friend, I should like to point out that structure to him as one of our national monuments. It ought to be no mean edifice. They, doubtless, could build there an office which would contain a clerk and a surveyor, with little expense; but the nation has undertaken to build a custom-house—a national work—and your Democratic Administration, which stands pledged to economy, has said that the amount which my friend from Louisville [Mr. PRESTON] has asked, is necessary in order to complete that work. It is for this reason that I shall vote for it, and I hope this committee and the House will pass it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON.]

No objection being made, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. HIBBARD. I propose to reduce the amount to one dollar. The amount of duties collected at this point is $48,000. There is not one foreign vessel which enters at that port; and it appears, by the report of the Secretary, that there is but one person employed in the collection of this duty.

Now, sir, to build a custom-house to accommodate one man in doing the tremendous duties which devolve upon him, we have appropriated already $178,745, at different times, upon the urgent motion of the gentleman from that locality, [Mr. PRESTON.]

Now, it has been argued by one gentleman from Kentucky, that if we do not appropriate this additional sum, the custom-house at Louisville will remain unfinished. There is only about $16,000 of this money already applied, and it leaves a balance available, as reported to this House by the Secretary, of $155,892. They have expended about $16,000, and they have over $150,000 left to build a custom-house in the city of Louisville, where not one foreign vessel enters, and where, I might say, they do not need a custom-house at all. To accommodate one man, they want $40,000 more; $150,000 will not suffice to build a house for him. They said, before this appropriation was made, that they would finish it. They can finish it, and they will finish it, for the sum already appropriated, whether we increase it or not. There will be no such effect produced by refusing the appropriation as the gentleman fears. If there would be, it would have no terrors for me, and I would leave the building unfinished, as a monument of extravagance and folly. Norfolk has been referred to; but I wish to say that I was against the appropriation at Norfolk.

But how stands the fact with reference to Louisville, in comparison with Norfolk? They collect as much money at Norfolk as they do at Louisville. Eighty-nine foreign vessels came into Norfolk during the last year; and they have twenty employees there, instead of one, to furnish with a place in which to transact the people's business; and the whole amount that is proposed to be appropriated is about one half of what the gentleman from Louisville wants for the custom-house at that place. When we get into the House—if this amendment be adopted in committee—I hope gentlemen will come up then, and vote understandingly upon this fact—that with $150,000 to apply, in addition to $16,000 already spent in building a house for man to work in, and for whom a desk in a single room would be sufficient, they now ask for $40,000 more. That is the question I want to see decided.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I desire to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. HIBBARD,] and say a few words in reply to a portion of his remarks. He is grossly mistaken when he supposes that the custom-house at Louisville is designed only to accommodate a single person, and it is treating the subject unfairly so to represent it. The object of the building is not only to accommodate the necessary officers of the customs at that place, but also to provide rooms for one of the largest distributing post offices in the western country. The post office at Louisville distributes the mail matter for a large portion of the western and southern country, and there are employed in it, as clerks and otherwise, not less than sixty individuals; a large portion of the house, therefore, must be occupied by them, and the balance only devoted to custom purposes. The building is not only to be a custom-house, but a distributing post office, and the gentleman misstates the fact, when he charges that but a single individual is to be accommodated.

I am in favor of, and shall vote for, the appropriation asked for by my colleague, [Mr. PRESTON,] because I believe it to be necessary, and because the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Guthrie, whose duty it is to be familiar with the subject, has, in his official capacity, earnestly recommended it. I think I know enough of the prudent and economical character of the Secretary to say, that he would be the last man to recommend an appropriation of this character if it were not reasonable, and demanded by the necessity of the case. I am willing to adopt his recommendation, and vote for the appropriation.

The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] says, that of the appropriations already made, but $16,000 have been expended. That may be true, sir, and still not show that this additional sum is not necessary to complete and make the building safe for the purposes designed. The plan has been adopted, I presume, and the foundations laid, and any alterations now, with a view of accommodating the structure to the appropriation, may be both destructive to the safety and the convenience of the building. Let me tell my friend something of the nature of the system by which these custom-houses all over the Union are constructed. In the Department of the Treasury there is employed an accomplished architect, whose duty it is to draw plans and present estimates for the buildings in whatever locality it may be designed to erect them. These plans and estimates are submitted to the Secretary, and if approved by him, contracts are made in pursuance thereof. In addition to the architect who originates the plans, local superintendents are employed at each building, to superintend their construction, see that the plans are followed, and the contracts made by the Secretary fully complied with. I have been also informed, that in addition to the architect and local superintendents, an officer of the engineer corps is employed, who has a sort of general supervision of the whole, and circulates from place to place, to see that the work progresses properly, and the local superintendents do their duty. Now, sir, if these officers, in the mode of executing the work, or in departing from, or in making additions to, the plans, make necessary increased appropriations, by improper expenditures for these purposes, then they should be held responsible, and not the members of this House, who happen to live in the localities where these buildings are in the course of construction. I think it ungenerous and unkind that my colleague, [Mr. PRESTON,] who happens to represent the city of Louisville, should be reproached because the refusal of the Committee on Ways and Means to respect the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury, has made it necessary for him, in justice to his constituents, to ask for this appropriation, when he had no more to do with the causes which increased the expenditure than I or any other member on the floor. Let the responsibility rest where it properly belongs—upon the employees of the Government, and not upon any member of the House.

I am not surprised, sir, that the estimates in these cases have been transcended. When did you ever know a military engineer placed in charge of a civil work under the Government that the expenses were not greatly increased? You have an illustrious example right under your nose, in the work upon the extension of the Capitol. The civil superintendency of that work has been abolished, and an engineer called from his rightful duty in the construction of the military defenses of the country, to take charge of and manage it. I venture to assert, that alterations in the plan of the building, and the military mode of executing the work and procuring materials, will swell the aggregate of expenditure to twice the amount of the original estimates. It is not in the line of a military engineer to be familiar with the details of a building of such an architectural character; and though I do not design to reflect, in the slightest degree, upon the talents or character of the engineer in charge, I do assert that it is not the place for him; and the work will cost you in the end twice as much as you expected when it was first authorized.

Mr. HIBBARD. I call the gentleman from Kentucky to order. I do not see what that has to do with the subject.

Mr. STANTON. If an allusion to that matter hurts the gentleman, I will take my seat, and save him the trouble of making his point of order.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. BISSELL moved a pro forma amendment, and proceeded to say: Mr. Chairman, there is one fact which will go very far to fix my determination in reference to the vote I shall give upon this question; it is that of the money heretofore appropriated to accomplish this object, more than $150,000 remains unexpended. This being the fact, I confess, notwithstanding the explanation of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] that I cannot see the necessity of enlarging that amount by $40,000 at this time. I have heard no reason from the gentleman from Kentucky, nor from any other quarter, sufficient to satisfy me of the propriety of increasing the amount now on hand, which is $155,000, to $195,000, and I shall therefore vote against the appropriation.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to occupy a minute in opposition to this amendment, in giving this committee some of the reasons which will govern my vote here, and which have governed my action in the Committee on Ways and Means.

I foresee that this amendment—I mean the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON]—will pass in this committee; and I am not prepared to say but, upon the abstract merits of the question, aside from the position in which it presents itself here, it ought to pass the House, but not in this bill. Sir, I am opposed to this amendment, and to all similar amendments in this bill, for the reason that the custom-houses we have had under consideration have been built principally by deficiencies, and not by legitimate appropriations; and this is an attempt to continue the construction of them by appropriations for deficiencies.

The manner in which they are managed is this: We make a small appropriation for the purpose of purchasing a site. Then, whoever is at the head of the Treasury Department, pressed as he is by those about him locally interested, thinks the expenditure may as well be enlarged in reference to the particular work, and enters into some contract, or some arrangement, without an appropriation, and in advance of the action of this House and of Congress.

Now, sir, I have placed my vote in the Committee on Ways and Means, and I mean to place it here, simply upon the ground, that in reference to such expenditures by the Government this House should lead, and the Executive officers follow. If the Committee on Commerce, or any gentleman who has this matter at heart, will tomorrow, or at any reasonable time, introduce a bill which shall place a proper guard or restriction around these custom-houses, and around the officer who has the construction of them in charge, I am ready to vote, and will vote, for it; and when it is adopted, I am ready to vote, and will vote, the amount of money which the Secretary may think necessary, or which he now thinks necessary, to complete these custom-houses. I do not doubt but that these houses ought to be completed; nay, more, there are others that ought to be built; but, sir, they should be built upon some system, not by allowing the Secretary of the Treasury to contract for any amount he chooses, but by having estimates properly submitted in advance, and upon approval by this House. Let Congress make the appropriations in advance of the contract and the labor, and avoid this following after the Secretary, and constructing our public works and edifices on a system of deficiencies, so to speak.

Sir, I am not speaking with reference to the present Secretary particularly, nor am I speaking with reference to any one in the past; but we owe it to those in the future, and we owe it to ourselves, and the country, that we put upon the Secretaries some legal restraint; that we should make them responsible for the contracts they make unauthorized by Congress.

There should be some specific amount provided, beyond which no Secretary could go; that amount should be placed in your regular appropriation bills, and not made up by deficiencies. Some general system; some general plan; some general bill, with appropriate restrictions, should be adopted. This House should assert its rights, and the Executive branch of the Government should be made to follow this House in the administration of law.

For these reasons, and others of like character, as one of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, I have resisted what I believe to be a usurpation upon the rights of this House upon the part of an Executive officer of the Government, in making contracts for the expenditure of money in advance of appropriations by Congress, and thus, year after year, creating these large deficiencies. I know, sir, it has been done by former officers as well as this one; they are equally wrong. I have not given my consent to former appropriations for deficiencies of this character, and I cannot give my consent now.

Mr. McMULLIN. I have been very much gratified by recent developments, and especially from my friend from New Hampshire—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must remind the gentleman that the discussion, under the rule, upon the pending amendments has exhausted itself.

Mr. McMULLIN. It is not my purpose to enter into any discussion. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill of the House (No. 49) "to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1854," and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to, and

At a quarter before four o'clock the House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 2, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. NORRIS presented the memorial of a committee of the Corporation of Georgetown, praying the construction of a bridge across the Potomac, at a point above that town, known as the "Three Sisters," and remonstrating against the erection of any more bridges below their harbor; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PRATT presented the memorial of Mary F. B. Leverly, widow of Henry Leverly, captain of the private armed schooner Nonsuch, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVERETT presented the memorial of Lucy Audubon, praying that Congress would purchase the original drawings of the work of her late husband on the birds of America; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a resolution of the select and common councils of Philadelphia, in favor of granting one hundred and sixty acres of land to each of the soldiers of the last war with Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SEWARD presented a resolution of the Legislature of New York, asking Congress to enact such laws as may be necessary to secure the health of passengers on board of emigrant ships arriving in the ports of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. SHIELDS presented a petition of members of the county court of Henderson county, Illinois, praying that a grant of land may be made to the Warsaw and Rockford Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a petition of citizens of Dixon, and a petition of citizens of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, praying that a grant of land may be made to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lyons, via Iowa City, to Council Bluffs; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. SLIDELL, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Andrew Hodge, jr., be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, it was Ordered, That the petition of Jacob Cooper, son of Apollos Cooper, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Rulief Van Brunt be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing to the Senate that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

"An act to provide a place for the holding of the courts of the United States in the southern district of New York, and for other purposes;"

"An act to constitute Quincy, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery;" and

"An act granting the franking privilege to the Superintendent of the Coast Survey and the assistant in charge of the office of the said Coast Survey."

Which then received the signature of the PRESIDENT pro tem.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEWARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the petition of Selina C. Sumner, praying a gratuity in consideration of the discovery by her husband of a new method of finding a ship's position at sea, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the purchase of the copyright of a work published by Thomas H. Sumner, wherein he describes his new method of ascertaining a ship's position at sea; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Thomas Butler, praying compensation for work done in building the light-house on Execution Rock not required by the contract, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of George P. Welsh and Clark H. Wells, passed midshipmen in the Navy, praying to be allowed additional compensation during the time they performed the duties of a higher grade, reported a bill for their relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the petition of Henry Yates and Archibald McIntyre, representing that they are owners of certain lands sold by the United States, and praying authority to locate an equal quantity of land on any of the unsold and unappropriated lands in the State of Louisiana, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, which was agreed to.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill to establish a land district in the State of Florida, to be called the district of Tampa, reported back the same without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill making a grant of land to the State of California to aid in the construction of railroads from San Francisco to San José, Benicia to Marysville, Sacramento City, via Auburn to Nevada City, and Stockton to Sonora, reported back the same with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill to lay off the town of Council Bluffs, in Iowa, reported it back with an amendment in the form of a substitute, together with a report on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill granting to the State of Wisconsin land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Madison to the Mississippi river, reported back the same with amendments.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of M. Jean Deplaign, a French subject, praying indemnity for certain property seized by the naval force of the United States, after the surrender of Frontera de Tabasco, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; which was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill, giving further time for satisfying claims to bounty land, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the motion to print the petition of John W. Griffiths and William Norris, reported in favor of printing the petition; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the motion of Mr. BRIGHT to print additional copies of the report of the Committee on Finance on the bill to provide for the surrender of certain bonds of the State of Indiana, held by the United States, reported in favor of printing one thousand additional copies of the report; which was concurred in.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill to provide for the public printing, engraving, and binding, reported it without amendment.

SEIZURE OF THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The following resolution, submitted by Mr. CLAYTON on Tuesday last, was considered, and agreed to.

"Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, copies of all correspondence between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain in regard to the Sandwich Islands, including copies of all communications between the Secretary of State and Mr. Fox, the British Minister, during the years 1843 and 1844, in regard to the independence of those islands, and especially of the letters of Mr. Fox to Mr. Upshur of the 25th of June, 1843, and of Mr. Upshur to Mr. Fox of the 5th July, 1843; also a copy of any protest or other communication from the King of the Sandwich Islands to this Government in regard to the seizure of those islands by Lord George Paulet, commander of his Britannic Majesty's ship Carysfort, and of any reply of this Government thereto."

APPEAL IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to consider the expediency of limiting in some way the right of appeal from the district court to the circuit court of the United States on mere questions of fact in admiralty causes.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the order of the Senate, asking them to inquire into the expediency of printing an additional number of the mechanical part of the Patent Office Report, have directed me to report the order back with an amendment. The amendment is simply to set aside two thousand of the number for the Patent Office.

The order referred to the committee was as follows:

Ordered, That seventeen thousand additional copies of that portion of the report of the Commissioner of Patents that relates to arts and manufactures, be printed for the use of the Senate.

The amendment is to add the following:

Two thousand copies of which shall be for the use of the Patent Office.

Mr. PRATT. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether it is proposed to print as many copies of the mechanical portion of this work as of the agricultural? Would it not be well to decrease the number of the former?

Mr. HAMLIN. The agricultural portion of the report has not yet been submitted to the Senate. I will only say that this number of the mechanical report is just the number which we ordered last year. I should myself have recommended, if it had been my proposition, to reduce the number of the mechanical, and increase the number of the agricultural portion of the report; but still this was the number ordered last year, and the committee have unanimously adopted it.

Mr. PRATT. The commission of one error does not make a subsequent error right, and I hope the committee will reconsider the views they have expressed, so as to print more of the agricultural and less of the mechanical portion of the report. It is very certain that unless the mechanical portion of the present report is very much better than that of the last year, it will afford no information whatever. I submit to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Printing whether, if he has examined the work of the last year—I mean the mechanical portion of the report—he can point to a single description, even of a patent which has been granted, which he can comprehend, or from which any one can derive any useful information whatever.

It seems to me that the other portion of the work, the agricultural, should have a greater number printed than the mechanical. I have no objection to printing as many of this as may be necessary, but certainly it is not necessary to print as many as were printed last year. It is so much money thrown away.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is very evident that the number of the mechanical portion of the report should not be equal to the number of the agricultural portion. I think that about that there can be no doubt. I think, however, that fifteen thousand copies of this may be printed for the mechanics of the country. I am not skilled in mechanics, but still I am inclined to think that a practical mechanic would derive very much information from this work. I have agreed to the number reported because it was the number ordered last year.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I agree with the remarks of the Senator from Maryland. I am utterly opposed to printing as large a portion of the mechanical portion of this report as of the agricultural portion. My reasons for this were suggested in the committee. I am very well aware that at the last session of Congress, there was quite an effort made, on the part of some gentlemen, to exchange the agricultural portion of the work for the mechanical. The former circulates more generally than the other in the southern States. We are more of an agricultural people, and the great body of our people prefer the agricultural portion of the report. I am willing, therefore, to recommit the resolution, or agree upon an amendment to increase the number of the agricultural portion. I move, then, to reduce the number to be printed of the mechanical portion to ten thousand copies, and to increase the number of the agricultural portion. The resolution proposes to print the usual number of the mechanical portion. I want to decrease that, and increase the number of the agricultural portion.

Mr. HUNTER. There is no question before us in relation to the agricultural portion of the report. It has not yet been sent to the Senate.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then I move to reduce the number to be printed of the mechanical portion to ten thousand, with the view, at the proper time, of increasing the agricultural portion.

Mr. BADGER. I will suggest to my friend from Alabama, that it will require very little additional expense to print the number reported from the committee; and if he desires to increase the number of the agricultural portion, why not wait until it comes before us? Why strike out the seventeen thousand in this case, and insert a less number? I would also suggest to the Senator, that it is not exactly fair to my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform, [Mr. ADAMS,] for him to submit a motion to reduce the number to be printed. Such a motion should come from that committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMLIN. I would suggest to my friend from Alabama the propriety of changing his amendment so as to make it twelve thousand. That will give the Senate ten thousand, and the Commissioner of Patents two thousand.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to correct an error into which the Senator from Maryland has fallen, and which did not meet my ear when he addressed the Senate. The Senate last year printed seventeen thousand copies of the mechanical portion of the report, and thirty-two thousand of the agricultural—nearly twice as many of the latter as of the former.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama has modified his amendment so as to strike out "seventeen" and insert "twelve."

The amendment was agreed to, and the order, as amended, was adopted.

BOUNTY LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am instructed, by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the House bill giving further time for satisfying claims for bounty lands, and for other purposes, to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage. The time has expired in which the bounty land claims of the war of 1812 can be located. A few days since, I reported from the Committee on Public Lands a bill to the same effect precisely as the House bill. We find now that since that the House of Representatives have passed a similar bill, and I am instructed this morning, by the committee, to move that the House bill be now put upon its passage. As the subject has already been considered twice in the Committee on Public Lands, I move that the Senate proceed to consider the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to direct, that the act to provide for satisfying claims for bounty lands for military services in the late war with Great Britain, and for other purposes, approved July 27, 1842, and also the two acts approved January 27, 1835, shall be revived and continued in force five years, from June 26, 1853.

Mr. JOHNSON. The bill proposes merely to continue the time which has been extended heretofore to heirs and minors to locate the lands. There are a number of them, not very large, still unlocated, and this extends the act for the term of five years, as the claims are outstanding, to allow them to be disposed of. The committee are unanimous in recommending the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

COURTS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

On motion by Mr. EVERETT, the bill to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the district of Massachusetts, which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to empower the Secretary of the Interior to provide necessary and permanent accommodations for the courts and the officers connected with them, by fitting up and leasing the same, for a term of not less than ten years, or by purchase; with the provision, however, that no purchase shall take place except within the limits of an appropriation to be made by Congress.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out the words "not less than ten," so that the clause will read, "by fitting up and leasing the same for a term of years."

The amendment was agreed to. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

MARTIN KOSZTA.

Mr. BRIGHT. I offer the following resolution and ask for its consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, copies of all communications from the American legation at Constantinople respecting the seizure of Martin Koszta by the Austrian authorities at Smyrna.

Mr. CASS. I desire to say a word in relation to the resolution. I am very glad that the Senator from Indiana has offered it, for reasons which I will state. The papers called for will be needed when the question comes before us, as it must and ought to do; but, in the mean time, I find, by observing what has taken place in the House of Representatives, there is a very worthy and excellent officer of the United States abroad, who has not had justice done to him in the questions connected with this matter. I refer to Mr. Brown, our dragoman at Constantinople, whom I have known from early life. I knew him here, and I knew him abroad; and I know that a more faithful, efficient, and patriotic agent is not in the public service. He has so conducted himself, that while he has managed the affairs of his country acceptably to his own Government, he has conciliated the respect of the Turkish authorities by his prudent conduct. He took, as I am informed and believe, a decided part in this matter favorable to human liberty and American rights. Efforts have been made to injure him; and the worthy and respectable member of the House of Representatives—with whom I have conversed—from his district, where his relatives live, feels a great interest in the production of these papers; but from some difficulty cannot get them in the House of Representatives. I am therefore very glad that the resolution has now been offered with a view to produce them here.

Efforts have been made to injure this gentleman, and the Senate may have probably seen the calumnious reports which were circulated some two or three years since, that he had brought to this country an imposter, pretending to be an agent of the Turkish Government; and for some unworthy purpose of his own, had taken him through the country, on that pretense, imposing on the Government and the people.

Now I am able to contradict all this in the most authoritative manner, for I have received from Redshid Pasha, lately the Grand Vizier, now Minister of Foreign Relations, whom I knew as ambassador at Paris, and who is one of the most respectable and intelligent men in the Ottoman empire, tendering to me his thanks for the personal effort I made in this body to aid in procuring an appropriation for defraying the expenses of the Turkish agent, Amin Bey, a common practice with eastern nations, and expressing the gratification which the Sultan felt at the attention shown to his officer in the United States.

And yet the report went through all the papers in this country that Mr. Brown had brought here an imposter, and palmed him off upon the Government and the country. I take this favorable opportunity in the Senate of contradicting that report, and I am very glad that the Senator from Indiana has introduced the resolution.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I desire to add one word to what the Senator from Michigan has said. From facts within my own knowledge, I do believe that great injustice has been done, by the public press, to Mr. Brown, and also to Mr. Marsh, our representative; and I think it is but just that the correspondence with these gentlemen should be communicated. I concur in all that the Senator from Michigan has said in regard to Mr. Brown, and I think, in justice to both the gentlemen, we should have the correspondence.

The resolution was adopted.

VERMONT SENATORSHIP.

On motion by Mr. PETTIT, the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, affirming the right of the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS to retain his seat in the Senate.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. President, I have concluded to comply with the suggestion made yesterday by the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER,] to waive my right to proceed with the discussion until the conclusion of the discussion by others, who intend to participate in it.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall avail myself of this opportunity to give my views upon this subject in a very few words. I drew up the paper which was submitted to the Senate by my colleague on the committee [Mr. BAYARD] and myself, in which we differed from the report of the majority of the committee. My colleague, who argued the case very clearly yesterday, has also presented to the Senate very forcibly all the points of the case. It will be rather my province to direct the attention of the Senate to those points on which, I think, its judgment should, and on which my own judgment certainly will, turn.

At the commencement, in alluding to the sitting member, [Mr. PHELPS,] it is but fair to him to say that, in his opinion, he is representing his Commonwealth to some extent, and certainly is representing the Governor of Vermont in his application for a seat. I shall speak, therefore, of the seat as one for which he is not contending for himself individually, but to which he thinks himself entitled as the representative of his State, under Executive appointment. I contest the right of a State Executive to make such an appointment as the one under consideration, without disregarding the fair—and, I may say, liberal—meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. President, if the sitting member be entitled to his seat, it must be under the authority of precedent. It seems to be conceded, upon all hands, that if this were a question of first impression, and had not been before the Senate heretofore, and if there had been no precedents upon the subject, there could scarcely be but one opinion. I do not always feel bound by the force of precedents. I think, however, they are very much to be respected; and if there was one which could receive my approbation, either by long acquiescence or full consideration by the Senate, when it was before them for action, I should yield to it. A precedent that has been intelligently established, and acquiesced in by all parties, should not be disturbed by a construction which a particular occasion might suggest and influence.
